Contracts were entered into by the surveyor-general under these instructions and sent up to this office for examination and approval, which were returned for certain corrections and further examination by the present surveyor-general, who is charged with supervising their execution. It is expected the work authorized by the special appropriation will be completed during the current fiscal year.

Very respectfully,

WM. A. J. SPARKS, Commissioner.

Hon. WM. B. ALLISON, United States Senate.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, GENERAL LAND OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., September 22, 1886.

SIR: The act approved August 4, 1886, making appropriations for surveys during the current fiscal year, provides as follows:

"For surveying the public lands in the State of Nevada, $30,000." * * *

Minimum rates only of mileage are therein specified, but it is provided that the Commissioner of the General Land Office may allow maximum rates for surveys through lands heavily timbered, mountainous, or covered with dense undergrowth.

In view of the mandatory requirements of the acts making grants to the Union and Central Pacific Railroad Companies, respecting the survey of lands embraced within the limits of said grants, and in further view of the act of July 10, 1886, providing for the taxation of railroad grant lands, I have to advise you of my opinion that such lands should be first surveyed in preference to the survey of other lands.

You are therefore hereby authorized to list and call for bids for the survey of all remaining unsurveyed lands situated on either side of the line of the Central Pacific Railroad within its granted limits in the State of Nevada at rate of mileage not to exceed the maximum allowed by law.

Having listed and advertised said lands as directed, and transmitted a copy of said list and advertisement to this office, you will also prepare and transmit to this office a full list of, and report on, all townships, or parts of townships, remaining unsurveyed in your district, which embrace existing settlements, stating all the data relating to the same which may be on file or of record in your office or otherwise available.

On receipt of said list and report you will be further advised.

Very respectfully,

WM. A. J. SPARKS, Commissioner.

C. C. POWNING, Esq.,
United States Surveyor-General, Reno, Nev.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution submitted by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. VAN WYCK] on the 8th instant, which comes over under objection, will now be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Appropriations be requested to present and have read in the Senate any communication received from the Commissioner of the General Land Office showing the disposition of moneys appropriated heretofore for survey of public lands bearing upon the survey of railroad lands and of lands in the State of Nevada referred to in the debates in the Senate reported in the RECORD of February 2 and 3.

Mr. VAN WYCK. By unanimous consent of the Senate I withdraw the resolution, as the letters are to be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution of the Senator from Nebraska is withdrawn. The morning hour has closed.

THE MACKEREL FISHERY.

Mr. PALMER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 5538. I ask this courtesy because I think it will expedite the business of the Senate. We were in the midst of the discussion of this bill on Tuesday when the Senate adjourned. All the discussion is fresh in the minds of the Senators who were present, and if this is delayed and any other business intervenes, I think they will vote with less intelligence on the bill than if we proceed with it at once.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Michigan moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 5538) relating to the importing and landing of mackerel caught during the spawning season.

The motion was agreed to.

BRANCH HOME FOR DISABLED SOLDIERS.

Mr. SEWELL. I ask the Senator to allow me to call up an important bill.

Mr. PALMER. I will yield for a short time if it will not lead to debate.

Mr. SEWELL. It is Order of Business 2143, House bill 2075.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator move to postpone the other orders?

Mr. SEWELL. I ask unanimous consent to take up the bill (H. R. 2075) to provide for the location and erection of a branch home for disabled volunteer soldiers west of the Rocky Mountains.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? The Chair hears none.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. SEWELL. The Committee on Military Affairs reported a bill, which is now on the Calendar also, granting $250,000 for this purpose, and with some amendments that are necessary to carry out the provisions of the law if the bill passes, providing that this home located west of the Rocky Mountains, being the only one on the Pacific coast, shall also take in regular soldiers, and providing for the appointment by Congress of another member of the governors' board residing on the Pacific coast, who would have immediate charge of the home if it should be passed. I ask to take up Senate bill 2624 with a view of substituting it for the House bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair does not exactly understand what is desired.

Mr. SEWELL. I desire to strike out all the House bill after the enacting clause and substitute Senate bill 2624.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Jersey moves an amendment to the pending bill, which will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to strike out all after the enacting clause of the bill, and to insert:

That the Board of Managers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers are hereby authorized, empowered, and directed to locate, establish, construct, and permanently maintain a branch of said National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, to be by such board located at such place in the States west of the Rocky Mountains as to said board shall appear most desirable and advantageous; and that the sum of $250,000 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the United States Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be paid to the said Board of Managers, and by them expended in carrying out the provisions of this act.

SEC. 2. That all honorably discharged soldiers and sailors who served in the regular and volunteer forces of the United States, and who are disabled by disease, wounds, or otherwise, and who have no adequate means of support, and by reason of such disability are incapable of earning their living, shall be entitled to be admitted to said home for disabled volunteer soldiers, subject to like regulations as they are now admitted to existing branches of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers.

SEC. 3. That as soon thereafter as practicable from the approval of this act, the said Board of Managers shall secure the necessary lands and commence the erection of suitable buildings for the use of said branch.

SEC. 4. That James A. Wimer, of San Francisco, Cal., be, and he is hereby, appointed a manager of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, to serve until the 2d day of April, 1892; and that hereafter the number of managers of the said Home elected by Congress shall be ten instead of nine, as at present, one of whom shall be a resident of a State or Territory west of the Rocky Mountains.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SEWELL. I move that the Senate insist on its amendment and ask for a committee of conference with the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate, and Messrs. SEWELL, HAWLEY, and HAMPTON were appointed.

The bill (S. 2624) to provide for the location and erection of a branch home for disabled volunteer soldiers west of the Rocky Mountains was postponed indefinitely.

THE MACKEREL FISHERY.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. President, my motion, I think, was carried and I yielded temporarily to the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SEWELL].

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill (H. R. 5538) relating to the importing and landing of mackerel caught during the spawning season is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole. The Senator from New York [Mr. MILLER] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. President, it took several hours of discussion the other day to get at the purposes and objects of this bill, but I think the discussion finally brought out very clearly to the Senate the objects and merits of this measure.

The Senators from Maine told the Senate that there were none of the citizens of the United States interested in this measure save the few mackerel fishermen in the States of Massachusetts and Maine, and that therefore the Congress of the United States ought to hasten to pass this measure as a measure of relief to the fishermen who had petitioned for it.

It seems that there are about four hundred vessels engaged in mackerel fishing, giving employment to several thousand men, just how many I do not know, perhaps four, five, or six thousand all told—about six thousand the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] says.

From the arguments produced here in favor of this bill the Senate might be led to suppose that the bill had been brought here for the purpose of protecting mackerel fishing; that there was great danger of the species being entirely destroyed, and thus one of the chief fish food products of the country being entirely obliterated; but neither the testimony taken by the committee nor any testimony of any scientific man in the world has been produced here to show that there is the least danger or, in fact, the least probability of any such result ever being produced by the unlimited and unconditioned fishing going on such as has been pursued for the last ten or fifteen years with purse-seines. In short, the best scientific men in the world have agreed that thus far man has been able to produce no appreciable effect upon the fish which swim in the deep sea. Therefore we have no data upon which to base any proposition whatever that if this fishing shall continue unlimited in the future as it has been in the past any such result whatever will be produced.

This being the fact, why is it that the owners of these four hundred vessels who have a large amount of capital invested in this business come here and ask Congress to limit their action and to take out three months of the twelve and absolutely prevent or prohibit purse-seine fishing? They have a monopoly of the business now; it is so conceded by both the Senators from Maine, who have told us that there is not a single vessel owned in any other State of the United States engaged in this industry save in the States of Massachusetts and Maine, and that no one else has any interest in it whatever. Why come here, then, asking a prohibition on the part of Congress? One would suppose that they would be anxious to continue their business during the whole twelve months of every year, and make it as large as possible; and why not? Because they have found that by the improved methods of fishing which are now in use by these fishermen they have so increased the amount of fish brought into our markets that prices have been greatly reduced, and, therefore, the profits of the capital invested in this business have been somewhat decreased. Therefore they come here to ask Congress to legislate against themselves, or, in short, to protect themselves from their own industry. There are so many of them, doubtless, that it is impossible that they should form an association and agree by common consent to give up fishing for three months in the year. Undoubtedly a large number of them would be glad to do that, but no one fisherman and no one firm engaged in this business will consent to abstain from fishing for three months in the year unless all are compelled to do so.

Now, what is the object of a cessation of fishing for three months? It is all folly to come here and tell the people of the United States that the fishermen who control these vessels and who have their capital invested in the business are philanthropists and that they are asking to be curtailed in their own operations simply for the purpose of preserving the mackerel species as a food product for the people of this country. I say it is all folly to come here with any such assumption as that.

We see frequently associations of different industries in this country, in which the capitalists interested in and the proprietors of great industries get together and agree to curtail the production of a particular industry, for what purpose? For the purpose of increasing the price by decreasing the supply. Have we not seen the Bessemer steel manufacturers of this country get together in their associations and agree to close their works for three months or six months?

What for? For the good of humanity? For humanitarian purposes? Not at all; but simply that they might reduce the production of Bessemer steel-rails, and thereby increase the cost; and our friends on the other side of the Chamber have come here and taunted the protectionists of this body with this very charge that the Bessemer-steel manufacturers of this country had done this thing. It has been done by other manufacturing associations, but they have not come here and asked Congress to shut up all the Bessemer steel-rail factories for three months in the year lest there should be a surplus of Bessemer steel.

The cotton manufacturers, who sometimes close down their works for thirty days or six months, have not come here and asked Congress to pass a law that there shall be no manufacturing of cotton goods for three months or six months in the year in order that the amount produced may be reduced and thereby the price increased. But here comes an industry confined, as the Senators from Maine and Massachusetts show, to their own States, having an absolute monopoly, owning every vessel engaged in it, and having all the capital invested in it, and all the men who are employed upon their ships citizens of their own States, and it asks Congress to say that for three months in the year there shall be no fishing with purse-seines by this industry.

Mr. President, as I said before, these fish swim free in the ocean. They cost us no labor and no pains in their growth. They are there free for all our people to take, and they furnish one of the great supplies of food for all our people. The fisheries of every country have been protected, and nations have gone into great and costly wars in order that they might protect their fisheries because they were a source of great profit to the people; but never before in the history of the world has a nation undertaken to say to its own citizens, "You shall not fish upon the high seas for three months in the year," or for any other time.

Now let us see what the value of the catch of mackerel has been in this country for the past few years, and see how greatly it has been reduced in its price to all our people.

In 1863 the value of the mackerel catch as it sold at the high price which then prevailed was $5,935,525; in 1869 the mackerel caught in that year sold for $3,248,315; in 1871 the catch of mackerel inspected in Massachusetts amounted to $2,233,055. The catch that year was 259,000 barrels. Of late the price of mackerel has been greatly reduced in all our markets. The numbers caught and brought to our shores have been so great that, following the ordinary law of political economy, the supply being large, the price has been reduced, and all our people have obtained fish food at very low rates.

In 1883 this large amount of mackerel sold for $1,619,000; in 1884 the catch sold for $1,853,000, and in 1885 for $1,230,000 only.

These figures prove conclusively why this bill is brought here. A very large proportion of the year's catch is made in the months of March, April, and May, and this bill proposes that during those three months there shall be no fishing for mackerel with purse-seines at all. If this bill becomes a law it will reduce the catch of mackerel probably 50 per cent. for the next year, and what will be the result? The 50 per cent. less of fish will sell in our markets for as much money as the large catch of last year did. In other words, the American people will be compelled to pay to the capitalists who control this business in those two States as much money for one-half of the amount of fish-food as they paid for the larger amount last year. That is all there is of this. We are asked here to shut up and control the fish on the high seas for three months in the year in order that the price of fish-food may be advanced from 50 to 100 per cent. That is all this bill is intended for, and it is precisely what the bill will accomplish if it is enacted into a law.

Mr. President, it has been charged here that there has been no opposition to this bill from any source except from the fish-mongers of New York city and other Atlantic cities. I need not say to you or to the Senate that the poor people of this country, the laboring men and the farmers of this country scattered broadcast over the whole land, are not organized in such a way that they can come here to protest against the passage of this bill. Neither need I say to you, sir, that not one-tenth of 1 per cent. of the people of the United States who consume fish as a portion of their daily food have any possible knowledge that any such bill as this is before the United States Senate. You will not be able to make any considerable portion of the people of this country believe for a moment that the Congress of the United States can be brought to the condition where it will say to its own people and to its own citizens that they shall not go on the high seas and fish for this food, which is free to all the world.

We may shut our own people out from these waters for three months, but we can not shut out from these waters the people of our neighboring countries. We can not shut out from them the Canadian fishermen. We may close our own ports to this food-fish and say that our people for three months shall not have it, and that for the remaining nine months of the year they shall pay from 50 to 100 per cent. more for the fish which they consume than they would if this bill should not pass.

It does not seem possible to me that the Congress of the United States should patiently consider such a proposition as this, for not only will this enhance the cost to all our people of mackerel, but it will undoubtedly to a large degree increase the cost of all salt-water fish, of cod-fish, of blue-fish, and of the various varieties which come into our markets. Any one familiar with this subject knows that during all the summer months fresh mackerel are brought into all our ports, and that they to a large extent, if not entirely, control the price of all the fish to be found in our markets. If mackerel are caught in large quantities, of course the price goes down to all the people, and it carries with it the price of other kinds of fish to a certain extent.

I can find nothing in this bill, I say, save the proposition to prohibit the fishing for three months in order that by doing so we may greatly decrease the catch of mackerel and thereby increase the cost or the selling price of that which shall be caught during the other nine months, and that additional cost is to be paid by all the people of our country.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. President, the Senator from New York does credit to his classical education in one respect. If I remember aright, whenever in the Iliad any of the gods or goddesses wanted to do anything that would not bear watching they always surrounded themselves with a fog. That seems—and I do not say it offensively, for possibly the Senator from New York may be a victim of his own hallucination—to be the result of his efforts in this case. We get up and dispel the fog, and in less than fifteen minutes the Senator has got himself, if not the Senate, enveloped in as dense a fog as his side of the question can demand.

What he wants is to obscure the real issue, it seems to me, and that is that the Fisheries Committee and the men who are pushing this bill are philanthropists. No such claim has ever been made. There is no claim of philanthropy about us except on the part of the Fisheries Committee. We have acted judicially in this matter. The men who are pushing this bill have come to Congress and said that their business was languishing; it was in danger of being destroyed unless some protective measure was thrown around it. They asked that the close season be established. They are reaching out in various directions to find some remedy for the evil under which they labor, and it seems to me they make a very good case against the purse-seine fishing and in favor of the close season.

So much for that charge of philanthropy. Now, the Senator gets up and he takes this table, and I know that if he had had time to read it over critically he would not have made such an exhibition as he did in reading these figures this morning. I hope the Senator will not leave until I analyze his remarks.

Mr. MILLER. There is no danger of my leaving.

Mr. PALMER. The Senator gets up and says that in 1863 the price paid for mackerel was $2,878,000, but he says that owing to the purse-seine fishing in 1883 the price had gone down $1,619,000. If he had looked at the question critically he would have seen that the price has been affected more by the degradation of the fish, by the quality running down, than by any other cause. For instance, in 1863 the percentage of No. 1 mackerel was 22 per cent., and in 1883 it was 14 per cent. He will find also that in 1885 215,000 barrels sold for $1,230,000, whereas in 1883 154,000 barrels sold for $1,619,000. There was a larger amount, 215,000 barrels, against 154,000, and the 215,000 brought $1,230,000 and the 154,000 brought $1,619,000; and what was the reason? The reason was that in 1883 the percentage of No. 1 mackerel was 14 per cent., and in 1885 it was 7 per cent. If there is anything in figures, it seems to me that that is very fully proven.

Mr. MILLER. I think the Senator has proved my proposition exactly. They want to reduce the amount of fish caught and therefore increase the price, and that is what they will do if the bill is passed.

Mr. PALMER. That is not the animus of the bill, nor is it fairly inferable, it seems to me, from any of the arguments used or any of the statements made before the committee. It is the running down of the quality that they complain of, and that causes the present state of their business and the present low prices that they receive for mackerel. It seems to me that they are right. The Committee on Fisheries have no interest in the matter, save to see that justice is done to a great and important interest.

Now, who are to be benefited by this bill? Primarily those men whom the Senator from New York calls monopolists. They have the monopoly of the business now. It makes no difference to them whether they take their fish down on the coast of New Jersey or up on the coast of Massachusetts if it is equally profitable; but it makes a great difference if it is not profitable, and if it is the cause of the decrease of the profits in their business. It also is a matter of interest to the people along the shore of Delaware and New Jersey that they shall be disturbed in their fisheries along the borders of their States with hook and line. This is merely a crusade against purse-seine fishing in the spawning season; and, taking all the statements from the different gentlemen who appeared before the committee, it seems to me that the Senate can not come to any other conclusion than that the proper thing to do is to pass the bill.

Mr. MILLER. Will the Senator permit me just one question?

Mr. PALMER. Certainly.

Mr. MILLER. He seemed to make an entirely different statement in regard to the danger of the destruction of this fish as a fish called mackerel. I want to ask the chairman of the committee now, in all seriousness, whether there is a particle of scientific evidence anywhere in the world going to show that it is possible for man with all the modern devices and means of fishing to in any way perceptibly diminish the number of fish in the sea?

Mr. PALMER. "Still harping on my daughter." That they——

Mr. MILLER. I would like a direct answer to that.

Mr. PALMER. I am coming right to it, and I can best illustrate it to the gentleman by a little figure of speech.

The conclusion arrived at by Professor Huxley when he made that investigation in regard to the herring fishery seems to be the bulk of the opposition. Now Professor Baird has said, and the Senator read so on Tuesday, that it might be well to try the experiment; that it is possible that the purse-seine fishing might in time lessen the quantity of mackerel. Professor Goode, the next highest in authority, said that if it did not destroy the mackerel it might defleet them from their ordinary route and course. Captain Collins, possibly the best practical man in the Fish Commission, a man in whom Professor Baird has the highest confidence, believes that it does deflect them from their course. But I was going to answer the gentleman's question by another or rather by a little illustration.

What difference would it make to him if a lot of Apache Indians came to his farm in Herkimer County, New York, and killed his cattle and carried off the beef, or whether they drove the cattle down into Mexico, and over the border; he loses his cattle in either case. In one case the country is not depleted of cattle; there are just as many cattle, but they are not where they are available to him. This is a parallel case. They are driving the old and the wise and the mature mackerel off from our coast, and there is no other conclusion you can come to by looking at these tables. Have I answered the gentleman?

Mr. MILLER. To the satisfaction of the chairman of the committee, I have no doubt, but scarcely to the satisfaction of the Senator from New York.

Mr. PALMER. Is it not satisfactory?

Mr. MILLER. Not entirely. [Laughter.] I am not able to see the wisdom of cutting off fishing entirely for fear that in some future ages, it may be a geological period of a million years more or less, we can not tell when, if this thing be allowed to go on there may be some diminution in the number of fish, or, as the Senator says, we may frighten the wise and old fish away from our shores by the harassing methods of purse-seine fishing.

Mr. PALMER. Will not the Senator allow me to go on? It seems I have pierced his armor, and if he does concede that in course of time the fish in the sea may be affected by this wholesale purse-seine fishing——

Mr. MILLER. No; I do not admit that even in the course of time that may be so. It can not happen.

Mr. PALMER. If the Senator will confine his remarks to questions and not let them elongate into speeches, I shall be willing to answer anything that he propounds, if I can.

Mr. MILLER. I was trying to follow the example of the distinguished chairman of the committee in making my questions as long as he makes his answers to some questions that I have propounded; but I have not succeeded in doing that, and therefore I will come back to the more ordinary and straight Anglo-Saxon style. Why not then, as I have asked before, I now ask the chairman if he fears the driving away of these fish from our shores by frightening the old and wise ones by purse-seine fishing—why not prevent fishing entirely for the other nine months in the year; why allow it to take place only off the coast of Maine and Massachusetts?

Mr. PALMER. I will get the Senator on the general question if he will not go on and make another speech. I will tell you the reason. It is because purse-seine fishing is much more economical than fishing by hook and line; and the regard of the Fisheries Committee and of the fishermen of Massachusetts and Maine for the constituents of the Senator from New York to the extent that they may have cheap food and cheap fish, has merely asked for a three months' close season instead of a six months' close season. It is much more economical to take fish with the purse-seine than with the hook and line. The cheaper fish is caught the cheaper it can be sold. That is the reason that it would be followed.

Another thing, the spawning season is past, and the timidity which we know affects all animals about the reproductive period has disappeared, and the raid made upon these immense schools does not have the same effect upon them that it does about the reproductive period. Is that satisfactory to the Senator from New York?

Mr. MILLER. No, it is not satisfactory at all. I am not able to understand why the Senator desires to stop purse-seine fishing when the fish are off the coast of the Carolinas and Virginia and New York, and he is willing to let it go on during the remainder of the year when the fish are off the coast of Massachusetts and Maine. I do not see why he wants to preserve the fish in every case and prevent their being frightened by these terrible fishermen, and is entirely willing they should carry on their nefarious methods off the coast of Maine and Massachusetts.

Mr. PALMER. I ask the Senator not to make a speech every time he asks a question.

Mr. MILLER. The Senator called it out. He requested to know if I was satisfied. I am not satisfied.

Mr. PALMER. If all the explanation I have made in regard to the damage to the fish during the months from the 1st of March to the 1st of July is not satisfactory to the Senator from New York, though one should rise from the dead he could not be affected. I think I have answered that question fifteen or twenty times. It is not because they appear off the coast of North Carolina, or off Hatteras or New Jersey that the close season is established; it is not because the people of those States are to be discriminated against; but it is because the fish, in the first place, are comparatively good for nothing; and, in the second place, it is the spawning season and the schools are broken up and they are deflected from their proper route and from their feeding grounds.

The Senator from New York says that the object of this bill, the reason that it is pushed at the instance of the fishermen from Maine and Massachusetts, is that as the catch of fish has been increased the price has run down. That is not the fact. The price has not run down, as the tables show, except as the quality has carried it down. You will find the low prices follow the quality rather than the amount.

The gentleman says that it has been the policy of all civilized people in all times to protect their fisheries. That is just what we are trying to do to-day. We are doing what five thousand fishermen along the coast of Massachusetts and Maine ask us to do, who tell us that their equipment and their ships have run down from 100 cents on the dollar to 25 or 50 cents on the dollar, and they ask this relief. It is not going to interfere with any one except the retail dealers or the wholesale dealers in fish in the city of New York, and there is no one that has appeared before the committee to oppose the bill except Mr. Blackford, for whom I have a very high respect, and Mr. Benjamin, who seems to be a very pleasant gentleman, but who is working for his own interest; and right here I would like to read to the Senate what Mr. Blackford, who opposes the enactment of this bill, says on the subject. He is asked this question:

If it drives them off it is just about as bad as if you destroyed them?

Mr. BLACKFORD. Exactly so; but the same argument will apply to fishing at any season of the year. It would apply to your fishing in September and October, and would apply to all other kinds of fish. There is no doubt—any person who goes fishing knows—that if you disturb the fish or break up their schools you are in danger of driving them to seek new feeding-grounds and to seek new spawning-grounds.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SEWELL in the chair). It is the duty of the Chair at this time to lay before the Senate the special order, being the bill (S. 2288) to incorporate the Atlantic and Pacific Ship-Railway Company, and for other purposes.

Mr. PALMER. I wish the Senator from New York would listen to this, for he is convicted out of the mouth of his own witness.

Excuse me, Mr. President, I ask that the unfinished business be laid aside informally for a few minutes. I think we have about got to the end of this discussion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. VEST. I can not consent to that, because we have notice that the post-office appropriation bill comes up to-morrow, and it has the right of way. The special order has been dragging for a week, and I think it ought to be disposed of. I know what these few minutes mean. They will turn out to be hours.

Mr. PALMER. I shall be through with my remarks, I will say to the Senator from Missouri, in about two minutes.

Mr. VEST. I take it for granted the Senator from New York [Mr. MILLER] will desire to reply. I have no objection to the Senator from Michigan finishing his remarks.

Mr. HALE. The Senator from Missouri has been very indulgent thus far, and I realize that; but we have been once or twice almost to the point of getting a vote, and he can see if this goes over until to-morrow morning we shall be obliged to make the same effort to get it up after the routine morning business, when fifteen or twenty minutes at the most, I judge, can dispose of the bill now. It will not encroach very much upon the Senator's time. I can see how he is situated. He wants to bring up his bill, but I am satisfied if he will give us a little time we shall be out of his way.

Mr. VEST. I do not want to take the Senator from Michigan off the floor, but when he closes his remarks I shall ask to go on.

Mr. PALMER. I have no feeling in the matter except to expedite the business of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. By unanimous consent, the Senator from Michigan will proceed, House bill 5538 being before the Senate.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. Blackford is asked this question:

The CHAIRMAN. It seems to me it would not to the same extent. If you give them three months' relief in this pursuit when they are advancing on a certain line, they would be apt to have their yearly run-ways and they will keep up that line?

Mr. BLACKFORD. Yes, sir; if you catch next year only one half as many fish as you catch this year, the probability is there will be a good many more left.

The CHAIRMAN. Are they not more timid, as all animals are, just about the reproductive time than any other, and would not any infringement upon their routes have a more disastrous effect then than it would have when they were not in the reproductive time?

Mr. BLACKFORD. I am inclined to think so, for the reason that the fish come closer to the shore after the spawning season is over. That of itself would indicate that they are not so shy after spawning as they are before.

I shall not take up the time of the Senate with any more remarks. It seems to me that it is made perfectly plain that a great industry is suffering, that those engaged in it are entitled to relief at the hands of Congress, particularly the fishing interest, the nursery of our Navy. I ask that a vote be taken immediately unless the Senator from New York desires to address the Senate further.

Mr. MILLER. Let us have the pending amendment read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 1, line 4, after the word "eighty," it is proposed to strike out "seven" and insert "eight;" so as to read:

That for the period of five years from and after the 1st day of March, 1888, no mackerel, other than what is known as Spanish mackerel, caught between the 1st day of March and the 1st day of June, inclusive, of each year, shall be imported into the United States or landed upon its shores.

Mr. MILLER. That is entirely correct. Previous to that amendment being offered, by unanimous consent an amendment was made, striking out, at the beginning of that line, "March" and inserting "July."

Mr. PALMER. That vote was reconsidered, and that motion was withdrawn.

Mr. MILLER. That motion was reconsidered, and I objected to going any further without making a speech, and there has been no vote taken since. That vote has been reconsidered, but the amendment has not been finally passed upon. The question is whether it shall prevail or not. I hope that change will not be agreed to. I hope that the motion made by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR], substituting "July" for "March," will not prevail.

Mr. PALMER. I hope it will not be, but I think the Senator from New York is in error in stating that the amendment was not reconsidered and withdrawn.

Mr. HOAR. My friend will pardon me. My amendment fixing the time for the prohibition to commence at next year was adopted, so that the time is March, 1888. The amendment changing March to July has not been adopted.

Mr. MILLER. "March" has been stricken out, and "July" inserted.

Mr. HOAR. No; that was reconsidered. That is still pending, not adopted.

Mr. MILLER. That is still pending; it has not been agreed to, it seems. There was simply an agreement to reconsider it, and that agreement was by unanimous consent. Now the proposition whether the month shall be March or July is pending before the Senate, and I want to say upon that simply that I do hope the friends of this measure will consent to give these poor fishermen and these poor capitalists who own these four hundred vessels at least two years of time in which to make a change of their industry. It is going to take six thousand people out of employment for three months in the year; and certainly there ought to be a notice of at least two years in order that these men can make up their minds what they are going to do for these months, for I assume that for the following nine months they will get no greater wages from their employers than they are getting now when they are employed twelve months in the year. Certainly we ought to have a little consideration for the six thousand men employed as well as for the four hundred men who own the vessels. This amendment, if retained in the bill, will simply give them two years before this law shall go into effect. Of course, that would be two years of cheap mackerel and of small profits for the owners of the vessels. I understand that.

Mr. HALE. Let the amendment be reported.

Mr. VEST. I gave way to the Senator from Michigan to conclude his remarks with the understanding that he would then ask a vote on the bill and amendments. If there is to be further discussion I shall call for the regular order.

Mr. HALE. We can get this bill out of the way in five minutes. Let the amendment be reported.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 4 of section 1, after the word "eighty," it is proposed to strike out "seven" and insert "eight;" so as to read:

That for the period of five years from and after the 1st day of March, 1888, no mackerel other than what is known as Spanish mackerel, &c.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the adoption of this amendment.

Mr. MILLER. I do not understand the form of the amendment now. Will the Secretary please state it?

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 4, it is proposed to strike out "seven" and insert "eight."

Mr. MILLER. I do not understand the parliamentary condition of this matter if it is in that shape now. What I supposed we were to take a vote upon was as to whether we are to restore the word "March" where we had already inserted "July." The agreement was to reconsider that vote, and then the matter stopped there.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. For the information of the Senator from New York the Chair will have read what the action of the Senate was.

The Chief Clerk read the following from the RECORD of Wednesday, February 9, page 1614:

Mr. FRYE. I ask the Senator from Michigan in charge of the bill to move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was amended by striking out the word "March" and inserting the word "July," in line 4, and then to accept the amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. HOAR. That will cover the same thing.

Mr. PALMER. In deference to the wishes of the Senator from Maine, who has a greater interest in this bill possibly than I have, I will move that the vote by which the amendment was agreed to changing "March" to "July," in line 4, be reconsidered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That can be done by unanimous consent. There being no objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. PALMER. Now, I withdraw the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr HOAR]; which will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 1, line 4, strike out the words "1887" and insert "1888," so as to read:

"That for the period of five years from and after the 1st day of March, 1888, no mackerel other than what is known as Spanish mackerel, &c."

Mr. HALE. There is no objection to that.

Mr. MILLER. I understood it fully, except that I did not know that the Senator from Michigan had withdrawn that amendment. If I had understood it at the time, I should have objected to the withdrawal, and I renew it now, to substitute the word "July" for "March."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state to the Senator from New York that his motion can be made when the bill is reported to the Senate. The question now is on the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] to change "1887" to "1888."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

Mr. MILLER. Now I move the amendment to strike out "March" and insert "July."

Mr. HOAR. Let the amendment made by the Committee of the Whole be reported so that there may be no mistake.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment made in Committee of the Whole will be reported.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

That for the period of five years from and after the 1st day of March, 1888, no mackerel, other than what is known as Spanish mackerel, caught between the 1st day of March and the 1st day of June, inclusive, of each year, shall be imported into the United States or landed upon its shores.

Mr. HOAR. That is enough.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York moves, in line 4 of section 1, to strike out "March" and insert "July." The question is on that amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Shall the bill pass?

Mr. MILLER. I call for the yeas and nays on that question.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and taken.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am paired generally with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS]. His colleague [Mr. WHITTHORNE] can not advise me how he would vote if present; but I learn from some of his friends that he would probably vote in favor of the bill, as I would. I feel, under the circumstances, justified in voting "yea."

Mr. BERRY. I was requested by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. WHITTHORNE] to say that he was paired with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER].

Mr. KENNA. My colleague [Mr. CAMDEN] is paired on all questions, as I before announced, with the Senator from California [Mr. STANFORD].

Mr. COLQUITT. I am paired with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. CHACE].

Mr. SPOONER. On this question I am paired with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. WHITTHORNE].

Mr. CONGER. The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. MITCHELL] is called to his home by the sudden sickness of his mother, and requested me to make that announcement to the Senate. On political questions he is paired.

The result was announced—yeas 34, nays 11; as follows:

YEAS—34.

Allison,	Dawes,	Hampton,	Payne,
Berry,	Dolph,	Hawley,	Platt,
Bowen,	Edmunds,	Hoar,	Teller,

So the bill was passed.

Mr. PALMER. I move that the Senate insist on its amendment and ask for a conference thereon.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate, and Mr. PALMER, Mr. GRAY, and Mr. HALE were appointed.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills this day received from the House of Representatives were severally read twice by their titles, and referred as indicated below:

The bill (H. R. 9324) to carry into effect the international convention of the 14th of March, 1884, for the protection of submarine cables—to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The bill (H. R. 9414) for the relief of John A. Thompson—to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

The bill (H. R. 8976) to incorporate the Washington Cable Railway Company of the District of Columbia—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The bill (H. R. 6393) to authorize the Fort Worth and Denver City Railway Company to construct and operate a railway through the Indian Territory, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title.

Mr. COKE. The Committee on Indian Affairs have already reported a bill almost exactly like that, and I ask that it go on the Calendar.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SEWELL in the chair). The bill will be placed on the Calendar.

EULOGIES ON THE LATE SENATOR LOGAN.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved, That 20,000 of the eulogies upon General John A. Logan, delivered in the Senate February 9, 1887, be immediately printed for the use of the Senate.

RAILROADS THROUGH THE CŒUR D'ALENE RESERVATION.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which is the bill (S. 2288) to incorporate the Atlantic and Pacific Ship-Railway Company, and for other purposes.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. I ask consent of the Senate to take up at this time Order of Business 1985, being the bill (S. 3041) granting right of way for a railroad through an Indian reservation and will occupy but a moment. I imagine it will not require a single minute for discussion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to taking up the bill indicated by the Senator from Arkansas? The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. VEST. I object.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. The objection was made after the announcement by the Chair that there was no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understood that the Senator from Missouri was not going to object, and therefore announced the decision of the Chair on that basis.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. This bill will not occupy more than a minute or two of time; and while it is a matter of local importance only, it is of very great importance to the people interested. There can be no question about it, and no objection to it. I hope the Senator from Missouri will not insist on his objection.

Mr. VEST. If there is to be no debate, and if we can take a vote at once, I shall not object.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. I will agree to that.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3041) granting the Spokane and Palouse Railway Company the right of way through the Cœur d'Alene Indian Reservation.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the right of way is hereby granted to the Spokane and Palouse Railway Company, a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the Territory of Washington, for the extension of its railroad through the lands in Idaho set apart for the use of the Cœur d'Alene Indians by executive order dated ——, commonly known as the Cœur d'Alene reservation, beginning at a point on the westerly line of said reservation where the track of the Spokane and Palouse Railway (said track being from a point at or near the track of the Spokane and Palouse Railway at or near Spangle Station to the city of Wardner, Idaho Territory) would strike said line, running thence in a northeasterly direction by the most practicable route to the northerly line of said reservation.

SEC. 2. That the right of way hereby granted to said company shall be 75 feet in width on each side of the central line of said railroad as aforesaid; and said company shall also have the right to take from said lands adjacent to the line of said road material, stone, earth, and timber necessary for the construction of said railroad; also ground adjacent to such right of way for station buildings, depots, machine-shops, side-tracks, turnouts, and water-stations, not to exceed in amount 200 feet in width and 3,000 feet in length for each station, to the extent of one station for each 10 miles of its road.

SEC. 3. That it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Interior to fix the amount of compensation to be paid the Indians for such right of way, and provide the time and manner for the payment thereof; but no right of any kind shall vest in said railway company in or to any part of the right of way herein provided for until plats thereof, made upon actual survey for the definite location of such railroad, and including the points for station buildings, depots, machine-shops, side-tracks, turnouts, and water-stations, shall be filed with and approved by the Secretary of the Interior, which approval shall be made in writing and be open for the inspection of any party interested therein, and until the compensation aforesaid has been fixed and paid; and the surveys, construction, and operation of such railroad shall be conducted with due regard for the rights of the Indians, and in accordance with such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may make to carry out this provision.

SEC. 4. That said company shall not assign or transfer or mortgage this right of way for any purpose whatever until said road shall be completed: Provided, That the company may mortgage said franchise, together with the rolling-stock, for money to construct and complete said road: And provided further, That the right granted herein shall be lost and forfeited by said company unless the road is constructed and in running order within two years from the passage of this act.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. I move to fill the blank, in line 8 of section 1, by inserting the words "November 8, 1873," and I also send up certain amendments which are agreed on by the committee.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 8 of section 1 it is proposed to fill the blank by inserting "November 8, 1873."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The other amendments referred to by the Senator from Arkansas will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 3, line 4, of the committee's amendment, after the word "thereof," it is proposed to insert:

And also to ascertain and fix the amount of compensation to be made individual members of the tribe for damages sustained by them by reason of the construction of said road.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The CHIEF CLERK. The next amendment is, at the end of section 3 of the committee's amendment, to add:

Provided, That the President of the United States may, in his discretion, require that the consent of the Indians to said right of way shall be obtained by said railroad company, in such manner as he may prescribe, before any right under this act shall accrue to said company.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The CHIEF CLERK. The next amendment is to add as new sections the following:

SEC. 5. That said railway company shall accept this right of way upon the expressed condition, binding upon itself, its successors and assigns, that they will neither aid, advise, nor assist in any effort looking toward the changing or extinguishing the present tenure of the Indians in their land, and will not attempt to secure from the Indian tribes any further grant of land or its occupancy than is hereinbefore provided: Provided, That any violation of the condition mentioned in this section shall operate as a forfeiture of all the rights and privileges of said railway company under this act.

SEC. 6. That Congress may at any time amend, add to, alter, or repeal this act.

SEC. 7. That this act shall be in force from its passage.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. VEST. Regular order!

Mr. CAMERON. I ask consent of the Senator from Missouri to let me call up Senate bill 3234, Order of Business 2063. It will not take three minutes to pass the bill.

Mr. DOLPH. I hope the Senator from Missouri will yield to the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. I have another bill in my hands in exactly the same words as the bill just passed, except that it provides for a different railroad company across the same reservation to a different point. There can be no objection to it, and it will only take the time necessary to read the bill. It was reported at the same time as the other bill from the Committee on Indian Affairs, and there can be no objection to it from anybody. It is Senate bill 3026, Calendar No. 1986.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection the bill will be taken up.

There being no objection, the Senate as in Committee of the Whole proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3026) granting to the Washington and Idaho Railroad Company the right of way through the Cœur d'Alene Indian reservation.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause, and insert:

That the right of way is hereby granted, as hereinafter set forth, to the Washington and Idaho Railroad Company, a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the Territory of Washington, for the extension of its railroad through the lands in Idaho Territory set apart for the use of the Cœur d'Alene Indians by executive order dated ——— —, —, commonly known as the Cœur d'Alene Indian reservation, beginning at a point on the westerly line of said reservation, near the junction of the Washington and Idaho Railroad with the Idaho branch of said road, near Lone Pine, in Washington Territory, and running thence in a northerly direction across the Cœur d'Alene Indian reservation to a point near the mouth of the Saint Joseph's River, on the Cœur d'Alene Lake; thence in a northeasterly direction along the east side of the Cœur d'Alene Lake to the Cœur d'Alene River, and thence in a generally easterly direction, by the Cœur d'Alene Mission, to the east line of the reservation.

SEC. 2. That the right of way hereby granted to said company shall be 75 feet in width on each side of the central line of said railroad as aforesaid; and said company shall also have the right to take from said lands adjacent to the line of said road material, stone, earth, and timber necessary for the construction of said railroad; also ground adjacent to such right of way for station buildings, depots, machine-shops, side-tracks, turnouts, and water stations, not to exceed in amount 300 feet in width and 3,000 feet in length for each station, to the extent of one station for each 10 miles of road.

SEC. 3. That it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Interior to fix the amount of compensation to be paid the Indians for such right of way, and provide the time and manner for the payment thereof; but no right of any kind shall vest in said railway company in or to any part of the right of way herein provided for until plats thereof, made upon actual survey for the definite location of such railroad, and including the points for station-buildings, depots, machine-shops, side-tracks, turnouts, and water-stations, shall be filed with and approved by the Secretary of the Interior, which approval shall be made in writing and be open for the inspection of any party interested therein, and until the compensation aforesaid has been fixed and paid; and the surveys, construction, and operation of such railroad shall be conducted with due regard for the rights of the Indians, and in accordance with such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may make to carry out this provision.

SEC. 4. That said company shall not assign or transfer or mortgage this right of way for any purpose whatever until said road shall be completed: Provided, That the company may mortgage said franchise, together with the rolling-stock, for money to construct and complete said road: And provided further, That the right granted herein shall be lost and forfeited by said company unless the road is constructed and in running order across said reservation within two years from the passage of this act.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. I move in section 3, line 4, of the amendment, after the word "thereof," to insert:

And also to ascertain and fix the amount of compensation to be made individual members of the tribe for damages sustained by them by reason of the construction of said road.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. At the end of section 3 of the amendment I move to add:

Provided, That the President of the United States may, in his discretion, require that the consent of the Indians to said right of way shall be obtained by said railroad company, in such manner as he may prescribe, before any right under this act shall accrue to said company.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. I move to insert as additional sections what I send to the desk.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to add as new sections the following:

SEC. 5. That said railway company shall accept this right of way upon the the expressed condition, binding upon itself, its successors and assigns, that they will neither aid, advise, nor assist in any effort looking toward the changing or extinguishing the present tenure of the Indians in their land, and will not attempt to secure from the Indian tribes any further grant of land or its occupancy than is hereinbefore provided: Provided, That any violation of the condition mentioned in this section shall operate as a forfeiture of all the rights and privileges of said railway company under this act.

SEC. 6. That Congress may at any time amend, add to, alter, or repeal this act.

SEC. 7. That this act shall be in force from its passage.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is a blank in lines 8 and 9 of section 1.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. I move to strike out the word "dated," in line 8 of section 1, so as to read:

For the extension of its railroad through the lands in Idaho Territory set apart for the use of the Cœur d'Alene Indians by executive order, commonly known as the Cœur d'Alene Indian reservation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That change will be made.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AMENDMENT TO A BILL.

Mr. MORGAN submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the river and harbor bill; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had on the 8th instant approved and signed the following acts:

An act (S. 54) to provide for the allotment of lands in severalty to Indians on the various reservations and to extend the protection of the laws of the United States and the Territories over the Indians, and for other purposes.

It also announced that the following bills, having been received by the President January 27, 1887, and not having been returned by him to the House in which they originated within the ten days prescribed by the Constitution, they had become laws without his approval, namely:

An act (S. 2098) for the relief of Rosella E. Hibbert; and

An act (S. 2301) granting a pension to Lucy E. Anderson.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. CAMERON. Now, I ask the Senate to consider Order of Business 2063, being the bill (S. 3234) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the purchase of a site and the erection of a suitable building for a post-office and other Government offices in the city of Scranton, Pa.," approved July 27, 1882.

Mr. VEST. Will it lead to any discussion?

Mr. CAMERON. None whatever. If it does I will withdraw it.

Mr. VEST. I will not give way to anybody else.

Mr. INGALLS. I ask the Senator from Missouri whether it is his purpose to go on with the regular order or not?

Mr. VEST. It is my purpose.

Mr. INGALLS. Then the Senator ought to call for it, because many Senators have left the Chamber supposing that bill was to proceed and that the debate would go on; but if it is to be relinquished we all ought to know it so that there may be a chance to get at the Calendar. I hope the Senator from Missouri will either proceed with the discussion of that bill or allow us to have it laid aside until the following day, so that we may go to the Calendar for those bills in which we are concerned.

Mr. CAMERON. I am very much obliged to the Senator from Kansas for his advice to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. INGALLS. I object to the bill of the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. CAMERON. I know you do, and I thank you for that, too.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The regular order will be proceeded with.

ATLANTIC AND PACIFIC SHIP-RAILWAY.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 2288) to incorporate the Atlantic and Pacific Ship-Railway Company, and for other purposes, the pending question being on the amendment proposed by Mr. VEST to the amendment of the Committee on Commerce, to add as an additional section:

SEC. —. That if stock to the amount of $10,000,000 shall not be subscribed, and 10 per cent. thereof actually paid in, before the expiration of two years next after the passage of this act, or if the work of constructing said railway shall not be actually commenced before and be in progress at the expiration of four years next after the passage of this act, the said corporation shall be deemed to have expired by limitation, and all its franchises and privileges shall be deemed to have absolutely ceased and become determined.

Mr. GIBSON. Mr. President, I feel it to be my duty to make a few remarks in support of the pending measure in charge of the distinguished Senator [Mr. VEST] from the State of Missouri, in which is located the city of Saint Louis, the capital of the Mississippi Valley of the North; while I have the honor in part to represent the State of Louisiana, in which is situated the city of New Orleans, the gate-way of the great valley and the emporium of our Mexican Gulf. There is no portion of the American people, or of the world, having such an abiding interest in the bill before the Senate as the inhabitants of the valley that stretches from the Alleghany to the Rocky Mountains, destined to become the scene of man's greatest achievements.

There have been observations and explorations of ten different routes across the isthmus which separates North from South America. Geographically, from north toward the south, they are situated in the following order:

1. The Isthmus of Tehuantepec.
2. The Nicaragua route via Lake Nicaragua.
3. The Isthmus of Panama.
4. The San Blas and Chepo route.
5. Caledonian and Morti routes.
6. Caledonian and Sucubti routes.
7. The so-called Du Puydt route.
8. The Cacarica and Luyra route.
9. The Atrato and Fernando route.
10. The Atrato-Napipi route.

Only four of these routes have been commended to the consideration of the people of the United States—the Tehuantepec, the Panama, the Nicaragua, and the Atrato-Napipi routes. We are to consider now the Tehuantepec route.

The pending bill, a copy of which I hold in my hand, recites the fact that the Government of Mexico has granted to James B. Eads, and to such company as he may organize, a concession, containing certain powers, rights, and privileges in the matter of the construction and operation of a ship-railway across the Isthmus of Tehuantepec, with the accessory railway lines, of telegraph and water privileges, and has authorized the said Eads to obtain a charter for said company, either in Mexico or elsewhere; and constitutes James B. Eads and certain persons named therein, and such others as may hereafter be associated with them, a body corporate and politic, in deed and law, under and by the name, style, and title of the Atlantic and Pacific Ship-Railway Company.

That is the whole purpose and effect of this legislation. It grants a charter, and nothing more—not a dollar of money or of credit; not a grant of any kind whatsoever; not even a single privilege to certain citizens of the United States who have embarked with Captain Eads in the enterprise of building a ship-railway across the Isthmus of Tehuantepec; so that it must be plain and placed beyond all dispute that the Government is asked for nothing except this simple act of incorporation, and the only question before us is whether we shall grant it or not.

Now, Mr. President, inasmuch as every one of the competing routes across this narrow Cordilleras range of mountains presents many novel and difficult questions for the solution of which engineering science has been brought to bear, I do not think it would be expedient or proper for me to attempt to explain to the Senate the principles upon which the ship-railway is defended. Indeed, I think I may safely say that whatever may be the preferences of Senators, we shall find ourselves compelled finally to trust largely to the reputation and standing of the particular engineers by whom these several routes are advocated. We are not trained engineers or experts, nor can we become practically acquainted with the topography of the country through which these routes pass, and therefore it would seem the dictate of prudence and of good common sense that the Senate should deal rather with the political and commercial and financial aspects of any proposition submitted to our consideration than with those that relate to the engineering difficulties.

I speak of these problems in engineering science with certain reserve, for while there are things that are manifestly impossible, and others that would seem improbable, there are still others which are involved in doubts that appear to be almost evenly balanced. In the latter category may be classed these four competing routes, but I confess the Tehuantepec route appears the most practicable, and sanctioned by the weight of the highest authorities. All of these enterprises commend themselves to my sense of justice and sympathy. I can not but look back with ever-increasing admiration and wonder upon the sublime faith which led Columbus over the trackless ocean to explore a shorter route to the Indies, under the inspiration of which he became the discoverer of the New World. I have never read the story of William Patterson, who ventured to establish a colony from Scotland on the shores of Darien, in the seventeenth century, and the dazzling visions of wealth and empire that led him and his associates to unexampled disaster, without feeling some sympathy for the fate of the brave adventurer who had already acquired renown enough for one life, by conceiving the plan of a national bank, which, after having been examined and approved by the most eminent statesmen that sat in the Parliament house at Westminster, and by the most eminent merchants on the London exchange, was carried into practical execution with signal success, and the Bank of England stands a monument to his genius.

And should Monsieur De Lesseps, after having performed the most beneficent work and solved the most difficult problem of engineering by building the Suez Canal, succeed in the magnificent enterprise of constructing a sea-level canal across the Panama route, he will be entitled to rank as the first among all the engineers who ever lived, and to be regarded as one of the benefactors of his kind. He will deserve a monument to be erected by the contributions of all the leading nations of the earth, for the accomplishment of so vast an undertaking, and for having dedicated it to the free and equal enjoyment of the people of all nations, with exclusive privileges for none. The neutrality which has been imposed upon the canal at Panama is a most far-sighted act, and will reflect almost as much credit upon the sagacious statesmanship of De Lesseps as the work itself shall upon his genius as an engineer.

The very conception of the enterprise is Napoleonic in its boldness, and for one I trust that success may be his reward. To remove the barrier that separates the modern from the ancient world, an isthmus standing—is a task that should commend him to the good opinion of all mankind without reference to nationalities; for an open canal at Panama would benefit the nations of Europe—England, France, Spain, and Germany—quite as much, if not more, than the United States. We have safe transit by rail with our Pacific Coast, while, with the exception of Great Britain, all other European nations—Spain, Germany, Italy—can only reach the Pacific Ocean by way of Cape Horn. The Panama Canal is, in effect, for the benefit of European commerce and trade, affording a shorter route to the coast.

> Between two kindred seas
> Which, mounting, view'd each other from afar
> And long'd to meet—

But, Mr. President, the proposition before us is one presented by our own countrymen, by citizens of the United States, among whom are many from my own city and State whom I know personally or by reputation as gentlemen of the very highest respectability and standing, and with the highest sense of responsibility. I see among the incorporators the names of many who are honored in every walk of life. And I must confess that when I notice so many substantial and intelligent citizens of the United States exhibiting such confidence in the enterprise as to lend their names to it, and to embark their fortunes in it, I feel that the Senate of the United States may well dismiss all apprehension as to the feasibility of the plan as well as to its practicability and economy.

Captain Eads is no stranger to the people of the Mississippi Valley. Indeed, sir, his name has become a household word in all lands as the most distinguished engineer that America has produced. The faith that the people of the Mississippi Valley repose in him is not blind, but grows out of the tests which they have seen applied. They saw the genius of Eads convey the railroads in an unbroken and continuous line over the Mississippi River by a bridge which at the time it was built was considered a miracle of engineering skill and audacity. I am not surprised, therefore, to observe that the Senator from Missouri, whose good fortune it is to pass over this bridge whenever he returns to his own home, should be impressed with a sincere regard and admiration for Captain Eads.

But still a greater work than that was reserved for him to accomplish. In spite of the forebodings of the people and of the condemnation of the trained engineers of the Army, with a self-reliance that is always one of the elements of genius, he undertook to give to the people of the great valley a deep and unimpeded entrance into the Mexican Gulf, lifting away the sand-bar from the mouth of the river, by harnessing up its own forces, within the space of a few mouths, that had been accumulating since the birth of the continent; and to-day the people of that valley possess the best harbor on the coast of the United States, and in a few years more, when his plan shall have been applied to the improvement of their great highway, deepening and preserving it, the citizens of Cairo and Saint Louis will enjoy all the advantages of seaports. I think, therefore, that the Senate may pass over, without much discussion, the proposition which is before us, so far as it rests upon the principles of finance or the principles of engineering.

I called attention at the outset of my remarks to the fact that this company was to be incorporated in order to enable them to accept with greater security certain concessions which had been granted by the Government of the Republic of Mexico. It may be well, before proceeding further, to ascertain precisely what these concessions are in substance and effect, and in order to measure and appreciate them fully let us place ourselves in the position of Mexico, and imagine for a moment that the corporation consisted of citizens of Mexico desired to acquire a transit through any portion of our territory, as of Florida, for instance, from one point on the ocean to another.

I observe in looking over the paper containing the concessions that Mexico has granted to Captain Eads, or the company organized by him, first, a right of way across the isthmus, half a mile in width, more or less; secondly, all the materials that may be found upon the lands adjacent thereto, for the construction of these works; thirdly, exemption of the property and capital stock of the company from taxation during the period of the grant, namely, ninety-nine years; fourthly, the right to import upon the isthmus, free of duty, any and all materials necessary for the construction and operation of the railroad and its appurtenances; fifthly, the exemption from all export duty of the silver and bullion used by the company either in payment of dividends to stockholders or debts contracted by the company abroad; sixthly, a subvention of 2,700,000 acres of the public lands.

In my judgment these are important and substantial grants, rights, and privileges, and I may add overtures, made by the Government of Mexico to these citizens of the United States. The proposition is therefore to be commended, not only because it is made to us by our own citizens for a patriotic and beneficent purpose, but also because they have secured in aid of the enterprise important advantages and valuable grants from the Republic of Mexico. Why should we refuse this act of incorporation? It commits our Government to no responsibility, while it holds out the prospects of vast benefits to be conferred upon the people of our country and upon our whole country as a nation.

I am in favor of this bill, and of the Tehuantepec route because of its geographical proximity to our own country. It comes nearer to being an extension of our own coast line between our Eastern and Western possessions than any other route. A continuation of the Mississippi River in nearly a direct line would cross the isthmus along this route. In point of fact, when completed, the people of the Mississippi Valley will enjoy the benefits of a great highway directly into the Pacific as well as into the Atlantic Ocean. A vessel sailing from New Orleans to San Francisco by the Tehuantepec route will follow a circuit 1,250 miles shorter than by the Nicaragua route, and 2,250 miles shorter than by the Panama route.

Besides, the Tehuantepec route is further removed from that remarkable calm that prevails on the Pacific Ocean in the proximity of the isthmus, where Matthew Maury has related that sailing vessels have been becalmed days, weeks, and months at a time. The shortening of the distance between our emporium on the Gulf of Mexico and our emporium on the Pacific Sea would of itself, in the course of ten years, when you consider the immense commerce—for time is money—save a sum sufficient to pay a dividend upon the cost of the work itself.

I am in favor of this measure because the Tehuantepec route would be more easily defended than any other on the isthmus. Wherever, at any point on the American continent, the infantry of the United States can be assembled, wherever the troops may be dispatched on the mainland, that point will be absolutely defensible against any power in the world. Should we adopt this route a column of musketry could be moved from Texas by railway to the city of Mexico, thence to Vera Cruz, and thence by the projected railway within 109 miles of the Tehuantepec route. Our mounted infantry and horse artillery could be brought into requisition, transferred, and supplied without difficulty. In fact, all the resources of the people of the United States might be concentrated without any difficulty in defense of the Tehuantepec route.

Railways have changed the art of war in many respects, and in none so much as in the facility with which not only troops may be moved, but may be supplied with commissary, and quartermaster, and ordnance stores. When an army has a railway in its rear, its true base is there. If we were called upon to defend the Nicaragua route we would have to move troops 700 miles below the Tehuantepec route, over almost impassable mountains, pestilential swamps, tropical heats, and a country teeming with diseases, and as inaccessible and impenetrable as the jungles of Africa. Else we should be compelled to adopt the alternative of making a contest for our supremacy on the sea, and to maintain a navy equal to that of Great Britain. In matters of this kind it is the part of statesmanship not to appeal to national vanity and to the instinctive heroism of the people, but to their sober common sense, which should weigh the advantages and disadvantages of every transaction in which the national honor and interest were to be involved.

The Senator from Alabama referred to the great inland lake of Nicaragua as affording a rendezvous for fleets. I must confess that I have no knowledge of naval warfare, but it does seem to me that if I were charged with the management or conduct of the American Navy in the administration of the Government, in the event of war with a foreign power, it would require the earnest recommendation of every admiral and every commodore in the service to induce me to issue an order that our Navy should be concentrated in a lake midway between the two oceans, where it might be blockaded and rendered useless or paralyzed. The most difficult task ever imposed upon the commander is to defend a fixed position, while his adversary is left free to avail himself of such movements as may inflict the most damage upon the enemy.

The Tehuantepec route is quite within the Gulf of Mexico. The other routes are beyond it, and commanded and blockaded by British possessions. In the event of a naval contest we could equip and send forth from the ports on the Gulf and concentrate between the straits of Florida and Yucatan a naval force in a very short time, within easy supporting distance, that would fitly embody the whole power of our people on the sea. Cuba must be regarded as part of the mainland, owing to its proximity to our coast and to the fact that it commands both the entrance of the Gulf of Mexico by the straits of Florida and the straits of Yucatan, as well as the mouth of the Mississippi River, standing in respect of our trade and commerce precisely as it would with regard to Great Britain if situated at the mouth of the Suez Canal or in the British Channel. With Cuba in our possession the Tehuantepec route would be as secure from the interference of any European nation as the Mississippi River itself or the harbor of Boston.

I am in favor of this bill and of this route, because it is offered to us by our sister republic, our nearest and our strongest neighbor. The highest considerations of public policy, of humanity and civilization concur in urging us to establish the most cordial relations of friendship and amity with the people of Mexico. They are our neighbors; their government is modeled upon ours; their destiny is inseparably linked with our own. They cherish in the main the same aspirations for freedom and independence of all control upon the part of European nations. We can repose greater confidence in the guarantees and assurances of the Mexican Government than in those which are south of Mexico. She has a population of nine million people, a brave and efficient army, and varied climate, large and undeveloped resources, and a future destiny well calculated to liberalize and elevate her statesmanship and to lead her under the influence of education, moral and material development, into a high rank among the nations of the earth.

The people of Mexico are brave, generous, and magnanimous, and when their Government sees fit to make these liberal and large grants to our fellow-citizens I can not but regard such action as an evidence of good will and a token of friendship for the Government and people of our own country. It would be unwise and impolitic and ungenerous on our part to reject such overtures. Our own Government in the year 1849 offered to the Government of Mexico $15,000,000 for the right of transit through this route which we can secure now without paying a farthing for it. Mr. Webster declared, in his speech delivered in the Senate January 31, 1849, that—

> I do not mean to say, sir, that there may not be several modes of establishing a communication with the Pacific coast that are equally desirable. I am willing to say, on the other hand, that I have regarded the subject of a communication from the Atlantic to the Pacific, by way of Tehuantepec, as preferable on account of its being nearer to our ports on the Gulf; and I will add, that if the proposition for a railroad were now before us, connecting the two oceans by that route, and the project had advanced so far that we could pronounce it to be practicable, I should give it my most hearty support.

Again he said:

> And I repeat again, if there were a proposition now before us for the other route, and if that proposition were in as advanced a state as this, and if we were to have but one, I would give the preference to the route by Tehuantepec.

On the 16th of December, 1879, the House of Representatives appointed a select committee of eleven members to examine into the whole subject of a suitable route for the construction of an inter-oceanic route across the American Isthmus, of which the Senator from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] and the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE], both of whom, as we all know, have given particular attention to every subject relating to our commerce, were members. The advocates of all the different plans and routes appeared before that committee, including Admiral Ammen, De Lesseps, and Captain Eads. That committee gave to each and all a patient hearing, and made an exhaustive investigation of the whole subject. They reported in favor of the Tehuantepec route.

I am in favor of this route and measure because it conforms more closely to the traditional policy of our Government and people and to the requirements of the Constitution. We had at the outset the option to follow the example of the mother country and to enter upon a career of conquest by sea and by land, or to confine ourselves to this continent and to the slow and sure development of our own resources, absorbing, as our population increased, territory that was adjacent to us and consolidating and perfecting our institutions.

There can be no doubt that under the Constitution of the United States power was vested in the Federal Government to determine for itself, responsible of course to the people, the measure of its jurisdiction in respect of our relations with foreign nations under the treaty-making power and under the power to regulate commerce with foreign nations.

It is true that among the enumerated powers we do not find that of creating corporations. But we do find there, says Mr. Story, the great powers to lay and collect taxes; to borrow money; to regulate commerce; to declare and conduct war, and to raise and support armies and navies.

It was settled upon the celebrated and unanswerable argument of Alexander Hamilton, in February, 1791, that the Government possessed the power under the Constitution to create a corporation necessary and proper in the judgment of Congress to carry into execution any of the enumerated powers. In that argument Mr. Hamilton observed that—

> The fact, for instance, that all the principal commercial nations have made use of trading corporations or companies for the purpose of external commerce is a satisfactory proof that the establishment of them is an incident to the regulation of commerce. This other fact, that banks are a usual instrument in the administration of national finances, and an ordinary and the most effectual instrument of loans, and one which to this country has been found essential, pleads strongly against the supposition that a government clothed with most of the important prerogatives of sovereignty, in relation to its revenues, its debts, its credit, its defense, its trade, its intercourse with foreign nations is forbidden to make use of that instrument as an appendage to its own authority.

Both Story and Kent have approved and strongly re-enforced the position taken by Mr. Hamilton under the sanction of President Washington. Kent says, in Lecture 12, volume 1, page 253:

> The power of creating a corporation, though appertaining to sovereigty, was not a great, substantive, and independant power, but merely a means by which other objects were accomplished. If the end be legitimate and within the scope of the Constitution, all means which are appropriate and plainly adapted to this end and which are not prohibited are lawful; and a corporation was a means not less usual nor of higher dignity nor more requiring a particular specification than other means. A national bank was a convenient, a useful, and essential instrument in the prosecution of the fiscal operations of the Government.

And so when the question was brought before the Supreme Court for adjudication, in the case of McCulloch vs. The State of Maryland (U. S. S. C. R., volumes 14–17, page 314), and again in the case of Osborn et al. vs. The Bank of the United States (U. S. S. C. R., volumes 22–25, page 741), these views were embodied as the judgment of that court. It was decided that the power of establishing a corporation is not a distinct sovereign power or end of government, but only the means of carrying into effect other powers which are sovereign. Whenever it becomes an appropriate means of exercising any of the powers given by the Constitution to the Government of the Union, it may be exercised by that Government.

The Constitution does not profess to enumerate the means by which the power it confers may be executed. If the means are appropriate the necessity is to be determined by Congress alone. The power of creating a corporation is an incident to the powers expressly given.

Now if it be admitted that Congress may, in its discretion, create corporations for the government of the District of Columbia and of the Territories, or a national bank, or many banks, it surely will not be denied that Congress may create a corporation as one of the instruments to regulate our commerce with foreign nations.

For it can never be forgotten that the Government of the Union as it exists to-day found its origin in the necessities of commerce and trade, and that it was ordained not only to secure the rights and liberties of the people and safety of the States but also to regulate and foster American commerce. We may charter steamship companies, whose steamers may navigate not only the wide ocean but the narrow straits, the rivers and bays of foreign nations, and rest safe in their harbors. We may incorporate canal and railway companies to overcome or remove particular obstacles to the flow of our commerce and trade around our coast lines, or that constitute a permanent barrier separating our possessions on the Atlantic and Gulf of Mexico from those on the Pacific Ocean. Hence, we find the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS], introducing on June 10, 1886, "a bill to incorporate the Maritime Canal Company of Nicaragua." The preamble recites, "Whereas it is deemed desirable for the public interest of the United States that a ship-canal be constructed between the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans on what is known as the Nicaragua route," and so on; that certain persons (whose names are given) and all those persons who are or may be associated with them and their successors "are hereby created a body-corporate under the name and style of the Maritime Canal Company of Nicaragua."

Now, the pending bill follows on the same line of constitutional guarantee for the powers it confers. It creates certain persons (whose names are given) and such others as may be associated with them and their successors a body corporate and politic in deed and in law under and by the name, style, and title of "The Atlantic and Pacific Ship-Railway Company."

The power to incorporate one of these companies would appear to be competent to incorporate the other. They have the same domicile. They are to be composed of citizens of the United States. One is to build a ship railway, the other to construct a canal, both having the same object in view—namely, to facilitate American commerce. One is to pass through the neighboring Republic of Mexico, and the other through the more distant State of Nicaragua. How comes it then that the power to incorporate one of these companies can be easily found in the Constitution, but the power to incorporate the other can not be found?

There is one wide and vital difference in the attitude presented by these two companies. The Tehuantepec Company seeks an act of incorporation in order that it may more securely and certainly enjoy the valuable concessions granted to it already by the Government of Mexico, which I have already described; while the Nicaragua Company comes before us without a grant, without any right, benefit, privilege—not an assurance even of a thing from the feeble and unsteady republics of Nicaragua or Costa Rica.

The Tehuantepec Company is already endowed with valuable rights and franchises, substantial gifts and exemptions, and securities from the neighboring Republic of Mexico, whose authority and independence are wholly indisputed, while the Nicaragua Company would lead us into all sorts of entangling alliances, into disputes and contentions, between that republic and her neighbors, and between all of them and Great Britain, and along a line of transit dominated by the adjacent possessions and naval power of Great Britain.

But I do not propose to examine in detail the special features of difference or resemblance between the two companies. They are matters of mere minutiæ, easily modified and amended in the progress of consideration to conform to the requirements usually impressed upon all corporations for the protection of the stockholders and the public. I am explaining now the constitutional grounds upon which the pending legislation rests.

No statesman has illustrated the amplitude of this power more fully than John C. Calhoun, whom John Quincy Adams characterized as the most philosophical mind of America. In his work on the Constitution and Government of the United States, that profound statesman observes:

> In deciding what powers ought and what ought not to be granted the leading principle undoubtedly was to delegate those only which could be more safely or beneficially exercised for the common good of all the States by the joint or general government of all, than by the separate government of each State; leaving all others to the several States respectively. The object was not to supersede the separate governments of the States, but to establish a joint supplemental government; in order to do that which either could not be done at all or as safely and well done by them as by a joint government of all. This leading principle embraced two great divisions of power, which may be said to comprehend all, or nearly all, the delegated powers, either directly or as a means to carry them into execution. One of them embraces all the powers appertaining to the relations of the States with the rest of the world, called their foreign relations; and the other, of an internal character, embraces such as appertain to the exterior relations of the States with each other.
> It is clear that both come within the leading principle, as each is of a description which the States, in their separate character, are either incompetent to exercise consistently with their mutual peace, safety, and prosperity. Indeed, so strong and universal has this opinion been, in reference to the powers appertaining to their foreign relations, that, from the Declaration of Independence to the present time, in all the changes through which they have passed, the Union has had exclusive charge of this great division of powers. To the rest of the world the States composing this Union are now, and ever have been, known in no other than their united, confederated character. Abroad—to the rest of the world—they are but one.

If we had adopted the policy which some statesmen have advocated and which some Senators still advocate we might to-day boast of more splendid achievements and of great armies and navies, with colonial empires and dependencies beyond the seas, with conquests on every land under the sun, holding in subjection to our power vast populations wholly unfitted to participate in the responsibilities and strenuous duties of self-government and without representation in either House of Congress. We might perhaps have eclipsed Great Britain, of whom Mr. Webster says:

> For purposes of foreign subjugation Rome in the height of her glory is not to be compared, a power which has dotted over the surface of the whole globe with her possessions and military posts, whose morning drum-beat, following the sun and keeping company with the hours, circles the earth with one continuous and unbroken strain of the martial airs of England.

But under the lead of the sagacious statesmen who gave direction to the Government of the Union in its infancy a different policy prevailed. Intent upon laying the foundations of our institutions in the rights and liberties of the people and in erecting the surest safeguards for their protection and preservation, they turned their backs upon these dazzling visions of empire and adopted the homely and wise maxim of neutrality and non-interference in the affairs of other nations. George Washington laid it down as fundamental that neutrality was the true policy of the people of the United States, and he persisted in this course even against the appeals of the agents of France, the generous and gallant nation which had assisted us to achieve our independence.

Nothing perhaps in his wonderful career so illustrates the firmness and sagacity of the Father of his Country. At a later period another President, Mr. Monroe, deemed it proper to make the fitting declaration, now known to all nations as the Monroe doctrine, which announces that while we will not intervene in the affairs of Europe or form entangling alliances with other nations or become involved in questions relating to the balance of power on the European continent, we will not permit European nations to suppress the efforts of the people to establish institutions of self-government in the Western World. I will not detain the Senate to relate the circumstances which led to this famous declaration, but I think it proper to quote from the message of President Monroe to Congress at the commencement of the session of 1823–'24, which embodies the declaration I have referred to.

In the message of President Monroe to Congress at the commencement of the session of 1823–'24 the following passage occurs:

> In the wars of the European powers, in matters relating to themselves, we have never taken any part, nor does it comport with our policy so to do. It is only when our rights are invaded or seriously menaced that we resent injuries or make preparations for defense. With the movements in this hemisphere we are of necessity more immediately connected, and by causes which must be obvious to all enlightened and impartial observers. The political system of the allied powers is essentially different in this respect from that of America. This difference proceeds from that which exists in their respective governments. And to the defense of our own, which has been achieved by the loss of so much blood and treasure and matured by the wisdom of their most enlightened citizens, and under which we have enjoyed such unexampled felicity, this whole nation is devoted.
> We owe it, therefore, to candor and to the amicable relations existing between the United States and those powers to declare that we should consider any attempt on their part to extend their system to any portion of this hemisphere as dangerous to our peace and safety. With the existing colonies or dependencies of any European power, we have not interfered and shall not interfere. But the governments who have declared their independence and maintained it, and whose independence we have on great consideration and on just principles acknowledged, we could not view any interposition for the purpose of oppressing them, or controlling in any other manner their destiny, in any other light than as the manifestation of an unfriendly disposition toward the United States.

While we may have seemed in certain instances to have recoiled from the assertion of this doctrine, in the main it has been vindicated by every administration of the Government from the time it was announced to the present moment. I may state here that this declaration was submitted some time after it was made to the Mexican Government with the hope that it might receive the sanction of that government, but in this we were disappointed, and yet it can not be forgotten that it was owing to the saving power of this declaration and its reassertion by the American Government that France was induced to withdraw her armies from Mexico and the Mexican people were permitted again to enjoy their independence and ancient rights of local self-government.

Now, sir, in my judgment this Tehuantepec route with the concessions granted by the Mexican Government places in our hands the key of this political policy. It will bring to our co-operation as a firm ally in defense of this policy the strongest nation on this continent with the exception of our own. The Tehuantepec route is wholly within the Republic of Mexico, and the defense of it by the Mexican Government and people would afford to the United States almost a certain guarantee against any interference on the part of Great Britain or any one of the nations of Europe. It is well known to foreign nations that the Monroe doctrine has received the approbation and support of our ablest statesmen, especially of Mr. Calhoun, Mr. Webster, and Mr. Clay, and that it is cherished by the people of the United States. If, therefore, we incorporate this company and place it under the jurisdiction of a neighboring republic with 9,000,000 of people adjoining our own possessions, with institutions similar to our own and aspirations like our own, we should have a powerful ally to join hands with us in the defense and maintenance of our traditional policy. As a matter of course, it would be incumbent upon the Government of the United States to protect any interests in the Tehuantepec route acquired by our citizens as we would protect the rights and interests of American citizens wherever they might be.

But while I do not believe that any interference would be attempted by Great Britain in the event that we should adopt the Nicaragua route, yet we know very well that Great Britain lays claim to certain settlements and colonies along that route or adjacent to it and necessary to its independence, and that certain questions relating to it remain unadjusted, involved in the Clayton-Bulwer treaty. But the Government of Great Britain would be more likely to defer to our views and wishes respecting the route through the Republic of Mexico than she would respecting the route concerning which she has never relinquished her pretensions and over certain countries bordering upon which she claims a certain sovereignty. There is not a pretext upon which any European nation could claim to exercise any control over the transit through the territory of the independent Republic of Mexico.

But it may be said that it would be better for us to bring all disputed points in connection with the routes through Central America to an issue with Great Britain at once, that our wisest policy would be to throw down the gauntlet to the Government of Great Britain and to try conclusions with her on the line of the Nicaragua route.

I would not go out of my way, Mr. President, to pick a quarrel with Great Britain or any other nation in advance of the interests of our people or to provoke prematurely any collision with her or any other nation. We have had in the course of our history a great many perplexing questions to settle with Great Britain. We have some at present pending, and there will probably never be a time when there will not arise difficulties to be adjusted between that government and our own. While I would not unnecessarily provoke a collision or rupture I would not at any time or under any circumstances shrink from the assertion of all of our national rights or from the defense of our honor or the interests of our citizens when invaded by any nation.

But I have been struck by the philosophical observations of Mr. Calhoun upon the Oregon bill when it was before the Senate January 24, 1843, as illustrating, perhaps, more forcibly the wisdom of our traditional policy, which is one of peaceful and powerful development. "Time," he said, "is acting for us, and if we shall have the wisdom to trust to its operation it will assert and maintain our right with resistless force without conquest, a cent of money, or a drop of blood. There is often in the affairs of government more efficiency and wisdom in non-action than in action. All we want to effect our object in this case is a wise and masterly inactivity.

"Our population is rolling towards the shores of the Pacific with an impetus greater than what we realize. It is one of those forward movements which leaves anticipation behind. In the period of thirty-two years which have elapsed since I took my seat in the other House the Indian frontier has receded a thousand miles to the West."

Where is the Indian frontier to-day? It has disappeared. We have no Indian frontier. We are a consolidated Republic from ocean to ocean, and great cities and great commonwealths look out upon the Pacific Sea. We have realized in our day and more than outstripped the prophetic ken of Edmund Burke, who, speaking in the British Parliament in 1775, said:

> Such is the strength with which population shoots in that part of the world, that, state the numbers as high as we will, while the dispute continues, the exaggeration ends. While we are discussing any given magnitude, they are grown to it. While we speed our time in deliberating on the mode of governing two millions, we shall find we have two millions more to manage. Your children do not grow faster from infancy to manhood than they spread from families to communities, and from villages to nations.

Another British statesman in our own time, not unlike Burke in the comprehensiveness of his genius and matchless eloquence, fills up in glowing colors the magnificent outline portrayed by Burke himself. Mr. Gladstone, in a paper published in the North American Review of September, 1878, says:

> But there is no parallel in all the records of the world to the case of that prolific British mother who has sent forth her innumerable children over all the earth to be the founders of half a dozen empires. She, with her progeny, may almost claim to constitute a kind of universal church in politics. But, among these children, there is one whose place in the world's eye and in history is superlative; it is the American Republic. She is the eldest born. She has, taking the capacity of her land into view as well as its mere measurement, a natural base for the greatest continuous empire ever established by man. And it may be well here to mention, what has not always been sufficiently observed, that the distinction between continuous empire and empire severed and dispersed over sea is vital.
> The development which the Republic has effected has been unexampled in its rapidity and force. While other countries have doubled, or at most trebled, their population, she has risen, during one single century of freedom, in round numbers, from two millions to forty-five. As to riches, it is reasonable to establish, from the decennial stages of the progress thus far achieved a series for the future, and, reckoning upon this basis, I suppose that the very next census, in the year 1880, will exhibit her to the world as certainly the wealthiest of all the nations. The huge figure of 1,000,000,000, which may be taken roundly as the annual income of the United Kingdom, has been reached at a surprising rate; a rate which may perhaps be best expressed by saying that, if we had started forty or fifty years ago from zero, at the rate of our recent annual increment, we should now have reached our present position.
> But while we have been advancing with this portentous rapidity America is passing us by in a canter. Yet even now the work of searching the soil and the bowels of the territory, and opening out her enterprise throughout its vast expanse, is in its infancy. The England and America of the present are probably the two strongest nations of the world. But there can hardly be a doubt, as between the America and the England of the future, that the daughter, at some no very distant time, will, whether fairer or less fair, be unquestionably yet stronger than the mother.
> "O mater forts filiæ fortior."

But, sir, what has been the source of our mighty development? What has given strength and cohesion and growth to the people of this country? Unquestionably a strict observance of the maxims of Washington and of the fathers. We have sought to establish a continental system as opposed to a colonial system; development by accretion and not by colonization; by assimilation and not by distant conquest; by the orderly evolution of the inherent forces and elements of our national life and institutions, and not by the acquisitions of distant lands and people, hanging about us as exotics, appendages, and parasites. We have resisted on all occasions the acquisition of territorial dependencies beyond the borders of the continent.

The Senate rejected the treaty for the purchase of San Domingo and St. Thomas as being a departure from our traditional policy. Mr. Webster declared "we should seek no peculiar advantages, no exclusive control over the Hawiian Government, but be content with its independent existence." And yet even while pursuing this conservative policy it must be confessed that there are epochs in our country's history the contemplation of which in all future time must bring disquiet and regret—must bring pain and shame to the hearts of the lovers of free institutions and of domestic peace and concord. Free from the burdens inherited by the people of modern Europe from mediæval times; from old institutions founded in the denial of right and in the abuse of power; free from the ambition of dynasties, from class distinctions, from large standing armies to protect our independence; from jealous and grasping neighbors, our statesmanship has already found itself incompetent to settle the perplexing questions which have arisen except by an appeal to the sword and by drenching our country in blood.

What wars, what disasters would have befallen us if instead of pursuing the lines laid down by Washington, and Jefferson, and Hamilton, we had embarked on an uncertain and dazzling career of foreign conquest and of bringing into the consideration of our legislation and for the determination by our statesmanship problems growing out of the acquisition of distant possessions, the prizes perhaps of rival and competing parties and of ambitious administrations.

I do not doubt but that in the fullness of time the power of the United States under the peaceful development of their institutions and in obedience to the law of population, the spawning force of our people will carry our supremacy by the consent and at the request of neighboring states over the entire continent. The Articles of Confederation provided for the admission of Canada. Our first Congress was called a Continental Congress, and we can no more turn back the tides of the sea than stay the spread of our people and of our institutions over the entire dominion of North America.

John Quincy Adams gave expression to this opinion in the year 1819:

> Spain had possessions upon our southern and Great Britain upon our northern border. It was impossible that the centuries should elapse without finding them annexed to the United States; not that any spirit of encroachment or ambition on our part renders it necessary, but because it is a physical, moral, and political absurdity that such fragments of territory, with sovereigns at 1,500 miles beyond sea, worthless and burdensome to their owners, should exist permanently contiguous to a great, powerful, enterprising, and rapidly-growing nation. Most of the Spanish territory which had been in our neighborhood had already become our own by the most unexceptionable of all acquisitions—fair purchase for a valuable consideration. This rendered it still more unavoidable that the remainder of the continent should ultimately be ours. But it is very lately that we have distinctly seen this ourselves; very lately that we have avowed the pretension of extending to the South Sea; and until Europe shall find it a settled geographical element that the United States and North America are identical, any effort on our part to reason the world out of a belief that we are ambitious will have no other effect than to convince them that we add to our ambition hypocrisy.

We may therefore content ourselves by legislating not in a spirit of resentment against Great Britain or any other power in the world. Let us remain on the via Apia. Let us await events. Let us develop our resources. Let us discipline ourselves, so that we may prove worthy of these free institutions which were committed to our keeping by our ancestors. Time will conquer all things for us if we shall only show ourselves as patient as we are courageous.

We may dismiss our apprehensions with regard to Great Britain. I do not believe that any question can be suggested which can not be settled by a firm declaration of our purposes and of our rights whether a controversy shall arise with Great Britain or any other nation. I am not to be moved from my balance and thrown into a chill by fear or into a fever by resentment at the mere mention of the name of England.

It has occurred to me—I do not know that I am entirely correct in this—that some of our friends allow themselves to be swerved from their equilibrium by apprehensions of an invasion of our rights by the British Government. They see in every little difficulty that may occur some design in Great Britain to invade our rights and to destroy our institutions. The apparition of her power and pretensions disturb them whenever any subject arises with which she may have the remotest connection:

> I hear a lion, in the lobby, roar!
> Say, Mr. Speaker, shall we shut the door
> And keep him out; or shall we let him in,
> And see if we can get him out again?

For one, I propose to follow in the beaten track of our traditional policy, and to legislate on all questions that concern the rights or interests of our people without reference to Great Britain or any other power in the world. I know that we have suffered many wrongs from Great Britain, that it cost seven long years of sacrifices of treasure and blood to acquire our independence of her, and that it became necessary to wage a second war of independence to achieve our freedom and rights on the seas. But I believe to-day that we are invincible so long as we adhere to the policy of our ancestors, and that if the time should ever come for us to try conclusions with Great Britain she will understand then, as she has in the past, that, in the language of John C. Calhoun, the United States in respect to foreign nations are "but one."

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, if the enterprise we are now inaugurating succeed, it will be the most important step which the American people has taken for a generation toward achieving three supreme objects of national desire.

The independence of American manufacture, the development of our vast internal commerce, the raising the United States to the first place among nations of the world in wealth and strength, the extension of our railroad system from the Atlantic to the Pacific, are already accomplished. These are among the glorious results of that wonderful fourteen years of Republican rule, four of them years of war, four of them under a hostile Executive, from which the Republic in coming centuries will date its new birth. Since 1874 there has been no legislation in this country to which both political parties did not agree.

The people who have done these things are not content to rest any longer in a condition of supine and inactive truce. They are looking with eager desire to take their rightful place in the markets of Asia, of South America, and of Mexico. They wish to make the connection between their Atlantic and Pacific States as direct and perfect by sea as it is by land. They wish for a great route of commerce from sea to sea, whose advantages shall primarily belong to them; which shall be theirs under their control; safe from successful rivalry in peace and from hostile interference in war.

To these things the people, strong in their restored union, in their equality, their manufacturing independence, in their wealth, are looking as the three supreme objects of patriotic desire.

Surely, Mr. President, these are objects worthy of the ambition of a great and free people. They are to be pursued under a competition worthy of the rivalry of a great and free people. It is with the same power from whom our ancestors wrested their independence, with whom we had to fight for the privilege of sailing the seas without being molested, from whom it is but lately we have been able to take the control of our own markets, that we are about to enter on a new struggle of which the markets of the world are to be the prize.

She is not without enormous advantages. She is but a little black spot on the map of the world, that you can cover with your thumb nail, shaped something like a little old woman with a hooked nose and flying cap and hair, with her back to Europe and clutching at Ireland with her claws.

She has got the best business stand in the world. She is just off the northern coast of Europe, girdled by the ocean, with a temperate climate, where brain and body can do their best work. Her coast is full of excellent harbors. The unbroken level of her soil is covered by excellent roads and abundant railroads perfectly equipped. Her soil is a rich and luxuriant garden, while beneath it are almost inexhaustible stores of coal and iron. She was until lately the richest country in the world. The race who inhabit her are the best soldiers and sailors, the best governors of themselves, the ablest governors of other men the world ever saw. She has, with Scotland and Wales, an area of 87,000 square miles and a population of 28,000,000 inhabitants.

If you take a map of the entire world, land and water, and observe England and her dependencies, all inhabited by the queen's subjects, the countries which, although nominally having a government of their own, are under her political control, and the countries which she controls commercially, most of which she will defend if they are attacked, although they are politically independent, you would almost say that no spider ever had a fly in its meshes more completely than she seems to have got this planet of ours—land and sea, continents and islands.

Look first at her direct dependencies, all subject to her queen, and see where they are situated.

Dependencies.	Population.	Area in square miles.
Ireland	5,000,000	32,000
Canada and North American possessions	4,500,000	3,470,392
India	253,982,595	1,383,504
Australasia	3,361,455	3,084,268
Hong Kong	160,000	29
British Borneo, Straits Settlements	423,384	1,605
Labuan	6,298	30½
Cape Colony	1,131,648	241,900
Mauritius	360,360	708
Lagos	750,270	75
Gold Coast	400,000	15,000
Ascension	165	35
St. Helena	3,059	47
Gibraltar	18,381	1½
Malta	149,782	117
Cyprus	186,173	3,584
Bermuda	14,888	20
Bahamas	43,521	5,450
Jamaica	585,536	4,362
British Hondurus	27,452	7,562
British Guiana	252,186	109,000
Leeward Islands	119,546	622
Windward Islands	311,413	794
Trinidad	153,128	1,754
Falkland Islands	1,553	6,500

And British Borneo, Singapore, Maldive, Chagos, Saychelles, St. Paul, of which I have not the statistics.

They are all as given in the Statesman's Year Book for 1886, a book compiled from the English official tables:

Population	220,854,583
Add England, Wales, and Scotland	28,700,000
	249,554,588
Area, square miles	8,516,814
Add England, Scotland, and Wales	88,006
	8,604,820

Now take the countries which England politically controls:

	Population.	Area.
Egypt	6,806,000	44,208
British Burmah	3,000,000	190,500
Burmah	6,000,000	250,000
	15,806,000	484,708

Malaya, Beloochistan, Afghanistan, Siam.

Take next the countries which are commercially her dependents:

	Population.	Area.
Turkey	43,464,427	2,406,522
Peru	2,657,863	483,847
Argentine Republic	3,000,000	515,700
	49,121,290	3,406,069

So that you have subject to the English Queen, or under her political or commercial control, 314,500,000 people and 12,495,000 square miles of territory.

The United States are about as large as the Roman Empire at its largest. Yet this is four times and a half the area of the United States. It is, I suppose, a third of the population of the world. It would make 1,561 States as large as Massachusetts, and fill them with a people 175 times our number.

Vast as this population seems at present, the law of human growth in populations at peace compels us to expect a vastly larger population in the near future.

England has not only laid her hands on these enormous countries and the men who inhabit them, but the way she has got control of the great highways, the great roads of commerce, is more wonderful still.

There are four great roads by which the commerce of the world must travel from nation to nation. There are two old roads and two new roads. The old roads are down through the South Atlantic. One turns eastward by the Cape of Good Hope into the Indian Ocean. One turns westward to the Pacific around Cape Horn. The two meet at last at Cathay or farthest Ind, girdling the globe with their mighty and beneficent chain. At every station, at every step on both is the power of England planted. Half way down the coast of the eastern hemisphere, where Africa puts out into the Atlantic, are the English West African settlements and her colonies of Sierra Leone and the Gold Coast. Just below the equator is the Ascension Island, an English colony. Five degrees of latitude farther you come to Saint Helena, an English fortress, where the great foe of England died a prisoner and an exile. Then the Cape itself, a Cape of Good Hope to no commerce but hers, with its excellent harbors of Capetown and Natal, is one of her most prosperous colonies. Thence by successive steps, Mauritius, Seychelles, Chagos, Maldive, Ceylon, all British possessions, India is reached. Every other power must pay tribute to her in peace, and must run the gauntlet of her fortresses and naval stations in war.

Would you go westward through the straits of Magellan or past the stormy Cape Horn? Powers in closest friendship with her hold the continent from the southern line of Brazil, while her own Falkland Islands command and menace the entrance to the strait and the passage round the cape.

But England has not contented herself with the ancient ways. Her commerce is guarded by a far different statesmanship from that which denies appropriations to build a navy, or to pay for carrying mails on its own vessels, or defend its coasts; far different from that which bullies Mexico and cringes before Canada. She already occupies the highways of the future. Commerce hereafter is to seek direct paths though continents must be severed. Here again are two roads, eastward and westward. One through the Mediterranean Sea already cuts Asia and Africa in twain and passes out through the Red Sea to the Indian Ocean. The other, not yet open, is to divide our own continent at Nicaragua or Panama, or, if to-day's work be well done, to cross it at Tehuantepec.

Whoever shall follow either way, except Tehuantepec, must do so at the mercy of England. She holds Gibraltar, the impregnable gateway of the Mediterranean, and half way from Gibraltar to Egypt is her mighty naval station of Malta, which commands both shores of that inland sea. Hugging the Asiatic coast is Cyprus, her new possession, whose purchase was almost the last act of Lord Beaconsfield. Suez itself she has taken from the improvident hands of France, while at the narrow entrance and exit of the Red Sea she holds Aden and Perim and beyond, on the way to India, the Island of Socotra. She commands the great eastern pathway of commerce from Europe to India and China almost as absolutely as the river Thames.

Turning to the westward route, our position on the Gulf of Mexico will secure to our three Southern ports convenient access to the canal wherever it may be. But all other commerce must pass the line of sentinels, which the foresight of England has already armed and stationed at the entrance to the Gulf. The Bermudas, the Bahamas, the Leeward and Windward Islands, Jamaica, and Trinidad form a complete blockade, while British Honduras lies close to the eastern mouth of the proposed canal of Nicaragua.

Of the forty chief West Indian Islands European powers own all but one, the seat of the black republic of Hayti and Saint Domingo. England herself owns thirteen beside the Bahamas and the Bermudas.

If we ever have a contest with her for a canal at Nicaragua or Panama, her island of Jamaica stands guard at the entrance of the Caribbean Sea and the Bay of Honduras.

At the same time she is perfecting her land route through Canada, and is to-day building a strong fortification on Vancouver Island, which is, and can be, meant only as a menace to us.

Now, Mr. President, what does England do all this for? This is not all that she does. She has lately expended five hundred million to build railways in India. On her 1,300 miles of seacoast, as against our 23,000, she expended fifteen million in 1874. The breakwater at Plymouth cost her seven million; Holyhead cost her sixty-four hundred thousand; Portland breakwater, five million. The expenditure on the Mersey at Liverpool must have been more than a hundred million. She pays between fifty and sixty million a year for her navy. It is her policy always to keep a naval force stronger than that of all the rest of Europe combined. She pays between ninety and a hundred million for her army. She pays more than $10,000,000 a year for the army and naval service of her colonial possessions. Now what is all this for? You will say it is partly to maintain her large carrying trade, one-third of that of the whole world. But she supports that carrying trade only by large subsidies.

The income from the English ocean carrying trade to-day, exclusive of government subsidies, is not 3 per cent. of the capital employed. Our free trade friends like to talk of the absence of American ships from the ocean; but no American capitalist would put his money into the risk of the ocean carriage for the return which that business pays to English capital. England, of course, desires to maintain this fleet of ocean steamers as a resource in case of war. But she pays these subsidies and keeps up this great military force, and occupies these ports all over the globe, and keeps these subject nations under her feet for two things:

First. That the world may be the market of England; that English manufacturers may make its goods; and,

Second. That English merchants are to make its exchanges and English bankers settle its accounts. They mean that whatever one nation sells to another England shall charge one commission to the buyer and another commission to the seller for making the exchange.

I do not now propose to discuss the second topic. If we can hold to our manufacturing independence, and get our place in the markets of North and South America we will try conclusions with her as to that. I wish to speak of the other.

Vast as are the odds in favor of England, it is, I believe, no presumption, no idle boast, when we declare that the well-paid labor of America, now forever free, hereafter to wield in its own interest the vast forces of its own government, can succeed in wresting from her her commercial supremacy.

> Here the free spirit of mankind, at length,
> Throws its last fetters off; and who shall place
> A limit to the giant's unchained strength,
> Or curb his swiftness in the forward race?

The wisest brain in England that in our time has busied itself with the political problems of the future has foreseen and declared the issue of this conflict. Mr. Gladstone, in an elaborate article written by him in 1878, makes this prediction about the commercial future of England and the United States:

> It is she alone who at a coming time can and probably will wrest from us that commercial primacy. We have no title. I have no inclination to murmur at the prospect. If she acquires it she will make the acquisition by the right of the strongest; but in this instance the strongest means the best. She will probably become what we are now, the head servant in the great household of the world, the employer of all employed, because her service will be the most and the ablest. We have no more title against her than Venice, or Genoa, or Holland has had against us.

Now, Mr. President, a great American inventor and engineer asks the co-operation of Congress in a plan which, if it succeed, will go far, very far, toward accomplishing the desire of the people. Certainly his proposal may well receive serious consideration. If it be practicable it solves a difficult international problem; it shakes off all the fetters of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty; it brings Asia and South America close to our own Atlantic ports; it brings California and Oregon closer to Europe; it makes a vast saving, and gives a vast advantage to American commerce; it gives us a short sea passage, and with a ship-canal across Florida, a passage in large part inside and land-locked around our whole coast from the Saint Johns to Puget Sound; and it can not fail to draw closely the bonds of intercourse with the neighboring Republic of Mexico.

This is not the proposition of an adventurer. Captain Eads stakes upon this undertaking a fame gained by two of the greatest and most difficult engineering achievements of the age. It has been his wonderful good fortune to render an important service to two of the greatest routes of commerce on the continent. He bridged the Mississippi so that it ceased to be an impediment in the transit of freight and passengers from the East to the vast regions lying westward and southwestward. He compelled the mighty current to clear from its own channel the obstacles which in ages it had itself formed, so that the products of the valley States might thereafter pass southward unobstructed to the Atlantic. The jetties at its mouth have given the Mississippi as another inland sea to the possessions of man. Each of these enterprises was bold and original almost to audacity. Each encountered in its inception the adverse judgment of great scientific authority. Each met a bitterness of hostility which success has hardly silenced. Each stands to-day among those victories of peace, not less renowned than war, which has conferred so much glory upon our own country and our own age.

A very high authority, London Engineering, said of the Saint Louis bridge just before its completion:

> Our present requirement being to select some example of the most highly developed type of bridge-building of the present day, we have no difficulty in passing before ourselves in mental review the different works now in progress throughout the world, and we have still less difficulty in electing as our example the magnificent arched bridge now almost completed by Captain Eads at Saint Louis. In that work the alliance between the theorist and the practical man is complete. The highest powers of modern analysis have been called into requisition for the determination of the strains, the resources of the manufacturer have been taxed to the utmost in production of material and perfection of workmanship, and the ingenuity of the builder has been alike taxed to put the unprecedented mass into place. In short, brain power has been called into action in every department. One long-sighed-for result—the welding of the theoretical and practical man into one homogeneous mass, without which no truly great undertaking could possibly be carried out—has at last been attained.

I well remember when during my early service in the House of Representatives I saw Captain Eads as he left the room of the Committee on Railways and Canals, almost crushed in spirit before a report of that committee, based on the report of nineteen out of the twenty members of the Board of Engineers that the jetty scheme was wholly impracticable. I account it among the chief good fortunes of my life that I had something to do with reversing that verdict. Northern abolitionist as I was, I had some claim to share in his triumph and in that of the chief commercial city of the South when, on the 10th day of July, 1879, Capt. W. R. Brown, United States inspecting officer, telegraphed this certificate to the Secretary of War:

> I certify that on the 8th day of July, 1879, there was a channel at the mouth of South Pass, through the jetties, 30 feet in depth, without regard to width, measured at average flood tide, and extending from a wider and deeper channel in South Pass to deeper water in the Gulf of Mexico.

This is one of the most notable documents in American civil history. It is the official evidence of the removal of the last obstacle to the complete realization of the desire which has possessed the people of the great valley of the West from its earliest settlement, from a time anterior to the formation of the Constitution or the treaty of Independence. This desire was for a free, unobstructed passage to the Gulf of the commerce of the center of the continent. The jealousy of the people of that valley and the regions whose waters find their way through it to the Gulf lest the interest of the Atlantic States might lead them to resist the accomplishment of this desire was for generations an important power in our political history. It threatened the Union in the administration of Washington. It forms an important topic in his farewell address. It aided largely in hurling John Quincy Adams from power. It came to an end and disappeared only when the first laden steamship, driving 30 feet of water, passed through the jetties of Captain Eads.

It is now proposed to construct a railway across the Isthmus of Tehuantepec with docks and elevators at each terminus capable of raising laden vessels of the largest size and transporting them from ocean to ocean. The genius of the American engineer is about to make real the prophecy of the greatest English poet of modern times, uttered seventy-five years ago:

> Lo, ships, from seas by nature barred,
> Mount along ways by men prepared,
> Along far-stretching vales, whose streams
> Seek other seas, their canvas gleams;
> And busy towns grow up on coasts
> Thronged yesterday by airy ghosts.

Mr. President, I believe this bill and the scheme which it inaugurates to be practicable. I do not propose, however, to enter upon the discussion of the mechanical part of this question. Science is certainly competent to settle this question in advance. I am willing to take it on the authority of the greatest of American engineers if that stood alone. I am willing to trust the investigation of the capitalists who are behind it, and the evidence of the great engineer, Sir Edward J. Reed, and of numerous American engineers.

It is impossible, within the reasonable limits of these remarks, to cite all the eminent authorities, both practical and scientific, who approve the plan of the ship railway. Many of them are quoted in the report of the Committee on Commerce. Many others have been added since the committee finished its work. At their head is the distinguished name of Sir Edward J. Reed, K. C. B., late chief constructor of the British navy. He is supported by Mr. Barnaby, the present chief constructor of the British navy; by Mr. John, for many years scientific adviser of Lloyds; by Mr. Fowler, lately president of the Institute of Engineers in England; by Mr. Luyster, engineer-in-chief of the Liverpool docks; by Mr. Williams, an eminent civil engineer; by Mr. Clark, chief assistant of Stevenson in building the bridge at the Menai Straits; by Emmerson, Murgatroyd & Co., constructors of the great hydraulic docks at Malta and Bombay; by William Pearce, builder of many of the largest and finest steamers afloat; and by numerous American engineers and constructors, including Hartt, Fernald, Suter, Fuertes, Gillmore, Beauregard, Whitcomb, Barkley, and Corttell. Of all these the testimony is quoted or reported in full by the committee.

There is certainly scarcely any matter in which the experience of mankind is greater than in the capacity of laden ships to bear every kind of strain to which external forces can subject them. The weight of the ship and the additional straining force of wind and wave which the ship encounters at sea and which in this railroad it will escape are capable of exact calculation.

This enterprise is important, as has already been so eloquently urged by my honorable friend from Louisiana [Mr. GIBSON], in its effect to bring so closely together the relations between this country and the neighboring Republic of Mexico.

I wish for one to disclaim what I was sorry to hear the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] say on Saturday, any pretension on our part that the treaty of 1853, the Gadsden treaty, is now in force so far as to afford any claim upon our part to enforce an obligation upon Mexico against her will. I think that suggestion will be received with great anxiety by Mexico, and I think it is quite inconsistent with the suggestion which comes from the same quarter, that the Clayton-Bulwer treaty has expired and become ineffective by length of time.

But we get here a strong and substantial power whose neutrality no government can intrude upon without flagrant violation of the law of nations, and without shocking the public opinion of mankind, for the protection of this route of commerce in war and in peace. We can ourselves come to the aid of that power for the protection of this route at each end and along its whole course by routes wholly inland, not liable to be blockaded or interfered with by hostile fleets. The troops which we shall need to defend it in alliance with Mexico can be stationed on land and in a healthy climate.

Compare all this with the condition of the route of the Nicaragua Canal. I conceive the chief objection to the Nicaragua Canal scheme is that it is a source of weakness and not of strength in case of war with our great rival, the only power from whom we have in the near future any possibility of apprehension, unless we are prepared to commit ourselves to the policy of maintaining a navy equal to hers. There is no land access to the Nicaragua Canal when it is built except over mountains nearly impassable and through lands whose climate as well as whose natural condition make the passage of troops impracticable. There is no possibility of maintaining a considerable military force on that spot, and there is no possibility of preventing a blockade by a navy like that of England or even like that of a smaller power except by a naval force sufficient to break that blockade.

The achievement of this enterprise, if it be practicable, relieves us utterly from this necessity. It relieves us from the entanglement of the question growing out of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty.

I am not prepared to accept the guidance of those gentlemen who 2 guidance I accept so cheerfully in many cases, who claim either that the Clayton-Bulwer treaty is not in force, or who claim that being in force it is for the interest of the United States to disregard it. It is said that the route from the Atlantic to the Pacific should become a part of the American coast line, but it is absolutely impossible in the nature of things that a canal either at Nicaragua or Panama can be practically or in effect a part of the coast line of the United States unless we are prepared to conquer and absorb the intervening territory between us and where it lies.

As to the two reasons which are urged here why the Clayton-Bulwer treaty shall no longer be considered in force, to wit, the occupation of a portion of the territory by England at the Balize in violation of that treaty, and the fact that it referred to a particular canal then expected to be built at once, which has fallen through, it is enough to say that those two propositions are encountered by the declaration of the American Government through its Secretary of State long after the agreement was held to be existing. From Clayton himself and his immediate successors, through Mr. Seward down to the time of Mr. Blaine, the American Government has estopped itself from asserting either of those two reasons in any diplomatic discussion.

But I go further. I hold that the theory of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty as applied to the spot where it is proposed to build the Nicaragua Canal is the only theory consistent with the true interests of the United States. Mr. Clayton and General Taylor, in whose administration he was the Secretary of State, came to the conclusion that the defense of that spot as a possession of this country was totally impracticable in time of war, and therefore they desired to remove the isthmus as a barrier between the two oceans, as they would remove a rock or a shoal in mid-ocean, if such existed and were a danger to commerce. Then they proposed to call to the aid of the United States and Great Britain all the civilized maritime nations of the globe to guarantee the neutrality of that transit and a zone on each side, to be called the neutral zone, both on the Pacific and the Atlantic side.

I do not conceive that to be either a violation of the Monroe doctrine or a departure from the true American policy, as it had been declared by every successive administration from Washington down. As late as the time of the death of Mr. Clayton, which took place in 1856, Mr. Seward spoke in this way about the theory upon which the Clayton-Bulwer treaty was founded. I ask the Secretary to read, on the two hundred and ninety-eighth page of the memoir of John M. Clayton, the passage I have marked from the speech of Mr. Seward in eulogy of Mr. Clayton shortly after his death.

The Secretary read as follows:

> A very distinguished French savan (Mons. Ampère) begins his journal as a traveler with an account of his visit at the World's Fair, held, I think, in 1852, in London, and he pronounces that great exhibition of the industry of so many nations as the first universal fact in the history of the human race. He egregiously erred. That great event was neither the most important, nor was it the first, of the universal facts which have transpired in our own day. The first universal fact—a fact indicating an ultimate union of the nations—was the Clayton and Bulwer treaty, that treaty which provided for the opening of passages of communication and connection across the Central American Isthmus to the growing civilization of the western and modern, and the declining civilization of the eastern and ancient world. It was the felicitous good fortune of John M. Clayton, not more than his genius and ability, that enabled him to link his own fame with that great and stupendous transaction, and so to win for himself the eternal gratitude of future generations, not only in his own country, but throughout the great divisions of the earth. Whatever difficulties have hitherto attended the execution of that great treaty, whatever future difficulties may attend it, the treaty itself is the bow of promise of peace, harmony, and concord to all nations, as it is an imperishable monument to the fame of him whose worth we celebrate, and whose loss we deplore.

Mr. HOAR. On a previous page the Secretary will find marked a statement by Mr. Bayard, then a Senator from Delaware, and father of the present Secretary of State.

The Secretary read as follows:

> During the period which he held the position of Secretary of State he negotiated in April, 1850, the treaty with Great Britain commonly called the Clayton-Bulwer treaty. That treaty was ratified by more than three-fourths of the Senate; and I may be permitted to say that had it been carried out according to the plain and obvious import of its language, would have effected all which this country should desire in relation to the territory of Central America, and the safety and security of an interoceanic communication; and if difficulties have since arisen, either from the aggressions of the power with which it was contracted, or a failure on our part to insist in the first instance on its due execution, the fault, if any, rests not with him, as no action of that power contravening its proper construction occurred during the short time which he retained the office of Secretary of State after the ratification of the treaty.

Mr. HOAR. Those two extracts, from speeches made by two of the most distinguished statesmen of their day, one of the North and one of the South, state, as I believe, what was then nearly the unanimous judgment of the American people long after the transactions occurred which have been sometimes set up as indicating that the force of that treaty had expired. The statesmanship of that day was brought to this practical question: Is it better for the United States to have water communication from ocean to ocean, an open sea, as neutral as Boston or New York Harbor, as free from any hostile intrusion against us, to the maintenance of which the whole force of the civilized world shall be pledged; or is it for the interest of the United States to maintain amid the swamps, the malaria, and tropic heats, and tropic damps of that territory, more than a thousand miles from our southern border, an army, a fortress, and a naval force sufficient to cope with the entire navy of Great Britain? The reasons which operated then seem to me to be in force now; and it is one of the great and principal advantages of the present scheme that it entirely relieves us from the difficulties which the Clayton-Bulwer treaty, considered as in force, would impose upon us on one side, or which if the Clayton-Bulwer treaty be treated as abrogated would press upon us on the other.

Mr. EDMUNDS. With the consent of my friend from Massachusetts, I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. VEST. I hope not, Mr. President.

Mr. CULLOM. It is a little early.

Mr. EDMUNDS. No, it is not early. It is half after 4.

Mr. VEST. I want to finish the bill, if possible, to-night.

Mr. EDMUNDS. We can not finish it to-night.

Mr. VEST. We will see whether we can.

Mr. EDMUNDS. We shall see.

Mr. VEST. I hope it will be finished to-night. There will be an appropriation bill to-morrow. I call for the yeas and nays on the motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Pending the motion, the Chair will announce the appointment of a committee of conference on the part of the Senate.

Mr. VEST. Very well.

Mr. HOAR. No, I have not concluded.

Mr. VEST. I beg the Senator's pardon; I thought he had concluded his speech. If the Senator desires, the bill may go over until to-morrow.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

MICAH FRENCH.

Mr. ZACH. TAYLOR asked unanimous consent that the Committee on Pensions have leave to withdraw the report made at the last session on the bill (H. R. 7928) granting a pension to Micah French.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

SECTION 5352, REVISED STATUTES.

The SPEAKER. The Chair appoints as one of the managers on the part of the House in the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (S. 10) to amend an act entitled "An act to amend section 5352 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, in reference to bigamy, and for other purposes," approved March 22, 1882, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HAMMOND], in place of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. TUCKER].

PUBLIC BUILDING, DENVER, COLO.

Mr. SYMES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (S. 1592) to change the limit of appropriation for the public building at Denver, Colo., and that the same be put upon its passage.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the act entitled "An act for the erection of a public building at Denver, Colo.," approved May 8, 1882, be amended by making the limit for said building $575,000, and that sum is hereby fixed as the limit of cost thereof.

SEC. 2. That the Supervising Architect and the officers of the United States Government having charge of the erection of public buildings are authorized and required to be governed by the limitation hereby prescribed in making plans and contracts for the erection of said building.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I think we ought to have some decent and good reason assigned for changing the limit fixed in the original bill. I would like to know what the original limit was, and what the reason is for changing it.

Mr. SYMES. I shall be glad to state the reason, Mr. Speaker. The original limit was $300,000. The ground cost $60,000—that is, the Government paid $60,000 toward its purchase, and the citizens of Denver made up $30,000, so that it actually cost $90,000. That ground if sold at auction in Denver to-day would bring from $150,000 to $175,000. Denver has more than doubled in population since the ground was purchased. The public business of Denver has doubled since that time. The foundation of this building is constructed of brick, against the protest of many of the citizens of Denver. They insisted it ought to be of stone.

The first story of the superstructure, a non-fire-proof building, is brick wall with cheap sandstone facing from the mountains. Many of the people there protested that it should be granite. This building is surrounded by other buildings, some of them since erected, costing over half a million dollars, and five stories high or more. The Supervising Architect and the Secretary of the Treasury state, as their reason for suspending the work on this building under the $300,000 limit, that the increase will give 24,000 square feet of room, whereas under the present limit there will be but 10,000 square feet; and there will be needed more room than they will now obtain by the increase for the public business. Last year there was paid into the revenue of the United States in the city of Denver nearly $600,000 net. Under the present limit the building would be completed with the brick wall, the brick foundation, and basement wall, and the sandstone facing, and changed to fire-proof; and the principal reason for the change, as the architect says, is that if you do not make this a fire-proof building it is liable to be burned down by the destruction of the adjoining building, an opera-house, which cost $750,000; and by extending the two wings in accordance with the plans now perfected there will be an increase of over 13,000 square feet. The reports of the Senate and House committees show all these facts in detail.

Mr. Speaker, is this a sufficient explanation?

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Oh, I see; they do things in a large way out there in Denver. I did not propose to object; but I would like to have the reasons which the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. SYMES] has so eloquently given spread on the record as a justification of the change of limit. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. Is there any objection to the present consideration of the bill by the House? The Chair hears none.

The House proceeded to the consideration of the bill; which was ordered to a third reading, was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SYMES moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT LA FAYETTE, IND.

Mr. WARD, of Indiana. I ask unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (S. 531) to provide for the erection of a public building at La Fayette, Ind.; and that the bill be now put on its passage.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to purchase a site and cause to be erected at the city of La Fayette, county of Tippecanoe, in the State of Indiana, a suitable building for the use and accommodation of the post-office and other Government offices in said city, with fire-proof vaults extending to each story, the site, and the building thereon, when completed according to plans and specifications to be previously made and approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, not to exceed the cost of $100,000; and the sum of $75,000 is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the purchase of said site and completion of said building: Provided, That there shall be an open space of not less than 40 feet upon every side of said building, including streets and alleys; and that no part of said sum shall be expended until a valid title to said site shall be vested in the United States, nor until the State of Indiana shall cede to the United States jurisdiction over the same for all purposes excepting the administration of the criminal laws of said State and the service of any civil process therein, and relinquish and release its right to tax said site and the property thereon belonging to the United States.

The amendments reported by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds were read, as follows:

In lines 11 and 12 strike out "one hundred" and insert "fifty," so as to make the limit of cost $50,000.

In line 12 strike out "seventy-five" and insert "fifty," so as to make the amount of appropriation $50,000.

At the end of the bill add the following:

"Nor shall any site be purchased until estimates for the erection of a building which will furnish sufficient accommodations for the transaction of the public business, and which shall not exceed in cost the balance of the sum herein limited after the site shall have been purchased and paid for, shall have been approved by the Secretary of the Treasury; and no purchase of site nor plan for said building shall be approved by the Secretary of the Treasury involving an expenditure exceeding the said sum of $50,000 for site and building."

The SPEAKER. Is there any objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. STORM. I ask for the reading of the report, the right to object being reserved.

The report (by Mr. OWEN) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the bill (S. 531) providing for the erection of a public building at La Fayette, Ind., report as follows:

Strike out the words "one hundred," in line 11, and insert "fifty."

Strike out the words "seventy-five," in line 12, and insert "fifty."

At the end of the bill, after the words "United States," add the following:

"Nor shall any site be purchased until estimates for the erection of a building which will furnish sufficient accommodations for the transaction of the public business, and which shall not exceed in cost the balance of the sum herein limited after the site shall have been purchased and paid for, shall have been approved by the Secretary of the Treasury; and no purchase of site nor plan for said building shall be approved by the Secretary of the Treasury involving an expenditure exceeding the said sum of $50,000 for site and building."

And, thus amended, we recommend the passage of the bill.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Mr. Speaker, let us have some statement showing the necessity for this bill, as the report fails to state the facts of the case.

Mr. WARD, of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, this bill, as amended, provides for an appropriation of only $50,000. La Fayette is a city with a population of 25,000. It is the chief city between Indianapolis and Chicago. It is prosperous in every way. The gross annual receipts of the post-office at that place amount to nearly $25,000. In short, Mr. Speaker and gentlemen, La Fayette is the best city in Indiana. It is better than any in Illinois or in the entire Northwest. It has the best Representative, and withal the most modest, in the Forty-ninth Congress, and this is the first time I have ever asked any personal favor of this House. Now, gentlemen, let this bill go through. [Laughter.] You will all feel better and sleep better if you do. You probably know that my constituents are, and have been for the last four years, grieving on account of my absence from home, in-so-much, indeed, that they have concluded to send another fellow here in my place after the 4th of next March. Then the mourning will be here instead of there, and it will be a great consolation for you to reflect that you granted this my first and last request of a personal nature. [Laughter and applause.]

There being no objection, the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union was discharged from the further consideration of the bill; and the House proceeded to consider the same.

The amendments reported by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to a third reading, was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. WARD, of Indiana, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Now let us have the regular order.

INDEX OF CLAIMS.

Mr. IKE H. TAYLOR, from the Committee on Accounts, submitted the following privileged report; which was read:

The Committee on Accounts, to whom was referred the letter from the Clerk of the House providing for continuing the index of claims referred to the Court of Claims under the Bowman act, to the end of the Forty-ninth Congress, together with the consolidated index of Southern Claims Commission reports, report the same back to the House with the accompanying resolution instructing the Committee on Appropriations to provide in the deficiency bill for the employment of a clerk at the same compensation paid per diem committee clerks, until the first regular meeting of the Fiftieth Congress, to continue the index of claims referred under the Bowman act; to re-examine and compare the manuscript copy of Southern Claims Commission cases with the lists furnished the House of Representatives by the Southern Claims Commission at intervals during the period from 1870 to 1880, and if the printing of the said document is ordered, to insure accuracy, the committee recommend that the said clerk shall carefully compare the proof-sheets with the manuscript copy.

An investigation by the committee develops the fact that the Southern Claims Commission, during its official existence from 1870 to 1880, had before it 22,298 claims, amounting in money value to the very large sum of $60,258,150.44, of which sum $4,636,920.69 was paid by the Government, leaving claims to the amount of $55,621,229.75, now in the files of the House, subject to reference to the Committee on War Claims and the transfer under the so-called Bowman act to the Court of Claims by the said committee.

Such a mass of claims demands a concise and thorough index. The present condition of the Claims Commission's records make necessary an investigation of each of ten reports in order to ascertain the condition of any particular claim. The purpose of the index proposed is to consolidate these ten reports so as to make only one such examination necessary and to complete the history of the work of the Southern Claims Commission.

The committee are of opinion that this work is of great importance, and therefore report the following resolution, and recommend its adoption, namely:

"Resolved, That the Committee on Appropriations be instructed to insert in the deficiency bill for the present fiscal year the following paragraph, namely:

"To enable the Clerk of the House to continue and complete the index of claims reported to Congress by the Commissioners of Claims under the act of March 3, 1871, and by the Court of Claims under the so-called 'Bowman act' of March 3, 1883, such sum as may be necessary to pay a clerk from and after March 4, 1887, the same compensation paid per diem committee clerks, such employment to extend beyond December 5, 1887."

The SPEAKER. The question is on the adoption of the resolution reported by the committee.

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. IKE H. TAYLOR moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

RIGHT OF WAY THROUGH PUBLIC LANDS, UTAH.

Mr. PAYSON rose.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MCMILLIN] demanded the regular order of business.

Mr. PAYSON. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MCMILLIN] withdraws his demand for the regular order of business, and desired me to say so.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will then recognize the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON].

Mr. PAYSON. I move to discharge the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 5959) granting a right of way through certain public lands of the United States in the Territory of Utah, &c., and that the same be passed with the amendments reported from the Committee on the Public Lands.

The SPEAKER. The bill and amendments will be reported.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That a right of way is hereby granted to the Salt Lake and Fort Douglas Railway, a corporation duly organized under the laws of the Territory of Utah, across the Fort Douglas Military Reservation, by a route surveyed and laid down on a properly certified map, a copy of which is now on file with the Secretary of War, which location has been submitted to and approved by the post commander and the commander of the department. Said right of way hereby granted shall not exceed 100 feet in width through said reservation, except where side-tracts, spurs, turn-tables, or stations are located or to be located; and at such points the right of way shall not exceed 200 feet on each side of the main track, and not exceeding 2,000 feet in length: Provided, That an additional right of way is hereby granted for such spurs, sidings, turn-tables, and stations as are deemed necessary from time to time in order to transport the freights and materials to and from and across said reservation; such further locations not now laid down on said map to be made under the direction of the post commander, and to be approved by the Secretary of War: Provided further, That the regulations for operating said railroad within the limits of said reservation shall be approved by the Secretary of War: Provided also, That the said railway company will do nothing or cause anything to be done that will in any way lessen the quantity of water or render the water impure that flows from Red Butte cañon, upon which the supply of Fort Douglas depends.

The amendments of the committee were read, as follows:

In line 27, after the word "water," insert "except to such extent as may necessarily result from the use for engine purposes;" also by adding the following to the bill:

SEC. 2. That the grant contained in the first section of this act is made upon the express condition that the Salt Lake Rock Company, its successors and assigns, shall first convey to the United States a title in fee-simple, free and clear of all incumbrance, to the approval of the Attorney-General of the United States, of the following lands, water, and water-rights in Salt Lake County, Territory of Utah, to wit: Sections numbered 25 and 35, township numbered 1, range numbered 1 east, and section numbered 19, township numbered 1, range numbered 2 east, with all the water and water rights thereon, excepting and reserving to the said company, its successors and assigns, all stone, brick-clay, and other building materials, and all minerals in and upon said lands, and the right to enter thereon and prospect for, develop, quarry, and remove such stone, brick-clay, and other building materials, and all such minerals, with the right to locate and construct all necessary railroads, wagon-roads, and trails to give the said company the benefit and enjoyment of the rights reserved to it, and its successors and assigns, by this act, and also, in addition thereto, the right of use of so much water as may be necessary for engine purposes; and the said reservations are hereby confirmed as against the United States: Provided, however, That the rights reserved shall not be construed in any way whatever to impair, either in quality or purity or in quantity, the water or water-supply in and upon or flowing through and from Red Butte Cañon, except to the extent of the use for engine purposes as hereinbefore provided.

SEC. 3. That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed, upon the perfection of the title to the lands in the second section described in the United States, as therein specified, to pay to the said Salt Lake Rock Company, its successors or assigns, in consideration therefor, the sum of $20,000; and there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, such sum of money for the payment of the same.

SEC. 4. That the Salt Lake and Fort Douglas Railway, specified in the first section of this act, its successors and assigns, in accepting the grant to them in such first section made, binds itself, its successors and assigns, to make no higher rate or charge for transportation for the Government than it makes for like service to individuals, and to furnish cars for the transportation of Government supplies and stores required at Fort Douglas, when required so to do, upon reasonable notice from the officer or officers desiring such transportation.

SEC. 5. That the following-described lands in said Salt Lake County, in the Territory of Utah, to wit: Section numbered 24 and the east half of section numbered 26, township numbered 1, range numbered 1 east, and the south half of section numbered 18, the west half of section numbered 20, and the north half of section numbered 30, in township numbered 1, range numbered 2 east, are hereby reserved from sale or other disposition, for the use of the United States, to protect and preserve the water-supply of Fort Douglas, in said county; but there is hereby granted to the Salt Lake Rock Company, its successors and assigns, the same rights and privileges, with the same limitations, in and upon the lands so reserved, as are reserved to such company in the lands specified in the second section of this act.

Amend the title so as to read: "A bill granting a right of way through certain public lands of the United States in the Territory of Utah, and for other purposes."

Mr. MCADOO. Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to call for the regular order of business against the gentleman from Illinois, but we do not have a copy of this bill upon our desks, and I should like to have some explanation of it.

Mr. PAYSON. I can explain, Mr. Speaker, in one moment what is intended to be accomplished by the provisions of this bill, and I think I can do it to the satisfaction of the gentleman from New Jersey.

The military post of Fort Douglas, situated in Utah Territory, about 4 miles distant from Salt Lake City, comprises an area of 4 square miles. Its entire water supply comes from a creek known as Red Butte Creek, which is situated on the lands secured by this bill.

Mr. MCADOO. I know all about Fort Douglas. I have been there.

Mr. PAYSON. The War Department has been endeavoring for years to secure that water supply for the benefit of the post; indeed, it is an imperative necessity. In the present Congress application came from the railway company for permission to locate the line of their road across the military reservation, subject to the approval of the War Department, in order to reach certain quarries of stone situated in Red Butte Cañon, from which the supply of building stone for use in Salt Lake City has been obtained for many years, and from which the supply demanded by the future growth of the city must be obtained. The same may be said of deposits of brick clay in the same locality.

As I have said, the War Department desired to secure this water supply. The military reservation is between the city of Salt Lake and this cañon, and the character of the country is such that it is absolutely impracticable to build a railroad to reach these quarries without crossing the reservation. The gentlemen interested in the Salt Lake Rock Company above Fort Douglas and the company interested in the railway line have come to an agreement, and the Committee on the Public Lands have reported that the right of way asked for may be properly granted to the railroad company under the bill with the proposed amendments.

The War Department and General Sheridan, as well as the post commander, approve the proposition contained in this bill, namely: That the Salt Lake Rock Company owning the land shall deed to the Government 3,000 acres for the sum of $20,000; and the Government shall grant the right of way across the Fort Douglas Military Reservation to enable the railroad company to reach these stone quarries, provided in carrying out this grant of the right of way it shall not be allowed to interfere with the water supply for Fort Douglas. The Committee on the Public Lands have recommended the passage of this bill, and the Committee on Military Affairs have also recommended its passage. At the last session of Congress leading members of the Committee on Appropriations also recommended its passage. And not only these committees have recommended it, but I understand the Secretary of War and the entire personnel of the War Department also approve of the pending measure as it is proposed to be amended.

There was no objection, and the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union was discharged from the further consideration of the bill and amendments.

The amendments were concurred in, and the bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. PAYSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The title of the bill was amended to read as follows:

A bill granting a right of way through certain public lands of the United States in the Territory of Utah, and for other purposes.

POST-OFFICE BUILDING, LYNN, MASS.

On motion of Mr. LOVERING, by unanimous consent, the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union was discharged from the further consideration of the bill (S. 1162) for the erection of a post-office building at Lynn, Mass.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to purchase a site for, and cause to be erected thereon, a suitable building, with fire-proof vaults therein, for the accommodation of the United States post-office at the city of Lynn, Mass. The plans, specifications, and full estimates for said building shall be previously made and approved according to law, and shall not exceed for the site and building complete the sum of $100,000: Provided, That the site shall leave the building unexposed to danger from fire in adjacent buildings by an open space of not less than 40 feet, including streets and alleys, and no money appropriated for this purpose shall be available until a valid title to the site for said building shall be vested in the United States, nor until the State of Massachusetts shall have ceded to the United States exclusive jurisdiction over the same during the time the United States shall be or remain the owner thereof.

There was no objection, and the bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. LOVERING moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. STORM. I demand the regular order.

Mr. HISCOCK. I wish the gentleman would let me move the consideration of this bill. I ask unanimous consent to put it upon its passage.

Mr. STORM. Is it a public building bill?

Mr. HISCOCK. No, sir.

Mr. STORM. I withdraw the demand.

Mr. SWOPE. I renew it.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the title of the bill called up by the gentleman from New York.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 2533) for the relief of E. Remington & Sons.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania insist upon the demand for the regular order?

Mr. HISCOCK. I hope the gentleman will let me have the consideration of this bill. It will take but a few moments.

Mr. SWOPE. I insist upon the demand.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the call of committees for reports.

WILLIAM ERVIN.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I submit a privileged report from a committee of conference.

The SPEAKER. The report will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 542) for the relief of William Ervin, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House of Representatives recede from its amendment to the Senate bill.

JAMES D. RICHARDSON,
JAMES T. JOHNSTON,
JOHN J. KLEINER,
Managers on the part of the House.

JOHN C. SPOONER,
J. N. DOLPH,
J. K. JONES,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The statement accompanying the report is as follows:

The managers on the part of the House have agreed to the foregoing conference report for the reason that not to do so amounts to a denial of justice to the claimant. The bill of the Senate makes an appropriation direct to pay the claim in this case, while the bill as amended by the House refers the claim to the Court of Claims for investigation. The three main witnesses relied upon by claimant to establish his demand are now dead, and their proof can not be had in the Court of Claims. The proof is clear and irrefragable that the cattle were taken by Colonel Jennison's regiment and used for food for the United States Army; that they were worth the sum allowed in the bill of the Senate; that claimant was a loyal man residing in the State of Kansas, and that claimant has not been paid. The chief objection made to the passage of the bill of the Senate when same was under consideration in the House was that the claim was an old one, and its payment had not been pressed. The proof clearly shows that claimant began the prosecution of his claim very early after the close of the war, placing it in the hands of his attorneys in the city of Washington. The letter of these attorneys, dated April 30, on file in the case, shows this fact. The delay should not be considered fatal to the claim, as the claimant resided after the war in the State of Texas, was quite poor, and could not come to Washington to prosecute his claim. The managers, therefore, on the part of the House, recommend concurrence in the conference report.

Mr. SPRINGER. I want to state one fact in connection with this case before action is taken upon it. When it was reported from the Committee of the Whole House, about a week or ten days ago, I had moved in committee to strike out all after the enacting clause of the Senate bill, and to insert a provision referring it to the Court of Claims under the Bowman act to ascertain the facts. That amendment was agreed to, and the bill reported to the House, which adopted the amendment. It went to the Senate in that shape; but the Senate disagreed to the House amendment, and a committee of conference was ordered, which, after considering the matter, now recommend that the House recede from its amendment, the effect of which will pass the bill as it originally came from the Senate, appropriating the full amount to this party without going to the Court of Claims either under the Bowman act or otherwise. The claim is for about $7,000, and originated before the war.

Mr. PERKINS. What has satisfied the conference committee that the claim is right?

Mr. SPRINGER. I was not a member of the conference committee, and cannot answer the question. The gentleman from Tennessee can. It is a claim that originated before the war.

Mr. SAYERS. Originated during the war.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] has stated substantially what appears in the statement accompanying the conference report. The fact is the Senate passed the bill during the first session of the Forty-ninth Congress. A similar bill was pending in the House, and was favorably reported by the Committee on War Claims—unanimously reported. After that report was made the Senate passed this bill, which came before the House for consideration, and, as stated in the report, upon motion of the gentleman from Illinois, all after the enacting clause was stricken out, and there was inserted a provision sending the claim to the Court of Claims. The Committee on War Claims was satisfied with the justice of the claim. The citizen whose property was taken lived in Kansas and lost the cattle for which the claim was made; which were used to feed Colonel Jennison's regiment. He commenced the prosecution of the claim in 1867, and has been endeavoring to secure the settlement of it ever since.

Now, the committee of conference concluded it was wiser and better to take the Senate bill making the appropriation than to have a failure of legislation upon the subject, because they believed that to send the case to the Court of Claims would amount to a failure of legislation and a denial of justice. The three leading witnesses, Colonel Jennison, the captain, and the lieutenant or quartermaster, who testified in the case, are all dead, as I am informed, and hence there are no witnesses to substantiate the claim in the Court of Claims. The committee thought, therefore, as the claim had been fully proven by the testimony of these witnesses, as the man was loyal and lived in a loyal State—Kansas—as he furnished this beef to the army for the use of the soldiers who needed it, that he ought to have compensation. The committee find that a reasonable price is charged for the beef, and they therefore recommend the passage of the bill. I know nothing more of it than that.

Mr. MORRILL. Let me ask the gentleman from Tennessee a question. Did not Colonel Jennison, while living, certify to the fact that this beef was taken by his order and used by the troops?

Mr. RICHARDSON. Yes, sir.

Mr. MORRILL. And certified under oath?

Mr. RICHARDSON. Yes, sir; his deposition is on file before the Committee on War Claims to that effect.

Mr. RANNEY. Let me ask why was it not allowed?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I will yield to the gentleman for a question in a moment. The cause of the delay in the payment of this claim, as I understand it, Mr. Speaker, was because Colonel Jennison—and I did not know the man at all——

Mr. MORRILL. I knew him very well.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Was absent from Kansas for a number of years after the war, in a distant State, possibly California. The gentleman from Kansas will know whether this is true or not.

Mr. MORRILL. I know the facts.

Mr. RICHARDSON. And this claimant, who was very poor, after the war emigrated to Texas, and was unable to procure Colonel Jennison's testimony or the testimony of the other officers, which accounts for the delay.

I now yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts for a question.

Mr. RANNEY. You have already answered the question I desired to ask.

Mr. PERKINS. I have no disposition to oppose the claim, but I will suggest that for years Colonel Jennison was one of the most conspicuous characters in the State of Kansas. He was a member of the Legislature of the State; his whereabouts was known to all Kansas people, and I think to the claim agents here in Washington who were engaged in prosecuting claims against the Government; and the fact that for years the claim was pending, and no effort made by these people to obtain his testimony is a suspicious circumstance to me. I know nothing of the claim itself, not having been on the committee that investigated it; but I call attention to these facts, which I do know, and then if the House is satisfied with the bill, I am content.

Mr. MORRILL. I desire to say in answer to my colleague [Mr. PERKINS] that I was intimately acquainted with Colonel Jennison and also with Lieutenant Tanner, who took this beef; I served in the regiment. The colonel swears that he ordered Lieutenant Tanner to take the beef, and Lieutenant Tanner swears that he took it under the order of Colonel Jennison, not in the field of active operations, but a hundred miles off, near Emporia, in the State of Kansas, and he also swears that the beef was used for the command. Colonel Jennison's affidavit is on file. He was absent from the State of Kansas a number of years afterward, but at the time this claim was first presented, in 1867, they secured his affidavit and filed it. Lieutenant Tanner made a like affidavit, stating that his men took the beef and that it was used for the troops.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Having been a member of that regiment, can you testify that you ate any of this particular beef? [Laughter.]

Mr. MORRILL. I can not say as to the particular beef.

Mr. BUCHANAN. But you know that the boys got the beef.

Mr. MORRILL. Yes; I know that they got the beef, and Lieutenant Tanner and Colonel Jennison swear to that fact.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Then let us pay for it.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The conference report was then agreed to.

Mr. RICHARDSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the report was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. NEECE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. 1336) to authorize the construction of a bridge over Bayou Barnard, in the State of Mississippi;

A bill (H. R. 3110) directing the Secretary of War to amend the record of Harrison Dewey;

A bill (H. R. 5775) for the relief of James M. McKamey;

A bill (H. R. 6046) for the relief of H. C. Wilkey; and

A bill (H. R. 4839) for the relief of the personal representatives of E. P. McNeal, deceased.

E. REMINGTON & SONS.

Mr. HISCOCK. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SWOPE] has withdrawn his demand for the regular order, and I now ask unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (S. 2533) for the relief of E. Remington & Sons, and that it be put upon its passage.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized to adjust the claims of E. Remington & Sons for drawback on arms exported by them in the years 1879 and 1880 without the filing of drawback entries thereof at the time of shipment; and that there shall be allowed and paid to said E. Remington & Sons, out of the appropriation to pay drawbacks made by the act of June 16, 1880, the sum of $5,672.15, or so much thereof as shall be found due, in settlement of such claims, less 10 per cent. thereof, as provided by section 3019 of the Revised Statutes.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Will the gentleman please explain why this legislation is necessary?

Mr. HISCOCK. I will ask to have read a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, which explains the matter.

The Clerk read as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, April 4, 1882.

SIR: I have received the letter of Messrs. E. Remington & Sons, which you referred to this Department, under the date of the 31st ultimo, in regard to their claim for drawback on certain arms exported by them.

The reasons why the claim was not paid in the regular manner were, first, that at the time of the exportation it was the rule of this Department that no drawback could be allowed under section 3019 of the Revised Statutes unless the materials entering into the manufacture of the merchandise were imported within three years from the date of exportation of the manufactured article; and, second, that no drawback entries were filed in these particular cases, the parties alleging, and it is undoubtedly true, that the reason the drawback entries were not filed was that it seemed useless to file such entries in view of the rule, the materials having been imported more than three years. The rule was, however, subsequently revoked by an opinion of the Attorney-General; still, in the absence of the drawback entries, the Department did not feel authorized to waive its general regulations limiting drawback to cases where proper entries had been made.

I am informed that since the passage of the drawback law of 1861 it has been the unvarying rule of this Department to refuse allowance of drawback where entries for exportation were not filed, regardless of the reasons which led to the failure to file such entries. In the case of the Stone and Fleming Manufacturing Company, of the city of New York, a claim for drawback was rejected for the reason that drawback entries were not filed, the clerk of the company who was intrusted with the fees and the duty of making entries having stolen the fees and failed to perform his duty. A bill, H. R. 1982, was introduced in the third session of the Forty-sixth Congress for their relief, and it is understood is now before the Committee on Claims in the United States Senate.

It is suggested that the claim of Messrs. E. Remington & Sons, which is an equitable one, be incorporated in the bill for the relief of the Stone and Fleming Manufacturing Company. Messrs. Remington & Sons have been requested to furnish full details of the claims either to you or to this Department.

Very respectfully,

CHAS. J. FOLGER, Secretary.

Hon. WARNER MILLER, United States Senate.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HISCOCK moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The hour for the consideration of bills called up by committees begins at eighteen minutes after 1 o'clock. The Committee on Expenditures in the Interior Department was passed over on a previous day with the understanding that it should not lose its place. If that committee is now ready to proceed it is entitled to do so.

EFFICIENCY OF GENERAL LAND OFFICE.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. On behalf of the Committee on Expenditures in the Interior Department I call up for present consideration the bill (S. 2877) to promote the efficiency of the General Land Office. I ask that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union be discharged from the further consideration of this bill, and that it be now considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill in the House as in Committee of the Whole?

Mr. SINGLETON. I ask for the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order is proceeding.

Mr. ROGERS. Let us know what the bill is before the question is put upon discharging the Committee of the Whole?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bill will be read.

The Clerk read the bill.

Mr. STORM. As this bill involves an increase of salaries it ought to receive its first consideration in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering this bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Mr. MCMILLIN in the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole for the consideration of the bill (S. 2877) to promote the efficiency of the General Land Office.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. Let the bill be read.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That there shall be in the General Land Office ten principal clerks, chiefs of divisions, to be appointed by the Secretary of the Interior, who shall receive a salary of $2,000 each per annum.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, it ought not to take more than a few minutes to dispose of this bill. I will explain its nature. At the first session of this Congress in the bill providing for the expenses of the General Land Office these clerks were provided for at a salary of $2,000 each. The bill passed the House, went over to the Senate, and there it was non-concurred in and amended so as to have three principal clerks chiefs of division at a salary of $1,800, and the other seven as fourth-class clerks.

Now, this bill has come from the Senate to the House, passed there unanimously. It is recommended by the present Secretary of the Interior and by the Commissioner of the General Land Office, and has been recommended by the Commissioner of the General Land Office and the Secretary of the Interior from General Williamson's time down to the present.

Mr. DUNHAM. Are these clerks in addition to the present force?

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. They are not additional clerks. They are the present clerks allowed by law. But the bill simply fixes their salary at something near that which is allowed to the chiefs of divisions in other Departments of the Government and in the other bureaus of the Interior Department.

I have a statement before me which will give the exact status of this case. I can repeat the substance of it, perhaps, more quickly than I can read it. In all the other Executive Departments of the Government and the other bureaus corresponding to this the chiefs of these divisions receive from $2,250 per annum to $3,500 per annum. This is the only instance in the Departments where an unjust discrimination is made against the chiefs of divisions. And inasmuch as the bill is recommended by the Secretary of the Interior, by the Commissioner of the General Land Office, and has been recommended also by their predecessors, I think we may concede they understand their business fully as well as anybody. I shall now ask for a vote unless some gentleman desires to offer an amendment or desires to be heard.

Mr. STORM. Is there a report?

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. Yes, sir.

Mr. STORM. I should like to have the report read.

The report (by Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa) was read, as follows:

They adopt the Senate report and make it their own, which is as follows:

The attention of Congress has been frequently called to the fact that a number of persons employed in the General Land Office, and who act as chiefs of divisions, receive an inadequate salary considering the character and amount of work required of them. It appears from the following statement that the matter has been heretofore presented in the several reports of the Commissioners of the General Land Office. Your committee therefore recommend the passage of the bill, and append the following statement as a part of this report:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, GENERAL LAND OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., July 17, 1886.

Statement showing recommendations made as to compensation of chiefs of divisions in the General Land Office for the fiscal years 1880 to 1885, inclusive, with remarks of the Commissioners of the General Land Office relative thereto.

1880.—Recommendations and remarks of Hon. J. A. Williamson, Commissioner: Three chiefs of division, at $3,000; five chiefs, at $2,400; and eight assistant chiefs, at $2,000.

Remarks.—The magnitude, the difficulty, and the national importance of the work can hardly be overstated; and it would seem self-evident that it can not be done, and well done, except by able men, and so far no provision at all commensurate with the magnitude of the interests involved has been made.

1881.—Recommendations and remarks of Hon. N. C. McFarland, Commissioner: Three principal clerks and six chiefs of division, at $2,600 per annum.

Remarks.—"I have sought to name the very lowest figures which, in my judgment, would possibly justify a reasonable expectation of retaining what good and competent men are now employed and thoroughly skilled in the business, and of obtaining from the outside a class of ability which the public have a right to expect will be employed to adjust the vast interests committed to this office."

1882.—Recommendations and remarks of Hon. N. C. McFarland, Commissioner: Three principal clerks and seven chiefs of division, at $2,400,

Remarks.—"The three principal clerks and seven chiefs of division have immediate charge and direction of the varied and important work assigned to their respective divisions. The long service of the gentlemen occupying these posts of trust, the magnitude of the labor performed by them, the importance of the duty, and the ability demanded for its discharge, merit the increased compensation asked for. At present they are paid as ordinary clerks of the fourth class, a rate disproportionate to the class of services absolutely required in these positions."

"The attention of Congress has frequently been called to the inadequate remuneration of the important officers of this bureau, and the amount of compensation now estimated for is believed to be within the most moderate limit and no greater than that allowed in corresponding positions in other Departments of the Government."

1883.—Recommendations and remarks of Hon. N. C. McFarland, Commissioner: Three principal clerks and seven chiefs of division, at $2,000 per annum.

Remarks.—"The compensation provided for clerks and employés of the lower grades is reasonable; but the duties which clerks of higher grades are required to perform call for a degree of intelligence and ability that can not be retained in the service, when secured, at the inadequate compensation provided for. The Government needs the best service it can obtain and is able to pay for it, but the Land Office is often unable to retain valuable clerks. The salaries paid in the Land Office are less than in other bureaus and Departments not requiring as great capacity or ability. A transfer has recently been made from an eighteen-hundred-dollar position in this office, requiring professional skill of a high order, to a similar but not more onerous position in another Department where the pay allowed is $2,500. A skilled assistant, whose services were needed, but who could here be paid but $1,600, received $2,000 by a similar transfer."

1884.—Recommendations and remarks of Hon. N. C. McFarland, Commissioner: Eleven chiefs of division, at $2,500 per annum.

Remarks.—The chiefs of division have, respectively, charge of a particular class of work, and of the clerical force employed upon it. They must know generally the rules of the office and the laws governing the land system, the relations of the classes being so intermixed as frequently to involve nearly the whole of them in the consideration of a single case. No higher service is performed by the subordinate officers of any Department, not excepting the Treasury, where the salaries range from $2,250 to $2,750.

1885.—Recommendations and remarks of Hon. William A. J. Sparks, Commissioner: Two chiefs of division at $2,250, and nine chiefs of division at $2,000 per year.

Remarks.—He reiterates the remarks of his predecessor relative to the increased compensation recommended.

In connection with the above, attention is called to the following statement showing compensation paid to chiefs of divisions in State, Treasury, War, and Post-Office Departments, and in other Bureaus of the Interior Department:

STATE DEPARTMENT.

Six chiefs of division, at $2,100 per annum.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT.

Secretary's office.

Three chiefs of division, at $2,750 per annum.
Seven chiefs of division, at $2,500 per annum.
One chief of division, at $2,000 per annum.
Chief Secret Service Division, at $3,500 per annum.
Chief Internal Revenue Agents, at $12 per day.
Chief Special Agents' Division, at $8 per day.

OTHER BUREAUS.

Six chiefs of division, at $2,500 per annum.
Five chiefs of division, at $2,250 per annum.
Four chiefs of division, at $2,200 per annum.
Eleven chiefs of division, at $2,100 per annum.
Thirty-seven chiefs of division, at $2,000 per annum.

WAR DEPARTMENT.

Secretary's Office.

Three chiefs of division, at $2,000 per annum.

POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT.

Two chiefs of division, at $2,250 per annum.
Five chiefs of division, at $2,000 per annum.

INTERIOR DEPARTMENT.

Secretary's office.

Eight chiefs of division, at $2,000 per annum.

Other bureaus.

Twenty-one chiefs of divisions, at $2,000 per annum.
Twenty-six principal examiners (chiefs of division), at $2,400 per annum.

It will be seen from the above that the chiefs of division in the other Executive Departments, and in the other bureaus of the Interior Department, range from $2,000 to $3,500 per annum and the General Land Office is the only Bureau in any Government Department in this city where the chiefs of division are not paid in excess of $1,800 per annum. This is a discrimination without a justification.

In December, 1881, and January, 1882, the United States Senate Committee on Public Lands made an exhaustive examination into the condition of the General Land Office and the work performed therein, and submitted a report thereon (Senate Report No. 362, Forty-seventh Congress, first session). As a result thereof, in the first session Forty-eighth Congress a bill (S. 554) "to promote the efficiency of the General Land Office" was introduced and passed by the Senate; it was submitted to the House of Representatives, read twice therein, and referred to the Committee on the Public Lands, but no action was taken on the same by said committee, and the bill failed to become a law.

Among other provisions in said bill was one for ten "chiefs of division" in the General Land Office, to "receive a salary of $2,250 a year each." During the debate in the Senate relative thereto a communication was read from Hon. H. M. TELLER, then Secretary of the Interior (now United States Senator), transmitting copy of a letter dated January 21, 1884, from Hon. N. C. McFarland, Commissioner of the General Land Office, relative to which he states, "with whom I fully concur." In said letter the honorable Commissioner of the General Land Office refers to the fact that "in all other bureaus of the Executive Departments chiefs of division are paid from $2,000 to $2,500 a year," and after specifying some of the bureaus he states, "In no other office or Department are chiefs of divisions required to perform more important duties than in the General Land Office, but in this office the organization established at an early period still remains. Chiefs of division (except of public lands, private land claims, and surveys) are detailed from clerks of the fourth class, and none receive more pay than any other fourth-class clerks, while in other offices chiefs of division are appointed as such and receive a higher rate of compensation than the classified clerks. I inclose herewith a partial list of officers provided for in several bureaus and Departments, showing the discrimination against this office, which appear to me unreasonable and unjust." (See pages 2501 and 2502, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, Forty-eighth Congress, first session.)

In the bill making appropriations for the expenses of the General Land Office for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887 (H. R. 8974, Forty-ninth Congress, first session), provision was made for ten principal clerks at $2,000 each, which is the same number provided for in Senate bill 554, first session Forty-eighth Congress, but at a reduced compensation of $250 per year each, yet, notwithstanding the United States Senate in 1884 were willing to provide (and actually did provide, so far as the Senate was concerned) for ten principal clerks in the General Land Office at a salary of $2,250 per year each, they now, in 1886, are not willing to approve of the House bill providing for ten principal clerks at $1,800 per year, and provide for the remainder as clerks of the fourth class.

Precisely the same class of work devolves upon the chiefs of division in the General Land Office now as devolved upon them in 1885; if they were entitled to $2,250 per year, or even $2,000 per year, in 1884, they are unquestionably entitled to an equal compensation now.

Mr. STORM. The gentleman from Iowa says this bill does not increase the number of clerks and officers in the Interior Department?

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. It does not.

Mr. STORM. As I understand there is now the same number of clerks. Are those clerks now discharging the duties of chiefs of divisions?

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. Three are now paid $1,800 per annum as chiefs of divisions, and the others who discharge those duties are detailed from the fourth-class clerks.

Mr. STORM. Then the bill simply increases the salaries of ten officers from $1,800 to $2,000?

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. Yes, sir.

Mr. STEELE. I ask the gentleman from Iowa if one of the purposes of this bill is not to take these men out of the civil-service class?

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. It is not.

Mr. MORRISON. They are out already. These are all Democrats.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. The bill fixes the salary at the amount fixed by the House in the bill passed at the first session of this Congress.

Mr. STEELE. But does not the bill have the effect I have stated?

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. As a matter of course it has that effect.

Mr. STEELE. I am sure that the gentlemen on the other side do not wish to evade the civil-service law. They all voted for it.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. I believe I have the floor, and I do not yield for a speech. If any gentleman desires to offer an amendment I will yield for that purpose.

Mr. PERKINS. I desire to offer an amendment which I think will greatly promote the efficiency of the General Land Office if accepted.

The Clerk read the proposed amendment, as follows:

Add to the bill these words:

"Provided, That the chief of division longest in the public service shall be the Acting Commissioner of the General Land Office, and while so acting shall receive a salary of $3,500 per annum for his services."

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. I make the point of order that that is not germane to the bill.

Mr. PERKINS. If I understand the purport of the bill it is to promote the efficiency of the General Land Office; and the object of this amendment is that the work of the Land Department may become efficient in fact. I think the point of order is not well taken.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. The amendment enlarges the scope of the bill and is not germane to its purpose.

Mr. BURROWS. I would ask my friend from Iowa if this bill in any way affects the status of clerks under the civil-service law?

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. It makes the salaries of these clerks $2,000.

Mr. BURROWS. Does it subject them to removal?

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. No, sir; it makes no change except as to their salaries.

Mr. REED. How are they selected?

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. As they have always been.

Mr. BURROWS. Under the operation of this bill can these clerks not be removed and anybody appointed without examination?

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. That is the case with every other chief of division in every Department. Of course that would be the effect.

Mr. MORRISON. I wish to suggest that this violation of the civil-service law comes from the Senate.

Mr. BURROWS. It makes no difference where it comes from.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. I would like to have the amendment reported again.

The amendment was again read.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Would not this put out the Commissioner?

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. Yes; I think it would.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. Yes; it would put out the sparks. [Laughter.]

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. The amendment changes the law. It would lead to confusion. I therefore insist upon my point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The title of the bill is to promote the efficiency of the General Land Office. It changes the position of a few officers there. While the Chair is not absolutely certain on the question, he is inclined to the opinion it is for the committee to determine what will increase the efficiency of the office, and he therefore rules the amendment to be in order.

The question recurred on the amendment.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 66, noes 82.

Mr. THOMPSON. No quorum has voted.

The CHAIRMAN appointed as tellers Mr. PERKINS, and Mr. WEAVER of Iowa.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 63, noes 101.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. I move that the committee rise and report the bill to the House.

Mr. STEELE. I move the committee rise for the purpose of striking out the enacting clause, and on that motion I demand a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 61, noes 80.

Mr. STEELE. No quorum.

The CHAIRMAN appointed as tellers Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa, and Mr. STEELE.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 5, noes 76.

Mr. STEELE. No quorum.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. There is but one course to pursue under the rules.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee finding itself without a quorum, the Clerk will call the roll.

The roll was called; and the following members failed to answer to their names:

Adams, J. J.	Dockery,	Le Fevre,	Reese,
Aiken,	Dougherty,	Lore,	Smalls,
Atkinson,	Dunn,	Louttit,	Spriggs,
Ballentine,	Ellsberry,	Lowry,	Stahlnecker,
Barnes,	Fleeger,	Markham,	Stewart, Charles
Bland,	Foran,	Matson,	Stewart, J. W.
Browne, T. M.	Gibson, Eustace	Merriman,	St. Martin,
Campbell, T. J.	Glover,	Morrill,	Stone, E. F.
Candler,	Hanback,	Neece,	Struble,

Crisp,	Hepburn,	Perry,	Ward, T. B.
Curtin,	Hutton,	Peters,	White, Milo
Davis,	Irion,	Pidcock,	Woodburn.
Dawson,	Laird,	Plumb,

The committee rose; and Mr. SPRINGER having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. MCMILLIN reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, having under consideration the bill (S. 2877) to promote the efficiency of the General Land Office, and finding itself without a quorum, had, under the rule, caused the roll to be called, and he now reported the names of the absentees to the House.

The SPEAKER. On the roll-call 254 members answered to their names, and, under the rule, a quorum appearing, the committee will resume its session.

The Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union resumed its session, Mr. MCMILLIN in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee resumes the consideration of the bill (S. 2877) to promote the efficiency of the General Land Office. The committee was dividing by tellers on the motion to strike out the enacting clause, and the tellers will resume their places.

Mr. BLOUNT. Does the count begin de novo?

The CHAIRMAN. It is customary to begin the count anew. The hour for the consideration of bills has expired, and the committee will rise.

The committee rose; and Mr. SPRINGER having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. MCMILLIN reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union had, according to order, had under consideration the bill (S. 2877) to promote the efficiency of the General Land Office, and had come to no resolution thereon.

DIPLOMATIC AND CONSULAR BILLS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The hour for the consideration of bills has expired.

Mr. BELMONT. I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union to consider general appropriation bills.

Mr. HOLMAN. I suggest to the gentleman from New York to indicate some time when general debate on the pending appropriation bill will be closed. I would suggest two hours as the time.

Mr. BELMONT. So far as I am concerned, I considered at the outset of the debate we might easily have got through the bill in one legislative day. Now, however, gentlemen who have spoken on the bill have so misunderstood its provisions, I think it absolutely necessary the House should give some attention to it. I demand the previous question on my motion.

Mr. DUNHAM. I ask a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DUNHAM. How much time have gentlemen taken up on this question.

Mr. BELMONT. There has been time enough to give the House false impressions. The increase over last year's appropriation is but a little over $40,000.

Mr. DUNHAM. As I understand, they have already occupied a good part of two days. Now at this stage of the session I do not think the House ought to give any more time to a discussion of this kind.

Mr. HATCH. Will the gentleman from New York submit a proposition to limit debate? Fix some time at which the debate shall close.

Mr. HOLMAN. I trust the gentleman will consent to some limitation. Other bills are pressing.

Mr. HATCH. And if the gentleman does not desire to fix a time, I hope he will permit the House to come to some conclusion as to the proper time to close this debate.

Mr. BELMONT. Mr. Speaker, I will ask that the debate be closed in two hours and a half.

A MEMBER. To be equally divided?

Mr. DUNHAM. I move to amend by making it fifteen minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state in answer to the gentleman from Illinois that two hours and thirty minutes have already been consumed in general debate upon the bill.

The gentleman from New York now proposes that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the further consideration of the appropriation bill, and, pending that, that all general debate be closed in two hours and thirty minutes.

Mr. DUNHAM. I move to strike out "two hours and thirty minutes" and insert "thirty minutes."

The question was taken; and there were—ayes 42, noes 87.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. BELMONT. I now call the previous question upon my motion.

The previous question was ordered, under the operation of which the motion to limit debate to two hours and thirty minutes was agreed to.

The motion to go into Committee of the Whole was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives on bills of the following titles, namely:

A bill (S. 2225) to indemnify certain subjects of the Chinese Empire for losses sustained by the violence of a mob at Rock Springs, in the Territory of Wyoming, in September, 1885;

A bill (S. 712) for the erection of a public building at Augusta, Ga.;

A bill (S. 305) for the erection of a public building at Huntsville, Ala.; and

The message further announced that the Senate disagreed to the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 1131) to amend an act to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building thereon at Detroit, Mich., asked a conference with the House thereon, and had appointed Mr. MAHONE, Mr. VEST, and Mr. PALMER managers on the part of the Senate.

Also, that the Senate had passed without amendment the bill (H. R. 7508) granting the right of way to the Annapolis and Baltimore Short-Line Railroad Company across the Government farm connected with the Naval Academy at Annapolis, Md.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

A message, in writing, from the President of the United States was communicated to the House by Mr. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, who also announced that the President had approved and signed bills of the following titles:

An act (H. R. 3186) to declare a forfeiture of lands granted to the New Orleans, Baton Rouge and Vicksburg Railroad Company, to confirm title to certain lands, and for other purposes;

An act (H. R. 10051) for the erection of a public building at Charleston, S. C.;

An act (H. R. 8923) to amend an act in relation to the immediate transportation of dutiable goods, and for other purposes, approved June 10, 1880;

An act (H. R. 9644) for the erection of a public building at Jefferson, Tex.;

An act (H. R. 10242) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and for other purposes; and

An act (H. R. 9371) for the completion of a public building at Santa Fé, N. Mex.

DIPLOMATIC AND CONSULAR APPROPRIATION BILL.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, Mr. BLOUNT in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole for the further consideration of the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill, upon which the House has limited all general debate to two hours and thirty minutes. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] is entitled to twenty minutes.

Mr. CANNON. I will yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. ALLEN], with the request that he yield one minute at the close of his remarks to the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. ALLEN, of Mississippi, withholds his remarks for revision. [See Appendix.]

Mr. HITT. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. ALLEN] has gone to the cloak-room to receive the congratulations of those in this Hall who are pleased with what he has said; but if he went to the place where he would receive the most intelligent and thorough approbation of the practical results of his views, he would seek a gathering of rich men—millionaires of elegant leisure—who would gladly take, unpaid, these offices in the diplomatic service which are now underpaid, and make the whole foreign service of this country simply a corps of rich men, to the exclusion of the great body of your constituents and mine. Every word that the gentleman said was, in its tendency, in favor of the reduction of even that meager payment now allowed to the slender organization which constitutes our foreign service. The duties and surroundings to which you send these officers compel them to expenditure or expose them to contempt. Do you wish them to be objects of derision? If you do not pay them sufficiently to live at least well enough to escape a sneer they will draw on their own means or quit. A man without ample means will not be appointed. That will be the result.

There is not another nation in the world of one-half the weight or importance of ours that has not a foreign service larger than ours, and far better paid in every grade, and—I do not know that I can feel any national pride in saying it—their consular service is proportionally more efficient, far-reaching, and successful.

Now this bill, which has been here denounced as full of extravagances and of multiplication of officers, framed expressly for men seeking gilded rank in the diplomatic service, does what? Increases the pay of two of our ministers—only two, the minister to China and the minister to the Argentine Republic; and the increase amounts to $8,000—not $50,500 of increased diplomatic salaries, as has been said on this floor. There is an increase, as has been said with great emphasis, of more than $50,000 in the diplomatic section of the bill, but that is for other expenditures, and much the largest item is required to build a house in which our minister to Japan shall reside, to cost $25,000. I think that even the constituents of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. ALLEN] would deem it economy to build a house for our representative to live in at a cost of $25,000, rather than go on paying rent, as we have paid $34,000 in rent during the last ten years.

Mr. Chairman, it is ordinarily a thankless task to defend the foreign service. The members of that service are not like the postmasters, the collectors of internal revenue, and the other office-holders close at home, who are always at hand, always active among the people, and who can be so useful to the politicians that take care of them and make up in severe virtue and economy of public money by attacking the far-away consuls and ministers.

The longer they are at their posts, the more attentive they are to their duties, the less hold they have upon political support at home. It is a service the functions of which, when properly exercised, are of the highest character. Our ministers abroad are not daily workers, like clerks, employed for so many hours; but their duties of watchfulness, of intelligent vigilance, are of transcendent importance.

I will say but one word more of them. Their highest function, their greatest ambition, their glory and success are always to maintain peace among men. It is a matter of most serious discredit to a minister to have allowed irritation to grow up unnecessarily between peoples where national interests are committed to his charge; and the greatest zeal of every minister we have abroad is directed to promptly smoothing away each difficulty, achieving what are really great and substantial triumphs unheard of by the world. All the peace societies on earth are but second in influence and action weighed beside these active ministers of peace, who constantly penetrate to the heart of every cabinet and clique, and keep silent all the guns of the numberless armies of Europe. We can drop them if we choose; and I believe it would be better to abolish the service than to degrade it.

The consular service is changed much more in this bill, though less comment has been made on that. The largest apparent increase of expenditure in the bill is for consuls; but this does not arise from the creation of new functionaries. You, gentlemen [addressing the Democratic side of the House], came here pledged to reduce extravagance, to cut off useless offices. Here is an opportunity to reduce extravagance, by stopping the payment of over $150,000 in fees to seventy consuls, and fixing their salaries at fair rates, amounting in all to $125,000. This is no favoritism to pets. It is not the consuls who ask to have their pay changed from fees to fixed salaries; it is proposed by the President and Secretary of State, by the men who organize and watch them—the men in the Department, just as the high executive officers of every other great government have long since effected that change from uncertainly-known fees to salaries fixed and known to all the world. The consul prefers the indeterminate fees, the amount of which you can not well find out, which may make his pay three times as great as you would suspect.

I know from experience years ago in the Department of State, and I know from the statement just sent us by Secretary Bayard, that there is not to-day in that Department, as there was not in the days when it was administered by Republican energy and purity, any way to certainly find out all that takes place in a feed consulate. The temptation to irregularity is continual, and irregularities are continually discovered. The people who pay the taxes are entitled to know exactly what a public servant receives; and if the Democratic party has the courage to write down opposite to each officer's name in the public records just how much expense the people must bear to keep that man in office, they do well; even if it does apparently, though not really, increase expenditure, and I for one will support them in that course. The people ought to be able to know exactly what burden the public treasury bears. At present, gentlemen, it is not only impossible for your constituents to know this, but you can not find it out yourselves with all the powers and privileges of members of Congress.

The fee system came with the beginning of our whole consular system, a hundred years ago, when we were very poor and glad to get some merchant at a port where our people traded to perform the duties of consul in return for the fees collected. Gradually the more important posts have been salaried, and the fees required to be turned into the Treasury. But most of them remain paid in fees—some largely, but most of them very moderately. A great part of our consular force is now paid little more than $50 to each man in fees. But of those who have the fat places the Department has selected seventy and proposed to put them on a salary, with the requirement that the fees be turned into the Treasury. Those fees for these places amount to over $150,000 annually, while the aggregate of the salaries proposed is $125,000. It is a movement in the right direction. It diminishes the vicious fee system of compensation. It will purify the service, improve the revenues of the Government, and promote every national interest.

There is no danger, as my friend from Kentucky [Mr. McCREARY] feared, that there will be loss to the Government in fees. Not at all. No merchant ever made a shipment or refrained from making a shipment on account of the invoice fee. But the loss now to the Government, which ought to have been evident to the gentleman and which experience in the Department would quickly show to any one, is in the revenue collected at the custom-houses. Suppose a feed consul has an office in a city near one where there is a salaried consul. A merchant wants to invoice his goods falsely—to undervalue them when shipped for the United, States so that they may be entered at New York at a low rate and a low tariff duty be paid to the Government on them. I know a case where a merchant with $50,000 worth of goods went to a consul who was salaried, who had no motive to accept a false invoice, and who refused to certify it unless the merchant put up his figures to the true values.

Then the merchant went on to a feed consul, who was very anxious to have that merchant's custom, eager to have him bring all his invoices there to have them certified that he might get the certifying fee, and who at once placed the certificate upon the invoice and signed it, putting an undervaluation on that whole body of goods, so that when they came to the custom-house and the duty was assessed upon them the Government was cheated to the extent of over $15,000. There was the economy of not paying one officer a salary but letting him have fees, and paying the other a salary, which still left him with his manhood. We had a communication not long ago from the Secretary of the Treasury saying that in a country where we have feed consulates with a special kind of fee enormously remunerative, invoices are practically almost worthless to the custom-house officers in determining the real value of imported goods. Put your consuls on salaries and they will be, as they ought to be, watchful experts, sentinels of the Treasury.

This increase of expenditure in the bill which seems so large is apparent, not real. The officers are receiving, many of them, more than the salaries specified in the bill. These increases, too, all along the line, are a complete vindication of the recommendations of the Secretaries of State in the last eight years. They are an answer that is complete to the bitter speeches, the partisan appeals, and the complaints of extravagance with which we were met on this floor for so many years. The increases now proposed are larger than were ever presented under Republican administration.

I speak, not as a partisan, but in the interests of my country and the public service when I say that the recommendations made then stand as wise and just to-day as they were then, whether they come from Republican or Democratic hands.

The cardinal duties of a consul are to defend the rights of American citizens, to promote commerce, and to protect the revenue. Here is a long list of consuls who are now paid $1,000 a year and permitted to trade—that is, the consuls are merchants.

What system is that? The man who is to watch over the revenue is himself the man to be watched—the merchant most interested to cheat the Government. And how is he interested to enlarge and promote commerce? There are abundant instances where consuls in foreign ports, who were themselves the merchants, so used and abused their position and privileges as consuls that the firm to which the consul belonged as a partner succeeded in monopolizing the whole of the trade with this country. Is that promoting commerce—to establish by law an official machinery that will beget such a pernicious and stifling monopoly of trade? That is what we have to-day in all this $1,000 consulates, for our law permits all of that salary to enter into trade. They are to protect the rights of American citizens, yet we make a man consul who is an active merchant, and does the work of consul with his left hand, while with his right he is straining every nerve to make a fortune. Is that the man who will give his time and care to protect an American citizen? Why, the unfortunate American imprisoned or wronged will often have to use management and influence to get an interview with the busy merchant.

Protect the revenue, he himself the maker of the invoices! Promote commerce, he the spy on every other merchant's business, who must show him all his invoices to get them certified! Upon recommendation of the Secretary of State this bill raises the pay of these $1,000 consuls to $1,500 and prohibits their entering into business. It does increase their pay in consideration of this restriction, but I hope respectable and intelligent American citizens can be sent out to these posts who will be altogether consuls and altogether Americans. It enlarges expense, but is it not in fact economy? And all of us Republicans and Democrats ought to wish to take every efficient step to promote the commerce of our country, to protect the revenue of the nation, and to guard inviolate the rights of American citizens everywhere by faithful agents of our Government who give their whole time to their public duty.

Here is also a list of inspectors provided in this bill. As to these officers, and all officers of this kind, I think they are utterly worthless if they are appointed to provide hospitals for political lame ducks. But if they are wisely selected, and they should be chosen with great care, and if they devote themselves zealously and impartially to their public duties, there can be no better addition to the service.

The popular vote has intrusted the executive power to the Democratic party, and they have chosen their men to exercise it. Now, when they ask for the instruments and ask for the amount which I am convinced is no more than is necessary for the full efficiency of a great public service, I think it right to vote them what they ask, and then hold them responsible for the consequences. They will not conduct the public business in the way we would like, nor appoint the men who I think are most worthy, but I honor the courage that proposes to put down in plain figures, which all the country can read, the true amount every office-holder shall receive; to write on the wall, even though it increases an appropriation bill, the salary of every public servant, that every taxpayer may know just where every cent of the public money goes.

I yield now to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CLEMENTS].

Mr. CLEMENTS. Mr. Chairman, I shall attempt in the short time I have in the general discussion to confine myself to the questions involved in this bill. I hope not to be drawn aside from those questions by some of the speeches which have preceded upon matters not in the bill further than to allude to their irrelevancy. I can only discuss in the time I have the principal changes and reforms proposed in the bill, which are the transfer of consuls from one class to another, and placing some who now receive fees alone in the classes receiving salaries, and turning fees now retained by them into the public Treasury. The other miscellaneous changes proposed in the bill I have not time to discuss and will not allude to, except the provision as to consular inspectors.

The gentleman from Delaware [Mr. LORE] yesterday, whom I do not see in his seat to-day, discussed the bill under consideration as though it were a question of civil service, or of the distribution of offices in the State Department. He based his complaint against the Secretary of State on the ground that that official, in compliance with law, in a letter to the Speaker of the House, giving his opinion as to whether or not any employés in that Department could be dispensed with and the work of the Department be kept up, advised against the removal of or the diminution of the number of employés. From this the gentleman from Delaware would infer that the Secretary, because he said there were no employés in that Department he could dispense with and carry on the public business, therefore was opposed to any change there, and he was surprised that being opposed to change there he would now be in favor of a change in the diplomatic and consular service. It seems to me the consideration of this bill was simply made an opportunity to criticise the Secretary of State, who merely stated, in accordance with the law, that there were no employés in the State Department which could be dispensed with.

The law did not contemplate that he should constitute himself a partisan in this official communication relating to the force in his Department, to say that the employés should be turned out because they did not belong to the same political party to which he belongs. When the gentleman from Delaware can properly discuss the civil-service law he and I may not be very far apart, for I am not its advocate; but it has nothing to do with the pending measure, and its discussion has no place here upon this bill. Now let us consider some of the objections raised to this measure.

The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. McCREARY] a few days ago read a list of consulates, with the small fees collected at each. By this he sought to impress the House with the idea that they were unimportant points on account of the small fees collected, although this bill proposes that a fixed salary be provided for each of them larger than the present compensation. I wish to refer to a few of those mentioned by the gentleman on that occasion, and to show that the amount of fees is not a test of the importance of the consulate. For instance, he referred to the post of Odessa, where the fees were about $180 last year. He put that among the unimportant consulates because the fees were so small, and called attention to the fact that this bill proposed to fix an increased salary. Now, what are the facts as to the importance of this post? The figures in the State Department show that for one quarter in 1885, the quarter ending June 30, the amount of shipments from that point to the United States reached $137,000.

The most of that was wool. The tariff on wool of a certain grade is 10 per cent., and on a certain other grade 20 per cent.; so that it is fair to assume that the duty paid to the Government of the United States on the amount of wool shipped from Odessa in that one quarter was not less than $20,000. This Government therefore was interested to the extent of $20,000 at least in one quarter's shipment from that port; and yet the consular fees amounted last year to but about $180. The gentleman from Kentucky, no doubt honest in this matter, but failing to thoroughly investigate the facts bearing upon the question of importance of this and many other ports, and superficially looking only to the amount of fees collected, has placed it before the House as an unimportant consulate, and asks you to deal with questions vitally affecting the interests of the people in that manner.

What more vitally affects the interests of the people than an honest collection of the revenues due to the Government than to prevent swindling and smuggling and fraud?

The gentleman also referred to Buenos Ayres, which he put in the list as an unimportant post. There it is also proposed to increase the salary. There were exported from this point to the United States for the three months ending June 30, 1885, goods amounting to $1,430,000, or nearly one and a half millions of dollars. And yet the fees were quite small. So I might go through with the seventeen classed by the gentleman as unimportant simply because the fees are small, and with a few exceptions show that the amount of the shipments from those points to this country are quite large, and that the question of fees is no criterion whatever by which to judge of the extent of the business.

Take for instance the shipment of fine wool from Odessa, the quality of which is high and expensive. A cargo of $100,000, upon which the tax due this Government might be $20,000, may be covered by a single invoice, but the consular fees would only amount to $2.50. It is not, then, the amount of the invoice that measures the fees, but the number of invoices. It may be that there are many small shipments and a small cargo, and the aggregate of the fees collected would be quite large, whereas, as in the case I have mentioned, there may be but a single shipment covering an immense value and yet the fee would be only $2.50.

Mr. McCREARY. Let me interrupt the gentleman for a moment. I did not hear his remarks a moment ago with reference to these consulates. I would like him to tell me what the fees are at Gaboon, Africa. It appears to me that last year they were $7.50 and I would like to know the business done there.

Mr. CLEMENTS. If the gentleman had heard my remarks he would have heard me say with reference to these seventeen consulates enumerated by him as unimportant that from nearly all of them, with a few exceptions, there was quite an extensive amount of shipments to this country, and I cited one or two instances in support of my statement. I did not say that there were extensive shipments from all of them. You may take Cape Town and Gaboon, Africa, and Levuka, which places will show very small shipments and of course very small fees.

But there are special reasons why if we have consuls at these places they should be better paid, and not be put in the one-thousand-dollar class. It costs to go from this country to Levuka, in the Fiji Islands, a man and his wife alone, $750. So that to go and return would take $1,500, while the salary is but $1,000. If the office is not a necessary one, if it is not desirable to have a consul there, it should be abolished altogether. But if we do send one we should at least pay his necessary expenses. So also there are a few other places mentioned where the shipments are inconsiderable; but these are places where the country is hoping to build up a large trade, and are exceptional. The gentleman from Delaware, as well as the gentleman from Kentucky, seem to argue that where we have but little trade we ought to have no consul at all, and ought not to try to enlarge the trade.

Among the other places mentioned by the gentleman from Kentucky in his list of seventeen is Cardiff. The consul there collected last year only the very small amount of $288 fees, and therefore it is classed by the gentleman as an unimportant place. The direct trade of that point with the United States in the last year was $3,785,000. The number of American seaman discharged and shipped from that point was more than six hundred last year. It is second only to Liverpool as regards the discharge and shipment of American seamen back to this country. The consul has all this work to deal with without fees. He must hear and settle all disputes and differences between them and the masters of vessels.

Mr. McCREARY. I desire to ask the gentleman a question about Cardiff.

Mr. CLEMENTS. Very well.

Mr. McCREARY. Does he not know that for many years the salary of the consul at Cardiff in Great Britain has been but $2,000? Now, in what respect has there been a change of business so as to make it necessary and proper for us to increase the salary?

Mr. CLEMENTS. I have but little time to discuss these details. It is wholly immaterial whether there has been a change of business there recently or not. Certainly business and commerce and their conducts have undergone many great changes since the present classifications were fixed, and readjustment is necessary. I want to consider the matter as we find it. It matters not what was recommended by the Democratic committee in 1877, which has been adverted to in the debate. That may have been enough or it may not. There may have been some political considerations in fixing it. I have nothing to do with these questions; but whether the salary has been $2,000 heretofore or $3,000, and I am informed it is $3,000——

Mr. BELMONT. The salary is $2,000, and the whole compensation brings it up to $3,000.

Mr. CLEMENTS. I see the salary proposed in the bill is $2,500, and the fees to be turned into the Treasury, so that in this case as in many others, if the gentleman from New York is correct as to the fees here, while there is an increase of $500 in salary, there is really a decrease of compensation by putting the fees in the Treasury. In many cases the bill reduces the compensation of the consuls, and in others increases them. Altogether I believe this bill to be as economical as the present law, and will work important reforms if passed.

I want to ask the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. ALLEN] and the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. McCREARY] if their constituents desire that the American seamen who may be thrown out in ports in foreign countries shall be turned loose and not cared for by this Government, or shall fall into the hands of irresponsible and incompetent consuls?

Mr. McCREARY. I desire to answer that question now.

Mr. CLEMENTS. The gentleman from Kentucky has had twice as much time as I will have.

Mr. McCREARY. If the gentleman refuses to let me answer his question, all right.

Mr. CLEMENTS. I repeat, that the gentleman from Kentucky has had twice as much time as I will have. I have heard his questions, but can not yield for a speech from him in my limited time.

Mr. ALLEN, of Mississippi. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry. Has a gentleman a right to ask a question and then refuse to yield for an answer?

The CHAIRMAN. That is not a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. CLEMENTS. I did not ask the gentlemen to stop in their arguments that I might answer their questions and inject a speech in the midst of theirs, and they have both spoken.

Mr. McCREARY. You should not have asked the question if you did not desire an answer.

Mr. CLEMENTS. I merely asked the question in argument, for you to think of, and to answer if you so desire in your own time.

Tangier and Algiers are places where there are sanitariums where people of foreign countries are taken care of. Afflicted people go there to build up their health. The consuls representing this Government there are the only people to whom our citizens in those places can look for protection. Without them they would often be greatly harassed and dealt with harshly in many ways. Especially would such be the case in the places I have spoken of in Africa. Among the people of the class I have referred to are American citizens who go there for health, and are engaged in business there. Under treaty arrangements with other governments at some of these places we have an arrangement by which when an American citizen dies the consul of the United States acts as administrator and takes charge of his estate; and the legatees or the heirs must depend on this Government to give an honest, efficient administrator. At this time at Levuka, in the Fiji Islands, there are three important estates in the hands of the consul for administration and distribution. At many other places the consuls are judicial officers to decide civil questions, rights of property, of liberty, and even of life. And yet we are asked to judge of the importance of these places only by the small fees that may be received there.

Right here let me read the reasons given by the Secretary of State for the changes asked, with reference to a few of the places designated as unimportant in this debate. He gives reasons in each case. I have not the time to repeat here many, but give a few, as follows. They are given by an honest official under whose charge this whole system is, and who knows best its needs to make it a pure and efficient service:

Cape Town—Consulate: This is the great seaport of South Africa, and is of much importance, in a commercial way, to the United States. The trade with this country is mostly direct, and is rapidly increasing. The port is visited by all United States naval vessels on that station for the purpose of obtaining supplies and refitting. It is also visited by more of our merchant marine than are to be found in all of the other ports of that part of the world combined. The cost of going to and returning from Cape Town is excessive, and the discomforts of life are great in that locality.

Buenos Ayres—Consul: This is one of the most important trade centers in all of South America. Its trade with the United States is large and shows a steady and rapid increase. The present salary does not support the consul, owing to the very large demands made upon him by American traders and visitors.

Apia—Consulate: Apia is the principal island of the Samoan or Friendly and Navigators' Islands. It has a large and profitable trade with San Francisco, which is increasing. The consul is vested with judicial functions. The place is of much political importance to the United States, and should be filled with a man of marked ability, to obtain which the present salary is entirely inadequate.

Cardiff—Consulate: The direct trade betwen this port and the United States is not very great, but it is very important to United States shipping. The usual number of seamen shipped and discharged there is at least 600 per annum. The raising of the agency at Swansea to a consulate, under the act of July 1, 1886, has the same effect as in the case of Leeds. (See Item 28.)

Odessa—Consul: This is the principal port of Russia on the Black Sea, and has an extensive trade, exporting large quantities of wool to the United States. The cost of living in Odessa, as in all cities of Russia, is exceptionally great, while the discomforts of life there are very considerable indeed.

Tamatave is paraded as unimportant simply because the fees are small, yet for the first quarter in 1885 the exports to this country from that point amounted to $117,681.

Talcahuano (a town in Chilli) is a great center for whaling vessels, where relief is dispensed to American seamen, and is also an expensive place to dwell in. From Bombay, for the quarter above named, the exports were $237,000; from Sierra Leone, $75,000; from Venice, a great art center, $74,000. At Nantes and Santiago are sanitariums, where many Americans go; yet all these have been enumerated as unimportant. But I can not go further with details as to particular places.

If a post is not important enough to give an honest, efficient consul a sufficient salary, it should be abolished, because it is a discredit to the Government to have any other sort. It should not be kept up at all. It is often the case that one who receives now only $1,000, and is permitted to trade, engages in direct trade with this country. He makes his shipments and certifies to his own invoices. Then he sees every other merchant's invoice; he knows who are his competitors, whom they are trading with, and to whom they ship, and he can write to the parties here with whom they do business saying, "These gentlemen ship at such a price; I can ship on better terms." It enables a man holding office under the Government of the United States to use a public office as a prop to support his own monopoly in private business against honorable competition which should be fostered. On this point I wish to have read by the Clerk a letter of the Assistant Secretary of State. I want to show distinctly what this bill proposes to do and some of the reasons assigned by the State Department for what it asks.

The Clerk read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, February 5, 1887.

SIR: In connection with the consular and diplomatic appropriation bill, now pending before the House, I have the honor to communicate to you the following statements, based upon said bill, namely:

First. The total increase in salaries at places already provided for by law amounts to $54,000. This includes the raising of twenty-five consulates now receiving salaries of $1,000 and having the right to trade to classes in which the trading privilege is not allowed.

Second. Sixty-eight offices now compensated by fees are provided with salaries, the total thereof being $121,000.

Third. The fees collected at the sixty-eight places above named amount to $144,484 per annum, or an excess of $23,484 over the amount to be appropriated for salaries.

If the pending bill becomes a law we shall have: First, twenty-five officers who now receive $1,000 each per annum, but who can give as much or as little of their time as they please to the Government, placed in a position where they will be required to give all of their attention to the public service, and will not, as at present, be permitted to make the consular service of the United States a simple prop to their private undertakings.

Next we have the long list of officers at present compensated entirely by fees collected and retained by themselves and their principals under existing law. The fees so collected and retained amount to the large sum of more than $125,000 per annum, and yet not one of these officers is restricted as to trade; and as a matter of fact they are generally engaged in some commercial pursuit, often in the only direct trade between their respective ports and the United States. They are generally not citizens of the United States and, owing to the trade advantages flowing from the consular position, may be said to enjoy a sort of monopoly very hurtful to free commercial intercourse and enterprise. Adoption of the present bill will cure all of this, will furnish many offices which can, under existing law, only be filled by citizens of the United States, and will relieve all such of the difficult task of serving two masters, as they now do, namely: First, self-interest, as merchants; and second, the United States, as consuls; which is an end most desirable to attain.

I have the honor to be, sir, your obedient servant,

JAS. D. PORTER, Assistant Secretary.

Hon. JUDSON C. CLEMENTS,
House of Representatives.

I will read also a few lines from the President's message upon this subject. In his annual message, in relation to the estimates submitted by the Secretary of State and in pursuance of that clause in the appropriation bill of last year (placed there by the House), requiring him to submit these estimates with a view to readjusting this system of service, the President says:

Pursuant to a provision of the diplomatic and consular appropriation act approved July 1, 1886, the estimates submitted by the Secretary of State for the maintenance of the consular service have been recast, on the basis of salaries for all officers to whom such allowance is deemed advisable. Advantage has been taken of this to redistribute the salaries of the offices now appropriated for in accordance with the work performed, the importance of the representative duties of the incumbent, and the cost of living at each post. The last consideration has been too often lost sight of in the allowances heretofore made.

The compensation which may suffice for the decent maintenance of a worthy and capable officer in a position of onerous and representative trust at a post readily accessible, and where the necessaries of life are abundant and cheap, may prove an inadequate pittance in distant lands, where the better part of a year's pay is consumed in reaching the post of duty, and where the comforts of ordinary civilized existence can only be obtained with difficulty and at exorbitant cost. I trust that, in considering the submitted schedules, no mistaken theory of economy will perpetuate a system which in the past has virtually closed to deserving talent many offices where capacity and attainments of a high order are indispensable, and in not a few instances has brought discredit on our national character and entailed embarrassment and even suffering on those deputed to uphold our dignity and interests abroad.

In connection with this subject I earnestly reiterate the practical necessity of supplying some mode of trustworthy inspection and report of the manner in which the consulates are conducted. In the absence of such reliable information efficiency can scarcely be rewarded or its opposite corrected.

I can show this committee instances of consulates, unimportant according to the standard of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MCCREARY] where the fees are very small, yet where the consuls are authorized to administer estates of American citizens, and where, as a consequence, orphans have been defrauded and wronged. The President says, in effect, that this unwise policy has led to discredit to our national honor and to the injury of individuals as well as of the public service of the United States. I do not believe that the people of Mississippi, or the people of any other State, are unjust in regard to this matter. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. ALLEN] is doubtless right when he says that the people of his State are in favor of economy; but I say to him that the people of Mississippi, as well as the people of every other State in this Union, are in favor of honesty and justice, as well as of economy. They are in favor of protecting the lives, liberty, and rights of American citizens abroad as well as at home.

They are in favor of efficient government. They do not demand of us to uphold a system which is discreditable to them and to our national character. There is no constituency that will demand that at the hands of its representative here. The trouble, I fear, with the gentlemen who present this superficial view of the question is that, in looking solely to what the people of a particular district may say, they have not read the estimates of the Secretary of State or the reasons assigned for them. I am afraid they have not gone to the bottom of this question to ascertain whether these consulates, of which they speak, are really important or unimportant. Whenever an increased appropriation is recommended for any purpose it is fashionable on the part of some to cry out, "Economy," and talk about what "the people" said last fall, and what "the people" will do with us. Tell the people the truth about this question of the foreign service of the United States and they will demand at your hands an honest and efficient corps of American, and not foreign, citizens in the service. Many of our consuls are paid only $1,000 a year and are allowed to trade. Suppose you deny them the right to trade, how many of them can afford to go to their points of service and live there on $1,000 a year? You must, then, have inefficient or dishonest men who must violate the law to live, or put rich men only in these offices and exclude the poor.

The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MCCREARY] said there was no trouble about finding people to fill these offices. We have one or two consulates now that can not be given away. One of them is at Asuncion, the capital city of Paraguay. Two or three men have been commissioned to go there, but when they found out what it would cost to go, and how small the salary was, they declined. Are we going to adopt the policy of selling out the offices of the United States to the lowest bidder? Is that wise economy? Will that help the poor people of whom the gentleman from Mississippi speaks? Shall we appoint men to these places and require them to pay their necessary expenses of travel and living, which are more than their salaries, and have them resort to that which is contrary to the honor of the country in order to live?

Do you want us to perpetuate these consulates at a thousand dollars a year, and give the consuls permission to trade, and allow them to certify to their own invoices as they do now? That is the present system. That is the system which drives out honest competition by giving the consuls of the United States at such points an insight into the business of rival traders. The consul, of course, sees whom they ship to, and by reason of his position is master of the situation, because he is propped up and sustained by the Government of the United States, and is thus enabled to maintain a monopoly which is against fair competition, against public policy, against common honesty, and detrimental to commerce.

The Secretary of State has given in the Book of Estimates (briefly, as he was compelled to do) the reasons for his recommendations, and the President of the United States has called special attention to the matter and recommended that no idea of mistaken or false economy shall guide the House in dealing with it. That is demanded by a due regard for our national honor. According to the idea of the gentleman from Kentucky, we can find plenty of men to fill all these offices at the present salaries. There is no doubt about that. I have no doubt that there are many in the gentleman's district who would be willing to take his seat, perhaps without any salary at all; but is such an idea in accordance with the spirit of this Government or of our institutions—to confine office-holding to the rich only, or to perpetuate a corrupting fee system antagonistic to fair dealing among business men and an honest public service?

Certainly you can find men all over the country who are willing to take the consulships if they are allowed the privilege of trading with the advantage which their position will give them in building up their own private fortunes at the expense of the Government and its honor, and of the business of other people. Upon that condition you can find plenty of men who will take them and pay their own expenses. But the question is, do you want to perpetuate that policy? Do the people of Mississippi want to fill the offices of this Government by selling them to the lowest bidder? I submit that it is impossible to secure the services of honest, reputable, and efficient men at remote points, when the cost of traveling is greater than the salary unless they have private fortunes, and the only way you can get men to take these appointments will be by giving them the right to trade, to the injury of others and to the inducement of fraud.

Take the case at Odessa, which has been already alluded to, in connection with the shipment of wool. In the shipment of cargoes of fine wool, if the appraisement goes up to a certain point, the duty is 10 per cent., but if it goes a hair's breadth above that, the duty is 20 per cent. How easy it is for the consul in such a case, if he is in concert with a dishonest shipper, or if he is not faithful to the interests of the Government he represents, to vary the appraisement just enough to let the cargo in at 10 per cent. instead of 20 per cent.

On a shipment of $100,000 the difference to this Government in duties would be $10,000. We have already had an illustration of what has occurred in this regard. At Three Rivers, in Canada, where the consul is allowed to retain fees up to the amount of $2,500, those engaged in shipping produce to this country—hay and other products—made an arrangement with him by which, instead of charging $2.50 on the invoice, the amount fixed by law, he would charge himself with this amount, but in fact would receive only $1.75. He would accept $1.75, while giving a certificate showing that $2.50 had been paid. He did this because he was allowed to retain the fees up to $2,500. If he had been upon a fixed salary there would have been no inducement to do this. Many instances can be shown where shippers pass by salaried consuls, and put themselves to cost and inconvenience to reach a feed consul, where they get more favorable certificates as to their invoices, which practice results in defrauding the Government of its just revenues.

The case is similar to what it was in regard to fourth-class postmasters a few years ago, when those officers were compensated according to the number of stamps they sold. Many of them became peddlers of stamps. The Government did not sell any more in consequence of the fact that they became interested in selling a great many. Their commissions were estimated upon the number of they sold, not the number canceled; and they became competitors, to the injury of one another and not to the benefit of the Government, because it did not sell one more stamp on that account. Those officers were stimulated—to do what? Not to serve the Government, but to use a public office so as to make private gain. Such practices ought not to be encouraged or permitted by law in any branch of the public service.

Now a word in relation to consular inspectors who are specially recommended by the President in the paragraph which I have read from his message. You have inspectors in the internal-revenue service; and in the customs service you have post-office inspectors. Yet when we talk about having inspectors for consulates, the gentleman from Kentucky and others say "appoint honest men; that is the remedy for all these evils." If that is a sufficient remedy, why do you not abolish post-office inspectors, custom-house inspectors, and internal-revenue inspectors, and rely simply upon the appointment of honest men to these different branches of the service? Of course any upright administration will appoint honest men so far as it can, but all men are not honest; all men can not withstand the constant temptations held out by the present law to use their positions for private gain. They do not all withstand these temptations; therefore, whether or not you call it dishonesty on their part, people doing business with the Government are wronged and the Government is discredited. We ought not to uphold this system any longer.

What does it take to change it? The amount of increase of this bill is not large. I do not believe it is one cent above the corresponding benefits in the way of fees and correct appraisements, and consequently increased collections. We propose to put the fees into the Treasury instead of the pockets of the officials. We propose that they shall cease to engage in private business, which is contrary to the efficiency and purity of the service, and repugnant to the interests of the Government which they are called upon as public officers to serve.

The first sentence of the speech of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MCCREARY] is that "public office is a public trust." We have a large number of public officers holding "public trusts," who make more out of the pursuit of private business antagonistic to the nature of the service they are expected to perform for the Government than their salaries or their fees. Yet the gentleman would perpetuate these abuses and allow public trusts to be used, in the language of the Assistant Secretary of State, as simple props to their private undertakings.

Under the system now proposed, these official fees will be required to be turned into the Treasury. They amounted last year to $125,000. This is a set-off in part against the apparent increase; a faithful collection of lawful duties would more than balance the real increase, and the proposed plan would not only be the best, but would be the least expensive, to the Government.

It is said if you put these officers on salaries alone they will lose interest in collecting fees. How do they control the amount of fees they collect? No shipments can be made to this country without invoices, and all invoices must be certified to by the consuls or commercial or consular agents. The amount of exports controls the amount of fees collected.

But the assumption that he will not collect and account for fees because of a fixed salary is a denial of the argument we have heard that we must have honest men and trust to their honor alone. It is a contradiction of that. It is saying they will not be honest when you put them on salaries. Which is the more likely to tempt a man to dishonest practices, merely to withdraw his interest in the fees or to hold before him opportunity to make large emoluments—which will tempt him the stronger? Certainly the latter.

I wish I had time to go further into details on these matters, and call attention to the amount of shipments at particular places enumerated here by the gentlemen as altogether unimportant because the fees are small, but I have not.

The people of the United States are an enterprising and progressive people, and have never confined themselves to this continent. They are to be found everywhere, and in all manner of business enterprise, almost everywhere. They are to be found traveling in every country.

Perhaps the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. ALLEN] would deny the American people the privilege of going abroad for pleasure. I will therefore say nothing about those who go for pleasure. But there are American citizens almost everywhere in business. Wherever they go, whether for business, for health, or for pleasure, they are liable to need the services of a faithful consul.

In what I have said as to misconduct at particular consulates mentioned, I deem it just to say that none of it refers to the gentlemen representing the Government there at this time.

The fee system is certain to lead to abuses wherever it exists. In the execution of the internal-revenue laws it is exemplified by the multiplication of unfounded, vexatious, and oppressive prosecutions in order to make fees for the officers. If right here at home among our own people and in the face of rigid inspection abuses grow up in consequence of a desire to make fees, how much more must the abuses be at far distant points without these restraints?

It must be a matter of regret to every American that so large a proportion of those in the consular service of the United States are foreigners. It is stated in a recent report made by Consul-General Walker that of the United States consular corps of Great Britain and Ireland there are thirty-four Americans and eighty-two Englishmen. The following table taken from his report is of interest on this point:

No.	Rank.	Nationality.
		American.	British.
1	Consul-general	1
1	Vice consul-general	1
1	Deputy consul-general	1
20	Consuls	18	2
18	Vice-consuls	3	15
3	Commercial agents	3
2	Vice commercial agents		2
32	Consular agents	1	31
2	Commissioned consular clerks	2
30	Consular clerks	1	29
3	Sanitary inspectors		3
3	Rag inspectors	3

The changes proposed by this bill in this service mean better service at no greater cost than at present. It has been argued as if the changes were in the interest of the consuls, but many of them oppose the changes because they can make more out of their trading privileges and fees than the salaries proposed. The changes are in the line of a long-needed reform of abuses, and while under the rules they may be subject to points of order it is of the utmost importance that they should be effected.

We should for many reasons have responsible American officials abroad as well as at home. Our commerce ought to be fostered, American citizens and seamen in foreign countries ought to be protected by Americans. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. How much time remains.

The CHAIRMAN. Forty-eight minutes.

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. I ask the Chair to notify me when I have occupied twenty-eight minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will do so.

Mr. STONE, of Missouri, withholds his remarks for revision. [See Appendix.]

The CHAIRMAN. The twenty-eight minutes have expired.

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. I ask leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

There was no objection.

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. I now yield to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MCCREARY] the remainder of my time.

Mr. MCCREARY. How much time have I?

The CHAIRMAN. Twenty-five minutes.

Mr. MCCREARY. Mr. Chairman, I have listened with pleasure to all that has been said on both sides. I desired to dispassionately examine this question and then to cast my vote as seemed best under all the circumstances.

Now, sir, what is involved in the question under discussion to-day? The Committee on Foreign Affairs have reported a bill appropriating money for the consular and diplomatic service. On the face of that bill there is an increase of $325,000. Is it right to make this increase?

Mr. BELMONT. Will my colleague permit me an interruption?

Mr. MCCREARY. I have but a short time, and I would rather not be interrupted.

Mr. BELMONT. Then I cannot correct the gentleman's misunderstanding of the bill.

Mr. MCCREARY. The gentleman will have twenty-four minutes in which to make his speech, and I think it is best that I shall not be interrupted. As I was just saying, the apparent increase in this bill is $325,000 over the amount appropriated last year. The experience of the past is always a good lesson to read, and I hold in my hand a statement of the appropriations that have been made for the diplomatic and consular service for the last ten years. In 1877 a Democratic House appropriated $1,186,797.50; in 1878 a Democratic House appropriated $1,140,747.50; in 1879 a Democratic House appropriated

$1,087,565; and, coming down to 1887, the last year for which an appropriation was made, the amount appropriated is $1,364,065. In the past, then, it has not seemed to be necessary, in order to do justice to our diplomatic and consular service, to appropriate, as this bill proposes, $1,681,445. Therefore I ask this question: Why should we now double the salaries of twenty-three consuls, and increase the salaries of seven consul-generals one-fourth, and why should we increase the salaries of thirty-seven consuls from $2,000 to $2,500 and $3,000?

Mr. BELMONT. We do not do anything of the kind.

Mr. McCREARY. I say you do, and the bill shows it, and the gentleman from New York [Mr. BELMONT] is mistaken.

Mr. BELMONT. I will undertake to prove the contrary.

Mr. McCREARY. The statement of the gentleman from New York [Mr. BELMONT] is on a parity with his deductions in his report, where he says that the estimated gain to the Treasury from increased collections is $150,000. He can not prove that; it can not be proved. I have already presented to this House (and the contrary can not be shown) that this bill does double the salaries of twenty-three consuls, and does increase the salaries of thirty-seven from $2,000 to $2,500 and $3,000. That is what the bill does. Now, I ask the House whether good reasons have been given for this increase.

Mr. McKINLEY. Is there any increase in the number of officers?

Mr. McCREARY. There is no increase in the number of salaried consuls, but feed consuls have been changed to salaried consuls.

Mr. BELMONT. Does the bill——

Mr. McCREARY. I decline to be interrupted.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky is entitled to proceed without interruption.

Mr. McCREARY. As the gentleman from New York has twenty-four minutes in which to present his views, it seems to be very fair that he should not interrupt me. Mr. Chairman, for many years the salaries of consuls, as provided in the statutes of the United States, have seemed to be sufficient. Why, then, shall we increase those salaries? Why shall we start an increase of salaries in any respect? I hold that if there is a branch of the public service wherein there should not be an increase of salaries, and wherein no demand is made for any such increase it is our diplomatic and consular service.

As I have before asked, do we find any trouble in getting men to occupy these places? The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CLEMENTS], who asked me a question and would not allow me to answer it, said that the reason why the committee proposed to increase the salaries of certain consuls is that the places to which they are obliged to go are far distant. But we have always found men who were willing to go there on the present salary. During this administration we have found men who are willing to do so.

This bill shows that the first increase for our diplomatic service is $50,500. In all the speeches which have been made I have heard no good reason for this increase of $50,500 in our diplomatic service. No member has shown, in my judgment, a necessity for increasing the salary of the minister to China from $12,500 to $17,500; and I have heard no member undertake even to explain why we should add $12,000 in this bill in order to provide secretaries of legation to the Argentine Republic, to Belgium, to Corea, the Netherlands, the Roumanian, Servian, and Grecian missions, the Swedish and Norwegian missions, Switzerland, and Venezuela. Gentlemen have been as dumb as death on this subject, so far as I could hear. And no gentleman has yet undertaken to show the necessity for appropriating $25,000 for the erection of a legation building in Japan. Whenever we erect a legation building in Japan we commence the business of erecting legation buildings; and next session we shall be called upon to erect such buildings in England, in France, in Germany, in Italy, and in different parts of the world. I am opposed to the erection of legation buildings in Japan.

But my friend from Georgia referred to seventeen cases of consuls whose salaries it is proposed to double, and some of whom collect only $2.50 in the way of fees. I desired that he should answer me and state what amount was collected at Gaboon, in Africa; yet no answer has been received up to this time. When he said that he wanted to pay various consuls additional sums because some of the countries in which they serve are far distant, I desired to ask him the reason for increasing the salary of the consul at Gaspé Basin, Canada. That consul has been receiving $1,000, and this bill doubles the salary, making it $2,000.

Mr. CLEMENTS. Will the gentleman allow me to make one statement?

Mr. McCREARY. The gentleman would not allow me to interrupt him, but I will treat him more graciously.

Mr. CLEMENTS. I do not wish to interrupt the gentleman further than to say that the State Department asks that the office at Gaspé Basin, Canada, be abolished.

Mr. McCREARY. I have great respect for the distinguished and able gentleman at the head of the State Department, and for the eminent and able Assistant Secretary of State; but this is a day of convictions. We, who are here as representatives of the people, ought to have convictions, and ought to have the manliness and courage to stand by our convictions. Although I entertain great respect for the wisdom and intelligence of these gentlemen, my convictions are against the increase of salaries. I came here pledged to restore economy and reduce expenditures; and I can not get my own consent now to increase the salaries of the men belonging to our diplomatic and consular service.

No good reason has been given here to-day for appropriating $18,000 for inspectors of consulates. I endeavored to show when I was last on the floor that two men had been appointed in years gone by as inspectors of consulates; that one of these, Mr. Keim, made his report, which was very severe indeed upon the consuls, and the other, Dr. Newman, made no report. I believe to-day that the best plan is to appoint honest, faithful, and capable men in the consular service. I have no desire to see a gentleman swing round the world, calling upon our consuls, making each one a visit in order to come back and write another report of the style of that of Mr. Keim. The report of the committee—and I call the attention of my friend from New York to this point—states that this bill will bring to the Treasury from increased collections an estimated gain amounting to $150,000. I have investigated the question carefully and closely; I have here tables prepared from the Fifth Auditor's report; and I am unable to find that there is such a gain as stated by the gentleman.

Mr. BELMONT. Will the gentleman now permit an interruption?

Mr. McCREARY. No, sir; you can make your explanation in your speech. There are fifty-one salaried consuls proposed in this bill, in lieu of officers now compensated by fees. The bill also shows that nineteen salaried consulates are proposed at places where there are now simply consular agents, making in all seventy. Adding on the one hand the proposed salaries, and on the other all the fees collected, we find that the salaries for the seventy new consulates amount to $125,000, and the fees collected last year by the different consuls amounted to $140,000, a difference in round numbers of $15,000. If you take away the fees collected at St. Galle and at Annaberg, the aggregate of the fees collected is about the same as the amount of the proposed salaries. It cannot be shown, according to my examination, that this bill only increases the salaries, as the gentleman from New York said, about $40,000. I think the bill will not bear any such interpretation; the report of the Committee on Foreign Affairs admits an increase of $50,500 under the head of diplomatic expenses, and $56,000 increased salaries of consuls, and $50,000 contingent expenses, and $25,000 for the erection of a legation building in Japan, and $18,000 to pay consular inspectors, and $12,000 to pay secretaries. I submit what I deem the proper showing; and I think it can not be denied, for I have made it with great care.

Proposed increase of this bill:
Diplomatic service		$50,500
Consular service		275,080
Total increase		325,580
Reductions:
Legation building in Corea	$5,000
Consul at Mahe	1,500
Salary of one consular clerk ($1,200 to $1,000)	200
Revising consular regulations	3,000
Total reductions		9,700
Net increase		315,880
Amount in last law		1,364,065
Total amount of pending bill		1,679,945
Deduct amount of fees collected at consulates and consular agencies in 1886 where specific salaries are provided by the bill		140,841
		1,539,104
Deduct amount of law last year		1,364,065
Net increase of this bill over law of last year		175,039

In comparison with the salaries from 1877 down to 1881 you have an increase of nearly $400,000.

I said before there is no demand for this increase. There is no demand comes up from those in office.

It has been alleged here to-day we ought to dignify the consular service; we ought to increase the salaries of consuls to a certain compensation because they are not getting enough to live in the style they ought to live in. If you adopt that as the idea to control us, that because an officer can not live in the style he ought to live in, you shall increase his salary, then, sir, ought not many other salaries to be increased? One of the great beauties of this great Republic is its simplicity. We have no desire to copy after the manners and customs of the aristocracy of Europe. If our people live in simplicity and plainness in this Republic why should those we send abroad as consuls live in more grandeur and style because they are foreign ministers and consuls?

I say men we send abroad should be required to live in the same style we live in over here. There is no demand at present for increase of salaries at any point in my judgment. And when I remember the party to which I belong has pledged itself to restore economy and reduce expenses I am opposed to the increase as presented in this bill.

I now yield for three minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. McADOO].

Mr. McADOO. Mr. Chairman, when this bill was up last year for discussion I made some criticism of the manner and style of the consular reports. I wish to say now on examining the reports for last year I find a great improvement in them. They have evidently been carefully edited, and I think the improvement is due not so much to the taste of the consular agents as to the superior editing to which they have been subjected at the Department.

I know of my personal knowledge one consul not far removed from this continent very lately devoted the whole of a state paper to the discussion of his wife's dress and the tremendous success she achieved at a local entertainment in the representation of Columbia. I find, notwithstanding the care taken by the State Department, there are yet a few things in these consular reports which, in my judgment, should be omitted. I find, for instance, our estimable and no doubt our valuable consul at Bordeaux, George Washington Roosevelt, spreads himself in his report on the subject of chestnuts. [Laughter.] Not the chestnuts in Congressional debate beginning: "Mr. Speaker, I am for the people and in favor of the laboring man," or, "I am in favor of the agriculturist," or, as the gentleman from Pennsylvania suggests "the suppression of pleuro-pneumonia," or, "the annihilation of oleomargarine." [Laughter.] But Mr. Roosevelt discusses the chestnut of commerce. He is performing an estimable service to the good housewives of our country, and it will no doubt be taken advantage of by the chincapin gatherers of the district of my friend from Mississippi [Mr. ALLEN] in order to preserve the chestnuts. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BELMONT. I do not understand my friend from New Jersey is opposed to this bill.

Mr. MCADOO. No; not generally.

Mr. BELMONT. Now, Mr. Chairman, I desire to say to my colleague on the committee from Kentucky [Mr. MCCREARY], who has furnished a tabulated statement of his views to the House whcih has remained unanswered in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD for several days for the consideration of members, that while I appreciate the industry and sincerity with which he has approached this question, I can not but believe he has been greatly misled. He has referred to the report of the Fifth Auditor of the Treasury for the last fiscal year as establishing the statements he has put into the RECORD with regard to the compensation paid to and the fees collected by the officers he has named. I will meet him on that ground, and I think I can show conclusively to the House that the gentleman is mistaken both as to his facts and his figures.

The Fifth Auditor's report, it is true, is a very confusing report, and it is natural that a gentleman in looking over its columns should make mistakes in his calculations, and yet it would seem——

Mr. MCCREARY. I am willing to agree that I do make mistakes, but the gentleman will also admit that he makes mistakes.

Mr. BELMONT. I decline to yield. It would seem that there is no room for mistake here; and while I appreciate the trouble of my colleague in the preparation of these tables, still I do think it strange that a member of this committee, a committee which has not only during this session but during the last Congress given its special attention to the diplomatic and consular service, which has reported two bills previously to the House, one for a complete reorganization of the service on a salaried basis, a bill which was certainly before that gentleman for consideration, and to which he agreed, for we made a unanimous report upon the subject——

Mr. MCCREARY. When?

Mr. BELMONT. During the last session.

Mr. MCCREARY. I agreed to the report.

Mr. BELMONT. And I think it very strange, therefore, that this gentleman, a member of the committee, should now furnish the House with a table—I only now speak of the last table published with his remarks in the RECORD of Sunday last, the 6th instant, where he mentions:

Salaried consulates proposed at places where there are now consular agents.

And gives a list of nineteen alleged consular agents (many of them not so) beginning with Reichenberg (which is a feed consulate), and under the head of "salary for 1886" proceeds to state figures, ranging from $48.50 to $1,000, as the "salaries" paid these officers in 1886.

Now, the gentleman from Kentucky is a member of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and should know, after the attention we have given to this subject, that no consular agent in 1886 received any "salary." Consular agents are paid by fees, which they collect and retain.

Mr. MCCREARY. I am talking of the present.

Mr. BELMONT. But the committee will see that the table is misleading, for it gives a list of "salaries." For instance at Farnham the "salary" is put at $48.50! Who could imagine that such should be the salary of a consul? The gentleman from Kentucky should have put in that column at its head "fees," but he puts "salaries," and the House can therefore see the value of the other tables which have been presented by him.

I have made an estimate of the overstatement in regard to increases. In the first table (and I shall ask permission to insert in the RECORD a tabulated statement covering the entire subject)—in the first table there is an overstatement of $10,400 in the actual increase of compensation proposed by the bill to the consuls enumerated in the table of Mr. MCCREARY, as I will presently show. There is an understatement of $2,758.50 in the amount of fees collected at the consulates enumerated in his second table. In table 3 there is an understatement of $15,114.56 in the consular receipts at the consulates named, and table 4 is incorrect as to facts and figures in nearly every item, the figures being taken from the wrong tables, as I have already stated, and I trust——

Mr. MCCREARY. Let me interrupt the gentleman a moment.

Mr. BELMONT. I decline to yield.

Mr. MCCREARY. I would like to show where the gentleman himself is mistaken.

Mr. BELMONT. I will not yield. And if gentlemen will take the trouble to carefully read these tables in the RECORD to-morrow morning, with the comments and explanations I will make in respect to them, they will only do simple justice to the committee, for the tables will explain why it is that a member of the committee should have come in here——

Mr. MCCREARY. I am perfectly willing they should read them.

Mr. BELMONT. And mislead this House of Representatives.

Mr. MCCREARY. Mr. Chairman, I want to say this——

Mr. BELMONT. I decline to yield.

Mr. MCCREARY. If the gentleman means to say that I purposely misled the House, his statement is not true.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York declines to be interrupted.

Mr. BELMONT. I decline to yield to the gentleman. I have no doubt that my colleague on the committee is perfectly sincere, as I stated at the outset, in his criticisms; but he is as mistaken as he may be sincere.

Mr. MCCREARY. I am willing to go to the country on my figures.

Mr. BELMONT. I ask that the tables and explanatory notes I now hand in may be incorporated in the RECORD.

TABLE I.—OVERSTATEMENT OF INCREASE.

[Extracts from table headed "Consular service increase" (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, page 1417), presented in Mr. MCCREARY's speech.]

Consulates.	Present salary.	Proposed salary.	Increase.
Birmingham	$2,500	$3,000	$500
Bremen	2,500	3,000	500
Chemnitz	2,000	3,000	1,000
Nottingham	2,500	3,000	500
Aix-la-Chapelle	1,500	2,500	1,000
Nuremberg	2,000	2,500	500
Cardiff	2,000	2,500	500
Hamilton	2,000	2,500	500
Leeds	2,000	2,500	500
Quebec	1,500	2,000	500
Cadiz	1,500	2,000	500
Total			6,500

COMMENTS.

This table, as printed in the RECORD, is substantially taken from the committee's report, page 5. With this difference: The explanation given in that report, at page 3, that the apparent increase at many of the consulates changed in grade was only apparent, is not given. In each of the above-enumerated consulates the increase of salaries is in compensation for fees from agencies withdrawn. The details are given in appendix to the Estimates, pages 269, 270, and 271, as follows, and are now put in tabular form for convenience of comparison:

Consuls.	Present compensation including fees from agents.	Proposed salaries with agencies taken away.	Decrease in actual compensation.
Birmingham	$3,300	$3,000	$300
Bremen	3,300	3,000	300
Chemnitz	3,000	3,000	.....
Nottingham	3,300	3,000	300
Aix-la-Chapelle	2,500	2,500	.....
Nuremberg	3,000	2,500	500
Cardiff	3,000	2,500	500
Hamilton	3,000	2,500	500
Leeds	3,000	2,500	500
Quebec	2,500	2,000	500
Cadiz	2,500	2,000	500
Total			3,900

There is thus shown a net decrease of $3,900 in the actual compensation of the consuls named, instead of an increase of $6,500.

TABLE II.—UNDERSTATEMENT OF FEES COLLECTED.

Fees collected in 1886, as shown by Fifth Auditor's report.

Pernambuco, Brazil	$973 50
Cape Town, Africa	325 00
Cardiff, Great Britain	288 00
	1,586 50

COMMENTS.

The annual report of the Fifth Auditor to the Secretary of the Treasury for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1886, contains at pages 30 to 35, inclusive, in tabular form, a statement showing the character and amount of fees collected in each consular district during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1886. From that statement it appears that the fees collected at the above-mentioned consulates were as follows:

Fees collected in 1886, as actually shown by Fifth Auditor's report.

Pernambuco, Brazil	$1,604 00
Cape Town, Africa	1,019 50
Cardiff, Great Britain	1,720 50
	4,344 00

There is thus an under-statement in these three items of $2,757.50 in a total footing of $6,307.00 for the whole table.

TABLE III.—UNDERSTATEMENT OF CONSULAR RECEIPTS.

[Extract from table published on first column of page 1419 of the RECORD headed "Salaried consuls proposed in lieu of certain ones now compensated by fees." Presented in Mr. MCCREARY's speech.]

Merida	1,500	1,127 50
Gothenberg	1,500	1,307 00
Total		43,919 90

COMMENTS.

The report of the Fifth Auditor for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, at pages 30 to 35 inclusive, states that the fees collected during that year at the consulates above named were as follows:

Fees collected as per report of Fifth Auditor.

Baranquilla	$3,230 46
Dusseldorf	2,575 00
Brunswick	5,272 00
Dunfermline	3,929 00
St. Galle	7,725 00
Chatham	4,165 00
Port Stanley and St. Thomas	3,204 00
Curaçoa	1,254 00
Cognac	2,915 00
Rouen	4,237 00
Belleville	2,574 00
Coaticook	2,385 50
Collingwood	2,460 50
Morrisburgh	1,492 50
Port Hope	2,297 50
St. Hyacinthe	2,231 25
Stanbridge	2,148 50
Catania	1,654 85
Merida	1,899 40
Gothenberg	1,384 00
	59,034 46

Thus by the report of the Fifth Auditor this is an understatement of $15,114.56 in the consular receipts in the table as published in the speech referred to.

The following table is published on page 1419 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD as part of Mr. MCCREARY'S speech:

COMMENTS.

Reichenberg.—A feed consul (Estimates, page 92), not a consular agent. His compensation from fees exceeds $2,500 per annum (Estimates, appendix, page 272). The amount of "salary" stated in the table is $1,000.

Brockville.—An independent commercial agent (Estimates, page 92), not a dependent consular agent. Compensation from fees, $2,000 (Estimates, appendix, page 275). Amount of "salary" stated in table, $250. The fees collected at this agency for seven months only of the fiscal year 1886 were $1,688.50 (Fifth Auditor's Report, page 25). The total amount of fees stated in the table to have been collected during the whole year is $552.50.

London, Ont.—Commercial agent (Estimates, page 92), not a subordinate consular agent. Compensation, fees, $1,544.50 (Fifth Auditor's Report, page 32). "Salary" stated in table, $102.33.

Farnham.—Compensation from fees, $1,000 (Fifth Auditor's Report, page 20). The salary stated in table is $48.50, which is the percentage of his fees paid over by the consular agent to the consul at Saint John's, Quebec, under whom he serves (Fifth Auditor's Report, page 20).

A similar comment applies to Jerez de la Frontera, Swansea, and other agencies enumerated in the table, where the "salaries" paid are stated to be under $1,000. The figures have either been taken from the wrong tabular statement in the Fifth Auditor's report, or from the wrong column in the right tabular statement.

The tabular statements appended to the report of the Fifth Auditor are so constructed that they are difficult to understand. There is Table B, which purports to give a "statement of consular fees, salaries, and expenses" for all the consulates included in Schedule B; there is Table C, which purports to give a "statement of consular fees, salaries, and expenditures" of all consulates included in Schedule C (which is the $1,000 trading class); and then there is Table D, which professes to give a "statement of consular fees, compensation, expenses, and loss by exchange of all consulates and commercial agencies not included in Schedules B or C." In these three tables, wherever a consulate or commercial agency has a subordinate consular agency attached, the fees of the principal office and the additional fees the principal office receives from its agencies are subdivided.

The tables published in the RECORD of the 6th instant give with regard to consulates that have agencies only the fees collected at the main consulate, whereas the percentage of fees received from the subordinate agencies should be added; and with regard to many, if not all, of the agencies, give as their total collections only the percentage of fees which those agencies have paid over to the main consulates, after withholding their own compensation.

But at page 30 to 35 of the report table "I" is published, which gives a consolidated statement in detail of all the fees collected in each district, and it is from that table that the figures contained in the last three statements published on the 6th instant should principally have been drawn, but were not.

RECAPITULATION.

Table I: An over-statement of $10,400 in the actual increase of compensation proposed by the bill in the consulates enumerated.

Table II: An under-statement of $2,758.50 in the amount of fees collected at the consulates enumerated.

Table III: An under-statement of $15,114.56 in the consular receipts at the consulates indicated.

Table IV: Inaccurate as to facts or figures in nearly every item. The figures being taken from either the wrong tabular statement in the Fifth Auditor's report, or from the wrong column of the right statement.

Mr. BELMONT. As to whether or not this is the time for making the increases of salary proposed in the bill is for the House to say. In view of recent events, I think the House will appreciate the fact that in Canada, at least, there is some need of attention to our consular service, and in this bill it will be found that the Canadian service is especially held in view.

Some doubt has been cast by the gentleman from Delaware [Mr. LORE] as to whether or not there was a misunderstanding between the Committee on Foreign Affairs and the State Department. I found it very difficult, as I did in the case of the gentleman from Kentucky, to interrupt him in his remarks, but I did undertake to say that the misunderstanding was confined to Delaware. Upon reading the RECORD this morning I found that this statement was omitted; and I take occasion to repeat that it does not seem strange to me that the gentleman from Delaware should have opposed the recommendations of the Department of State when he also opposed the recommendations of the Navy Department at the time the reorganization bill was before the House, though he himself is a member of the Naval Committee.

I do not care whether our friends upon the other side are interested in our differences of opinion on this side or not, because I believe there will elapse many years before they will obtain any benefit from such differences. We may differ very safely, and even widen our differences if need be; and for my part I have no objection at all to standing among those who desire some improvement in the public service, even though that improvement should involve some increase of expenditure. We do not understand that the changes we propose in the consular service will involve any drain upon the Treasury. We are satisfied from the statements of the Department itself, statements which the Committee on Foreign Affairs, at least, is entitled to repeat to the House, statements to which we can give the greatest confidence—we are satisfied from those statements, as I will show in the RECORD, if the House permits me to establish it by presenting the figures, that this bill increases the appropriation in actual amount only $196,000; and if we take the very lowest estimate which the Department has made of the increase of revenue that will result through increased collections to the Treasury, the whole bill will simply increase the expenditures for the foreign service of the Government over the appropriation of last year to the amount of $40,900.

As shown in the report, the total increase in the diplomatic service (including the cost of legation buildings for Japan and Siam) is			$50,500
The consular increase is (on the face of the appropriations)		$274,800
Less fees of consular agencies abolished, as shown in appendix to Estimates	$10,400
Less fees now retained by officers to be hereafter paid by salaries	120,000
		130,400
			144,400
			194,900
From which, if the increase of revenue from closer collection of duties (which at the lowest estimate is placed at $150,000) be still further deducted			$150,000
Leaves the total cost to the Treasury			40,900

My colleague [Mr. MCCREARY] has challenged proof of the saving to the revenue. He has distinctly called my attention to this point, and has proceeded to demonstrate by tables compiled from the Fifth Auditor's report, which have no bearing on the subject, that an increase is impossible. It is not expected that the enhanced revenues will be derived from consular fees, but from the removal of the facilities which the fee system now affords for the undervalution of invoices by importers and consequent loss of duties by the Government. One instance involving $20,000 was mentioned in the debate on Saturday; another case involving $15,000 has been mentioned to-day.

All consuls, commercial agents, and consular agents paid by fees have a maximum, fixed by the Secretary of State, of fees they are allowed to retain. Everything they collect over that they must return to the United States. In Canada there are a hundred or more consular officers paid by fees, who, under ordinary circumstances, would never collect up to their maximum. It makes no difference to these men what kind of returns they make to the United States, because they will never be called upon to account for any surplus collections over their maximum. Consequently to obtain business they cut down the scale of fees prescribed by the United States, in order to get the importers of Canadian produce to deal with them in preference to salaried consuls, who would be compelled to charge and return full fees, and they make false returns to the Government, representing that they have collected the legal fees when they have not.

Thus they double their own receipts, but for every extra dollar they make themselves they take a dollar and a half out of the Treasury of the United States which would otherwise get in there if the importer had to do business with a salaried consul.

The evils of this system were laid before the House to-day by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CLEMENTS] in a letter from the consul at Fort Erie. I will ask that the portions I have marked may be printed, without taking up the time of the House by reading them:

No. 20.] UNITED STATES CONSULATE,
Fort Erie, Canada, March 10, 1886.

SIR: On reading your circular bearing date January 26, 1886, on the subject of careless and improper use of the consul seal, and also that of January 28, 1886, as to consular clerks acting as agents of shippers, it occurred to me that these and many other abuses may and do exist because of the great number of inland, commercial, and consular agents depending solely on fees for their compensation, many of these agents not being citizens of the United States, and taking no interest in the service or in the welfare of our Government, and in fact caring for nothing except the amount of fees which they may be able to make.

It is [a] current report here, and I have been so informed by my predecessor, that those agents appoint railroad employés and others as subagents to intercept and get business for them, allowing them a percentage of the fees for the same, and that they supply them with blanks signed and sealed, to be afterwards filled up.

I find affidavits of shippers on record in this office, proving that they obtained their certificates in this way, and showing that in some cases the station agents refused to forward the freight until the shippers consented to take their certificates from them. I think it would be safe to say that hundreds of so-called consular certificates are issued, the shipper or declarant never seeing the consular officer to whom the declaration purports to have been made and whose signature is attached.

The inland agencies are on lines of roads terminating at Fort Erie or Clifton, which are the ports of clearance to the United States of a great bulk of the products of this Province, or at other salaried consulates on the frontier; so that they simply divert business from its natural channels and absorb the revenue which would otherwise accrue to the Government.

This matter of inland agencies has heretofore been under consideration, and I find by the record that in 1868 they were discontinued on investigation by and report of the Commissioner of Customs, that in his opinion "the interior agencies were not necessary, and were an obstruction to business."

When I asked why they were again established after having been thus discontinued, I was answered that continued application was being made, and that as long as a consular agent was allowed $1,000, and a commercial agent $2,500 from the fees, there would be no lack of applicants with memorials numerously signed, urging the great necessity of such agencies.

This system of inland unsalaried agencies leads to continued strife and contest for fees, and tends very much to lower the standing of the officers and the dignity of the office, and to lessen the pride which any man may justly feel as the representative of the Republic in a foreign land.

If an economic view of the subject be taken, very strong reasons will appear why such agencies should be discontinued and the business done by the salaried consuls located at or near the ports of clearance.

In 1870, after the discontinuance of inland agencies, and when the commerce of this province was not near as large as now, and the consul's compensation amounted to $2,000, this office netted to the Government an annual revenue of over $4,000. At that time Port Stanley and St. Thomas and Port Rowan agencies were embraced within this consular district. Now the same extent of territory, including these agencies, is not self-sustaining.

The deficit made good by the Government, and the former revenue accruing to it, constitute a loss of at least $4,500 yearly.

I inclose exhibits 1 and 2, compiled from the report of the Fifth Auditor of the Treasury for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1885, showing salaried and unsalaried consulates and their agencies, the amount of fees collected by each, the compensation of salary, and the rent account and contingent expenses.

Exhibit 1 shows that the fees collected by salaried officers and their agents amounted to $26,750; the salaries to $16,000, and contingent expenses and rent to $2,745.

Exhibit 2 shows that the fees collected by unsalaried officers and their agents amounted to $22,931; the compensation to $20,979, and contingent expenses to $517.65.

Now, all the fees collected by both classes of officers amounted to $49,681. If the business were done by the salaried counsels alone, deducting salaries, rent, and contingent expenses, which amount to the sum of $18,745, there would be returned to the Treasury a balance of $30,936. Allowing a margin for additional expenses because of increased business at the consulates, and for an increase of salary, as recommended by the President and as now being under consideration in the Committee on Foreign Relations, and let that margin be $10,936, the consular service of the province of Ontario alone would yield to the Government an annual revenue of $20,000.

The services would be performed by men having a due sense of their responsibility, feeling it to be their duty and incumbent upon them to perform their official functions in such a manner as to forward the commercial interests of their country, and command for themselves and their Government the respect of the people among whom they may be temporarily domiciled.

Upon receiving your circulars hereinbefore referred to, and upon thought that some legislation relative to the consular service is now under discussion, I deemed the time opportune to communicate to you my observation and views, and I respectfully submit these suggestions for the consideration of the Department.

I am, sir, your obedient servant,

JAMES WHELAN, Consul.

HON. JAS. D. PORTER,
Assistant Secretary of State, Washington, D. C.

This matter was also discussed in a report (No. 1938) which was made to the House by the Committee on Foreign Affairs last session, to which the gentleman [Mr. MCCREARY] himself assented.

I will make one extract:

There can be no question that the adoption of the plan proposed (that is, of paying all officers by salaries) would correct many abuses and indirectly benefit the Treasury in various ways. It would remove the temptation which now exists for consular officers to enter into collusion with shippers for the sake of obtaining their custom, and to the detriment of the revenue. It would put an end to a practice which it is believed largely prevails in Canada among consular agents who (knowing they will not collect more than their maximum, and therefore will never be called upon to make good the difference between the face of their returns and their actual collections) charge less than the scale of fees established by law for the certification of invoices, so as to obtain business in competition with other agents, and at the same time enter the proper charges on their returns.

The gain to the Treasury by the abrogation of this system it is believed will be very considerable. In this and in many other ways, it is therefore expected that from an economical point of view the proposed change will be beneficial, and every other consideration renders it most desirable. The system of compensation by fees is demoralizing to the service. Its abolition has been recommended by successive Secretaries of State. The Forty-seventh Congress directed the Department to prepare an estimate of the amount required to put the consular service on a salaried basis, and in accordance with those instructions a report and a proposed bill were drawn up (Executive Document No. 121, Forty-eighth Congress), but no action was had thereon. A change to a system of fixed salaries, as now proposed, was recommended by the present Secretary of State, and is among the reforms of the consular service commended to the attention of Congress by the President, and by the House referred to this committee.

But suppose the increase proposed by the bill were really $196,000, what shall be said when a bill (which I would have voted for had I been present) appropriating $1,500,000 for a public building in the city of Brooklyn went through this House this week with scarcely an objection? What will the country say when it finds a bill like that goes through without debate, while a bill appropriating for our whole diplomatic and consular service, for the establishment of buildings for contingent expenses, in fact for the whole foreign intercourse, scarcely any larger amount, in fact only a little over $1,600,000, has been debated and combated at every opportunity since Saturday last? It was my appreciation of the amounts contained in this bill, and of the purposes of the committee to present only such a measure as the necessities of the service called for, that induced me to ask on Saturday last that we might go on to the reading of the bill after a brief explanation of its provisions. I now move, Mr. Chairman, that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. BLOUNT reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 10396) making appropriations for the diplomatic and consular service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and for other purposes, had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. BELMONT. I move that the House do now adjourn.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT PORTSMOUTH, OHIO.

Mr. THOMPSON. I ask the gentleman to yield to me for a moment.

Mr. BELMONT. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. THOMPSON. I ask unanimous consent to discharge the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 6976) to erect a public building at Portsmouth, Ohio, and that the same be put upon its passage.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to purchase or otherwise provide a site and cause to be erected thereon a substantial and commodious building, with fire-proof vaults, for the use and accommodation of the post-office and for other Government uses, at Portsmouth, Ohio. The site and building thereon, when completed upon plans and specifications to be previously made and approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, shall not exceed in cost the sum of $60,000; nor shall any site be purchased until estimates for the erection of a building which will furnish sufficient accommodations for the transaction of the public business, and which shall not exceed in cost the balance of the sum herein limited after the site shall have been purchased and paid for, shall have been approved by the Secretary of the Treasury; and no purchase of site, nor plan for said building, shall be approved by the Secretary of the Treasury involving an expenditure exceeding the said sum of $60,000 for site and building; and the site purchased shall leave the building unexposed to danger from fire by an open space of at least 40 feet, including streets and alleys: Provided, That no part of said sum shall be expended until a valid title to the said site shall be vested in the United States, nor until the State of Ohio shall cede to the United States exclusive jurisdiction over the same, during the time the United States shall be or remain the owner thereof, for all purposes except the administration of the criminal laws of said State and the service of civil process therein.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. THOMPSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BELMONT. I renew my motion that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. KING. I ask unanimous consent——

Several members called for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the motion to adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 50 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

It will be referred to the Committee on Education and Labor for their consideration.

Mr. BLAIR. I do not know whether that is a proper reference of the claim. I should like to know the reason why the Committee on Claims have not considered the bill.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. PLUMB presented a memorial of the Legislature of Kansas; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

House concurrent resolution memorializing Congress upon the subject of pensions.

Whereas the arrears-of-pension act of Congress of March 3, 1879, provides that all pensions granted on application filed on or after July 1, 1880, shall commence from that date; and

Whereas many brave and disabled soldiers were denied arrears under this act, and without any cause for this exclusion; and

Whereas pensions granted should be commensurate with the period of disability: Therefore,

It is resolved by the house of representatives of the State of Kansas (the senate concurring therein), That Congress be requested to repeal so much of the act of 1879 as relates to the arrears limit, and the act be so amended as to extend such limit, as follows:

1. To continue pensions to all widows and dependent relatives without demanding proof that the pensioner's death was caused by his service. 2. To pension the dependent parents when the pensioner leaves neither widow or orphan. 3. To pension survivors of rebel prisons without requiring proof that the disability resulted from their imprisonment. 4. To pension all honorably discharged Union soldiers and sailors who are now dependent upon their own labor for support, or who are fifty-five years old.

And it is further resolved, That our Representatives in Congress be, and are hereby, requested to use all proper and honorable means to secure legislation in accordance with the sentiment herein expressed.

And the secretary of state is hereby directed to transmit a certified copy of this resolution to each Senator and Member of the House of Representatives from this State.

[SEAL.] E. B. ALLEN, Secretary of State.

Mr. PLUMB presented a memorial of the Legislature of Kansas; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

House concurrent resolution No. 12.

Whereas liberal grants of land have heretofore been made by Congress to aid in the construction of railroads within the State of Kansas; and

Whereas it has been officially reported and is generally believed that in the administration of said grants great injustice has been done to the State and people of Kansas;

That lands within the State have been patented to the railroad companies which lawfully belonged to settlers and citizens of the State;

That lands have been patented to said companies in excess of the amount to which they were lawfully entitled;

That lands have been withdrawn and are now withheld from market for the benefit of said companies, "by order of the Secretary of the Interior," without authority, and in violation of law;

That parts of the lines of definite location of said roads have been abandoned, and the grants floated and made to conform to new and widely different lines, in violation of law;

That the railroad companies have sold lands to citizens of the State who were lawfully entitled to such lands under the homestead and pre-emption laws;

That there have been patented to said companies, lands which lie outside and beyond the limit of the grants;

That indemnity lands have been patented to certain railroad companies, in lieu of lands occupied by homestead and pre-emption settlers, and subsequently the rights of such settlers have been contested, their entries canceled, and their lands patented to said companies without authority, and in violation of law: Now, therefore,

Be it resolved by the house of representatives of the State of Kansas (the senate concurring therein, That our Senators in Congress be instructed and our Representatives requested to support and use their influence in favor of such legislation as will secure a speedy and lawful adjustment of each and all of said grants. Also, that they use their influence before the proper Executive Departments of the Government at Washington in furtherance of such an adjustment, to the end that the rights of the State and citizens of Kansas may be secured and protected.

Resolved, That a certified copy of these resolutions be forwarded by the secretary of state to each of the Kansas Senators and Representatives in Congress, and also a copy each to the Secretary of the Interior and President of the United States.

He also presented a memorial of the Chamber of Commerce of San Francisco, Cal., favoring legislation for harbor defense and increase of the Navy; which was referred to the Committee on Coast Defenses.

He also presented a memorial of the Chamber of Commerce of San Francisco, Cal., urging the importance of reciprocity with Spain relative to the raisin trade; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a memorial of the Chamber of Commerce of San Francisco, Cal., favoring appropriations for the maintenance of a branch hydrographic office in that city; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. SABIN presented a concurrent resolution adopted by the Legislature of Minnesota, favoring the passage of the bill to extirpate pleuropneumonia and other contagious cattle diseases; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented a memorial of the Board of Trade of the city of Minneapolis, Minn., indorsed by the Legislature of Minnesota, with reference to the improvement of modern routes of transportation; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, presented six petitions of citizens of Washington, D. C., praying for the passage of the bill to incorporate the Washington Cable Railway Company; which were referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

WILLIAM ERVIN.

Mr. SPOONER. I present the report of the committee of conference on the bill (S. 542) for the relief of William Ervin.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 542) for the relief of William Ervin, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House of Representatives recede from its amendment to the Senate bill.

JOHN C. SPOONER,
J. N. DOLPH,
J. K. JONES,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

JAMES D. RICHARDSON,
JAMES T. JOHNSTON,
JOHN J. KLEINER,
Managers on the part of the House.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The House having receded from its amendment, there is no further action necessary.

Mr. HARRIS. Except the agreement to the report of the committee of conference which disposes of the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair announced that the House having receded, no further action was required.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. HARRIS, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 9125) to create a school board for the District of Columbia, and to prescribe its powers and duties, reported it without amendment.

Mr. SPOONER. I am instructed by the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2542) to pay John Pope Hodnett for services rendered as counsel to the Government in the investigation into affairs of the District of Columbia, acting as such counsel by order of a resolution of the House of Representatives; also for acting as counsel for the workingmen of the District of Columbia for fifteen years last past, to report it with a recommendation that the committee be discharged from its further consideration, and that it it be referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. BLAIR. I should like to ask if that is done with any recommendation or after any examination on the part of the Committee on Claims?

Mr. SPOONER. It is done after a hearing by the Committee on Claims of the claimant, who stated, and the committee thought with very great force, that as the subject related to services rendered to the laboring men of this District, the bill came fairly and properly and naturally within the jurisdiction of the committee presided over by the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. BLAIR. Is it to be understood that this is not referred to the Committee on Education and Labor with any black eye or subject to any prejudice from the action of the Committee on Claims? I do not like that a claim shall be sent to the committee which I happen to be chairman of, simply to get rid of it.

Mr. SPOONER. The change of reference is recommended because the Committee on Claims thought that the Committee on Education and Labor was the proper committee, and because the claimant preferred that the bill should be considered by that committee, and without any recommendation as to the merits of the bill by the Committee on Claims. If the bill shall receive any black eye it will be placed entirely to the charge of the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. BLAIR. I suppose that perhaps it is a case where it is necessary for the claimant to appear before our committee in order to get justice, and we shall consider the claim.

Mr. SPOONER. We are willing that you shall so consider it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report is agreed to.

Mr. VANCE, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (S. 644) for the better security of persons and greater facility of transportation on street railroads within the District of Columbia, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 536) for the relief of John L. Lake, jr., submitted an adverse report thereon, and moved its indefinite postponement.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the bill will be indefinitely postponed.

Mr. GEORGE. I object to that. I wish to have the bill placed on the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed on the Calendar with the adverse report of the committee.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 733) for the relief of Edward Fitzgerald, trustee of the Catholic church at Fort Smith, Ark., reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. HAWLEY, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 38) for the relief of Alfred Hedberg, reported it with amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. MANDERSON, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 5959) granting a right of way through certain public lands of the United States in the Territory of Utah, and for other purposes, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

BRIG GENERAL ARMSTRONG.

Mr. FRYE. I am instructed by the Committee on Foreign Relations, to whom was referred the message of the President, transmitting a letter from the Secretary of State, relative to the fund for the owners and crew of the brig General Armstrong, to report that no further legislation is necessary, with the reasons of the committee, which I ask to have printed. I suppose the communication would lie on the table, would it not?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The document will lie on the table, and the report will be printed.

PRESERVATION OF DIPLOMATIC DOCUMENTS.

Mr. MORRILL. I ask for the consideration of the joint resolution (S. R. 105) introduced by me on the 8th of February, and ordered to lie on the table.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont asks unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the joint resolution referred to by him.

Mr. HARRIS. Let it be reported for information subject to objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be read, subject to objection.

Mr. MORRILL. I will modify it by adding a clause to the first section.

The Chief Clerk read the joint resolution, as follows:

A joint resolution (S. R. 105) for the preservation of the official correspondence, documents, and other historical material on file in the various legations and consulates of the United States.

Resolved, &c., That any and all diplomatic and consular correspondence and accompanying documents which shall have remained on file in the legations or consulates of any of the diplomatic or consular representatives of the United States, upon any subject which shall have been finally determined and settled for the period of one year, shall be forwarded by the head of any such legation or consulate to the State Department at Washington, D. C., for file and preservation.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of State is hereby instructed to take the necessary steps to carry this resolution into effect.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Vermont will be stated.

Mr. MORRILL. I modify it. I have a right to modify it.

The CHIEF CLERK. At the end of section 1 it is proposed to add:

And the same, at the discretion of the Secretary, shall be filed and preserved.

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. CAMERON introduced a bill (S. 3286) to increase the naval establishment; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. HARRIS. By request of the commissioners of the District of Columbia, I introduce a bill.

The bill (S. 3287) relating to the construction of sewers and laying of water-mains in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. HALE introduced a bill (S. 3288) to provide for the increase of the naval establishment; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. HALE. Let me say that these two bills—the one just introduced by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON] and this one by myself—relate to different branches of the naval establishment. They are not in any way the same bill. I move that the bill be referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SAWYER (by request) introduced a bill (S. 3289) to establish a practice for the settlement of claims for pensions and to amend certain sections of the Revised Statutes of the United States relating to pensions, and certain laws relating to pensions enacted since the revision of the statutes, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. PLUMB introduced a bill (S. 3290) granting a pension to Sarah R. Brooks; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. GEORGE. At the request of a colleague in the other House, Hon. E. BARKSDALE, I introduce a bill.

The bill (S. 3291) referring the petition and papers in the case of George T. Swan, administrator of the estate of George T. Swan, deceased, in so far as the same relates to cotton seized, to the Court of Claims, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. HOAR introduced a bill (S. 3292) in aid of the erection of a monument to the memory of General Joseph Warren, who fell at the battle of Bunker Hill; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Library.

Mr. STANFORD (by request) introduced a bill (S. 3293) to provide mortars and heavy guns for the armament of the forts, coast defenses, and vessels of the United States; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Coast Defenses.

Mr. EUSTIS introduced a bill (S. 3294) to enable the Secretary of the Interior to pay certain creditors of the Pottawatomie Indians out of the funds of said Indians; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. DOLPH introduced a bill (S. 3295) to authorize Dalles City to construct a bridge across the Columbia River, in the State of Oregon and Territory of Washington; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

AMENDMENTS TO BILLS.

Mr. PAYNE submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the river and harbor bill; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. HARRIS. I offer an amendment intended to be proposed to what is called the Fourth of July claims bill. I move that it be printed, and, with the accompanying documents, referred to the Committee on Claims. I offer the amendment by request. I do not know anything about its merits.

The motion was agreed to.

MASSACRE NEAR FORT PHIL. KEARNEY.

Mr. DAWES submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be directed to communicate to the Senate a copy of the report of Col. Henry B. Carrington, of the massacre of December 21, 1866, near Fort Phil. Kearney, with accompanying list of casualties.

INDIAN OPERATIONS ON THE PLAINS.

Mr. DAWES submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be directed to communicate to the Senate a copy of the history of Indian operations on the plains, furnished by Col. Henry B. Carrington to a special commission which met at Fort McPherson, Nebr., in the spring of 1867.

SURRENDER OF GERONIMO.

Mr. DAWES submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be directed to communicate to the Senate copies of all dispatches of General Miles referring to the surrender of Geronimo, and of all instructions given to and correspondence with General Miles in reference to the same.

RELATIONS OF LABOR AND CAPITAL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution which comes over under objection.

The resolution submitted yesterday by Mr. BLAIR was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Education and Labor be directed to continue, with a view to its completion during the ensuing vacation, the investigation of the relations between labor and capital hitherto authorized and directed by the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

WILLIAM WEBSTER.

Mr. PLUMB. I move the consideration of the resolution I introduced on a previous day.

Mr. MORGAN. Several days ago I reported, by direction of the Committee on Foreign Relations, a resolution in respect to the claim of William Webster against the Government of Great Britain. While awaiting the printing of the report, which is somewhat extensive, that resolution went on the Calendar by mistake merely. I desire that it shall have such a place before the Senate as that to-morrow morning I can call it up as business that went over on objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution referred to is on the Calendar subject to motion, but there is another motion pending, submitted by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB], so that the motion of the Senator from Alabama is not now in order.

Mr. MORGAN. The only point is that the Chair would lay it before the Senate to-morrow, if it were not on the Calendar. The resolution was placed on the Calendar by mistake.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Alabama can ask for unanimous consent.

Mr. MORGAN. I ask unanimous consent.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Alabama asks unanimous consent that to-morrow the resolution referred to shall be laid before the Senate at the end of the call for "concurrent or other resolutions." Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

REJECTION OF PENSION CLAIMS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the resolution heretofore submitted by him, calling on the Secretary of the Interior for information concerning the rule whereby applicants for pensions have been denied a hearing for the reason that they had applied to Congress for relief. The resolution will be read subject to objection.

Mr. HARRIS. I appeal to the Senator from Kansas to let us proceed with the special order, the consideration of House bills and joint resolutions on the Calendar.

Mr. PLUMB. I have no reason to suppose that this resolution of inquiry will excite debate. It will be very unusual if it does.

Mr. HARRIS. Is it not a resolution that has caused some hours' debate on previous mornings?

Mr. PLUMB. And for that reason, I presume, it will take no further time. It ought not to have taken any in the first instance.

Mr. HARRIS. Perhaps not, from the standpoint of the Senator, but from the standpoint of others it may possibly lead to the consumption of the entire morning hour.

Mr. PLUMB. I shall be very sorry for that. It will not be my fault if it takes any time except that necessary to read it and vote on it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be read subject to objection.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution submitted by Mr. PLUMB January 28, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be directed to inform the Senate whether there is any rule of his Department applied in the Pension Bureau, or any rule of said bureau existing and applied with his knowledge or consent, whereby any applicant for pension is denied a hearing in said bureau concerning his claim by reason of said applicant having petitioned Congress for relief.

Mr. HARRIS. I shall object to the consideration of the resolution until a majority of the Senate decide to consider it.

Mr. PLUMB. I make the point of order that it is not subject to a single objection. I think the present occupant of the chair has ruled that when a resolution has been presented and goes over on objection, it is subject to be called up as a matter of right when the order of resolutions is reached on a subsequent day.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will state that the special order made by the Senate on motion of the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS] is now before the Senate. Pending the execution of that order it is in order for the Senator from Kansas to move to proceed to the consideration of the resolution.

Mr. PLUMB. I move to proceed to the consideration of the resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the resolution just read.

The motion was agreed to; there being on a division—ayes 36, noes 19.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution is before the Senate, and the question is on agreeing to the amendment submitted by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL].

Mr. COCKRELL. My recollection is that upon that amendment the yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If that is true the Chair will take the question in that way. The Chair is informed that the yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the resolution be read and then the proposed amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution has been read. The amendment will now be read.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President——

The CHIEF CLERK. At the end of the resolution add:

And if there be no such rule, then to inform the Senate who wrote the letter of January 27, 1887, touching the pension claim of David C. Canfield, and when such employé was appointed in the Pension Office.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Colorado ask for the reading of the original resolution?

Mr. TELLER. No; I only wanted to inquire what the yeas and nays had been called on. I understand that it is on the amendment of the Senator from Missouri.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is. The Secretary will call the roll on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Missouri.

The yeas and nays were taken.

Mr. VAN WYCK (after having voted in the negative). I desire to withdraw my vote. I am paired with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY].

Mr. COLQUITT. I am paired with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. CHACE].

Mr. MCPHERSON (after having voted in the affirmative). I desire to withdraw my vote. I am paired with my colleague [Mr. SEWELL] generally on political questions, and this has assumed a political form.

The result was announced—yeas 21, nays 31; as follows:

YEAS—21.

Beck,	Coke,	Morgan,	Walthall,
Berry,	George,	Payne,	Whitthorne,
Blackburn,	Gibson,	Ransom,	Wilson of Md.

So the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

DISTRICT GAS SUPPLY.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The first bill on the Calendar under the order adopted on motion of the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS] will now be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (H. R. 7596) to enable foreign executors and administrators to sue in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes.

Mr. SPOONER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 2819) relating to the manufacture and sale of gas in the city of Washington, in the District of Columbia, and amendatory of an act entitled "An act regulating gas-works," approved June 23, 1874.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Pending the consideration of the first House bill on the Calendar under the order, the Senator from Wisconsin moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill indicated by him.

Mr. HARRIS. I appeal to the Senator from Wisconsin, my colleague upon the Committee on the District of Columbia, to let that bill go over until we get through with the call of the House bills. I do not think it will take more than an hour to complete that call if we proceed at once, and then I shall be very glad to co-operate with him in securing consideration for the bill to which he refers.

Mr. SPOONER. The bill I have moved received at the hands of the Committee on the District of Columbia very careful consideration, and I think should be acted upon by the Senate in time to receive action in the House of Representatives. There is, I understand, but one day more of this session to be devoted to District business in that body, and I am anxious that the bill shall be disposed of here.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Pending the consideration of the order, the Senator from Wisconsin moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill indicated by him.

The motion was agreed to; there being on a division—ayes 26, noes 16; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. SPOONER. I am instructed by the Committee on the District of Columbia to offer an amendment, which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to add to the bill as new sections the following:

SEC. —. That from and after June 30, 1887, the price of illuminating gas in all parts of the District of Columbia shall be uniform. That the Georgetown Gaslight Company is hereby authorized and empowered to consolidate with the Washington Gaslight Company, by the exchange of the stock of the Georgetown Gaslight Company for the stock of the Washington Gaslight Company on such terms and in such proportions as may be agreed upon between the said companies; and the said Washington Gaslight Company shall continue to be known and styled the Washington Gaslight Company, as heretofore; and for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this act the Washington Gaslight Company is hereby authorized to issue seven thousand five hundred shares of its capital stock in addition to the amount now authorized by law; and the stock of the Georgetown Gaslight Company so exchanged shall be canceled by the Washington Gaslight Company.

SEC. —. That as soon as the said exchange of stock shall have been made the Georgetown Gaslight Company shall turn over and deliver all its property, books, accounts, claims, and evidences of debt to the Washington Gaslight Company, which latter company shall thereupon become the owner thereof; and the said Washington Gaslight Company shall become liable for and assume all the debts of the Georgetown Gaslight Company. The said Washington Gaslight Company shall thereupon be, and it is hereby, authorized and empowered to extend its mains and pipes across Rock Creek into West Washington and connect them with those of said Georgetown Gaslight Company, and to maintain them, and to manufacture, distribute, and sell gas in West Washington under the same terms and conditions and in the same manner as it is now or may hereafter be authorized by law to do in the city of Washington, and also to exercise the same franchises, rights, and powers, and enjoy the same privileges, in said West Washington as it is by law authorized to exercise in the city of Washington.

SEC. —. That the said corporation known as the Georgetown Gaslight Company, upon the delivery of the said property to the Washington Gaslight Company, shall cease and determine: Provided, That nothing in this act shall interfere with any contract or any action at law or suit in equity: And provided further, That nothing herein contained shall in any way interfere with or prejudice the franchise, powers, rights, or privileges of the said Washington Gaslight Company now held and exercised by it, the true intent and meaning of this act being to authorize the said Washington Gaslight Company to extend its works and operations so as to supply gas to the people of West Washington upon the same terms and conditions as it does or shall hereafter do to the city of Washington.

Mr. SPOONER. I offer that as an amendment to come in after section 3.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FRYE. Does the price fixed at $1 per thousand feet still remain?

Mr. SPOONER. The price is fixed at $1 per thousand.

Mr. FRYE. Is there any city in the United States where gas is furnished at such a price?

Mr. SPOONER. Yes, sir.

Mr. FRYE. Where?

Mr. SPOONER. At Louisville and the other cities named in the report of the committee. It is furnished in Chicago for a dollar, and it is furnished at Nashville, Tenn., for a dollar. I may say to the Senator from Maine that the committee were not absolutely satisfied upon the investigation they made that $1 would be a fair rate to be allowed to the company. It is very difficult to obtain on an investigation of the kind all the data so necessary to an absolutely accurate conclusion. From all we could learn we thought that, situated as this company is, $1 would be a fair rate and would give the company a fair profit, there being a constantly increasing demand. We have therefore provided in the bill that if at any time the rate of $1 should be found for any reason—changes in the price of coal, for example, caused by strikes or otherwise, or combination affecting prices—to be inadequate to give this corporation 7 per cent. net dividend upon $2,000,000 of capitalization, upon investigation by a board to be appointed by the Secretary of War and adequate proof by the company (which possess, of course, all the information upon the subject), a license may be issued to the company to charge a rate which will give them 7 per cent. We felt that in that way the burden of establishing what is a fair rate would be placed upon the company, where it belongs; and surely no man will claim that the company should have a higher dividend on its stock than 7 per cent. We endeavored by this device to make the rule flexible, and to make it fair to the stockholders of the corporation as well as fair to the public.

Mr. FRYE. I did not notice the provisions to which the Senator refers. That is a saving clause. It struck me if this simply fixed the price at $1 per thousand feet, from an investigation made by the committee, that it was rather a high-handed proceeding on the rights of the corporation; but the provision the Senator refers to may save it.

Mr. SPOONER. It would not be so high-handed a proceeding if it were made $1 and absolutely left at that sum.

I do not think there is a Senator who would not so decide upon a hearing. On investigation, the evidence satisfied us that the cost of manufacturing gas in this city was very much less than the cost stated to us by the company. We find that at the West Point works, owned by the Government, where the demand is limited and the cost is greater, they manufacture and distribute gas at 75 cents per thousand cubic feet.

The statement of an expert, a gentleman commended to the committee by the president of this company, and universally known as a great expert on this subject, Mr. Vanderpoel, satisfied us that they are charging too much. We learned from an address of Mr. Vanderpoel, made to an association of gas experts, that the cost of manufacturing gas, exclusive of the cost of distribution, was only about 39 cents. This was some years ago, and with coal at a much higher price than this company pays or will be likely to pay for it; and that, too, by companies which were subjected more or less to competition, which this company is not. We thought it would be unwise to admit here competition by rival gas companies, to tear up the streets of this city. We thought it would be better to regulate in some fair and flexible way—and this we attempt by this bill—the price of gas, and to leave this corporation where it has its plant and its mains to render service to the public under proper regulations by Congress.

Mr. GORMAN. I should like to inquire of the Senator reporting this bill why the matter to be investigated should be confided to the Secretary of War; why he is to examine into the affairs of this gaslight company, and to decide what is proper to be done hereafter. Is it the intention of the committee to place this matter in the hands of the engineer officers of the Army? Why not leave it in the hands of the Secretary of the Interior to choose the best experts, not connected with the Army, to investigate the subject?

Mr. SPOONER. The Secretary of War is not confined by the bill to army officers in forming the board, but is limited only by the requirement that the experts shall be experts, and shall be entirely competent and disinterested. It was thought that the Secretary of War was the officer who had more time to give such attention as is involved in the duty, a personal examination by him, than perhaps the Secretary of the Interior. My own judgment at first was that it would be better to leave it where it has been hitherto, within the jurisdiction of the Secretary of the Interior, but members of the committee who have had more to do with the Government than I have had and with the administration of the Departments thought it would be better to leave it to the Secretary of War.

Mr. GORMAN. The people of the District of Columbia are governed, as we all know, by a commission which they have no earthly power to control the appointment of; and practically all the main needs of the District are in the hands of army officers, and especially engineer officers. Such a system is unquestionably very unsatisfactory to this people, and, for one, I want to enter my protest against the enlargement of the duties assigned to army officers, honest and capable as they are. It produces constant friction. They give no consideration, or not the proper consideration, to the people of this District. I do not know that there is any government on the face of the earth that is more autocratic and less in the interest of the people than that conducted by army officers when you assign them to the performance of civil duties.

Heretofore the regulation of gas companies and other corporations has naturally and properly belonged to the Interior Department. It is possible that the Secretary of the Interior has no power to make such investigations as are here proposed, under the present regulations; but I for one protest against the enlargement of the powers and duties in solely civil matters entrusted to army officers.

I therefore move to strike out from section 2, and wherever it occurs, the phrase "Secretary of War" and insert "Secretary of the Interior," giving him power to employ experts, the best in the country, to examine this whole question—civilians, and not army officers.

Mr. SPOONER. I have no objection to that amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PALMER in the chair). If there be no objection, the amendment will be considered as made.

Mr. GORMAN. Wherever the term occurs strike out "Secretary of War" and insert "Secretary of the Interior."

Mr. SPOONER. Wherever it occurs.

Mr. MORRILL. I do not object to this bill if it is the best bill that can be reported by the Committee on the District of Columbia. My impression, however, is that they are giving us a bill that will inflict on the District the very poorest kind of gas; that is, gas made from naptha, benzine, and oil. I should much have preferred from my experience of gas in this city that we should have provided a higher price for gas that was of the very best quality which can be made solely from coal.

The gas made exclusively from coal is a more expensive article than that made from naphtha, and here I do not know myself what the price of coal is only so far as I pay for it for my own use, but I do know that I have to pay more for coal here than they have to pay even in my State, in Vermont—far away as it is from any coal mining. There is something wrong in the cost of transportation of coal to this city which ought to be remedied, for we are within a reasonable distance of all kinds of coal here, and yet it is one of the dearest places for coal there is in the country. I should have been glad if there had been a provision by which gas made exclusively of coal might be charged at a higher price. I would much prefer it myself to this kind of gas made from naphtha.

Mr. SPOONER. The committee undertook to secure by adequate provisions in this bill the manufacture and supply to the people of this District of gas which shall be all that is desired in the way of illuminating power, and not only that, but susceptible of healthy use by the people.

It appeared to the committee—I shall not take the time of the Senate more than a moment—that of the gas which has been furnished and is being furnished by the Washington Gaslight Company at $1.75 a thousand, about half of it, yes, over half of it, is naphtha gas; and the Government expert, the man whose business it is to look to the interests of the people in that respect, gave it as his opinion to the committee that the gas which the people of this city are constantly breathing is excessively deleterious to the public health.

There was also testimony before the committee that the use of naphtha in the manufacture of gas is not deleterious to the public health, testimony which was entitled to respect at the hands of the committee, and we felt that it could not be reasonably expected of us, none of us being experts in the manufacture of gas, that we should undertake to investigate and decide as to whether the gas made should be in no part naphtha.

Mr. MORRILL. I will say to the Senator from Wisconsin that that was not my objection. My objection to the gas is that if the burners are allowed a little too much force, the room is filled with smoke, destroying the furniture and blackening it.

Mr. SPOONER. We thought the gas should, at any rate, be a healthful gas; and in addition to that it should be of proper illuminating power; and that it should be such that its use would not deface the houses. So we provided, not being able to determine for ourselves upon all that was necessary in that respect, that this board should investigate that question, and that this gas company should conform the gas which it manufactures and furnishes to the people of this District, to the requirements of the board, they having been approved first by the Secretary within whose jurisdiction this matter is left.

It seems to me that after that investigation is made we have just right to suppose the gas which is furnished here will be of proper quality in every way.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SPOONER. The adoption of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN] makes it necessary in order to preserve the consistency of the bill that a further amendment should be made. I therefore move to strike out from section 3, at the end thereof, the words occurring after the word "session," in line 52.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The words proposed to be stricken out will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 3, line 52, after the word "session," it is proposed to strike out:

From and after the passage of this act all statements now required by law to be furnished by said gas company to the Secretary of the Interior shall be furnished to the said Secretary of War, and the inspection of gas and gas-meters in said city shall be under the supervision of said Secretary.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SAULSBURY. In section 1 I see a provision that if consumers other than the Government do not pay for their gas within a certain time they may be charged 25 per cent. extra. In the town in which I live 10 per cent. is added.

Mr. SPOONER. We investigated that matter, and found they have always charged 25 cents, and nearly all, I supposed all, of the cities of the United States charge 25 cents, or rather allow 25 cents discount from the regular price if payment is promptly made. We thought that a man as penalty for negligence might fairly be charged that much additional.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HARRIS. Regular order.

Mr. EVARTS. Mr. President, I ask to call up Calendar No. 1124, which is on the Calendar under the ninth rule, being a joint resolution (H. Res. 125) in recognition of the services of Joseph Francis, reported by the Committee on Commerce here without amendment, having passed the other House. It will be much more convenient to me to have this matter brought up to-day rather than to-morrow if I can find now an opportunity to get it up. I believe it will occupy but little time, and I think it is very proper that it should be disposed of.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from New York to proceed to the consideration of the joint resolution (H. Res. 125) in recognition of the services of Joseph Francis.

Mr. COCKRELL. That will consume all day. I ask for the yeas and nays on the motion.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. GEORGE. I should like to have the resolution read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution proposed to be taken up will be read for the information of the Senate.

The CHIEF CLERK read the joint resolution, as follows:

Resolved, &c., That in view of the life-long services to humanity and to his country of the now venerable Joseph Francis, in the construction and perfection of life-saving appliances, by which many thousands of lives have been saved, the thanks of Congress be, and are hereby, tendered to Joseph Francis; and that the President of the United States is hereby authorized to cause to be prepared a gold medal, with a suitable inscription, to be presented to Mr. Francis, in recognition of his eminent services.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. COLQUITT, (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. CHACE].

The roll-call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 30, nays 17; as follows:

So the motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

Mr. COCKRELL. Is there a report in that case?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is informed by the Secretary that there is no report.

Mr. HARRIS. Has the resolution been read at length?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It has been read at length.

Mr. EVARTS. A report was made in this case in the House of Representatives, and I ask that the Secretary read that report.

The Chief Clerk read the following report, submitted by Mr. IRION, from the Committee on Commerce of the House of Representatives, February 16, 1886:

The Committee on Commerce, to whom were referred the memorials of the New York Chamber of Commerce and the American Institute of New York, beg leave to submit the following report:

The joint resolutions offered by the committee propose nothing more than the recognition by the Government of the United States of the eminent services rendered by Mr. Joseph Francis to the cause of humanity by furnishing an avenue of escape from a watery grave to the thousands of unfortunate beings who are yearly cast away on the shores of the oceans and great lakes.

Previous to the invention of the life-saving appliances of Mr. Francis the wreck of a vessel on the storm-swept shores of the sea was certain death to all, or nearly all, on board. In early life his attention was attracted to the great loss of life and property along the Atlantic coast. His heart was moved to sympathy for the large number of helpless beings who were yearly swept away, and his active genius set to work to provide some means by which they might be transported in safety from the vessel to the shore. Encouraged by the partial success of his early efforts, he persevered in making improvement after improvement, until his inventive genius culminated in the construction of the first perfect life-car, in the year 1848. It was not, however, until January, 1850, that he had an opportunity to test the efficiency of his invention. At that time "the British ship Ayrshire, having become disabled, was driven on shore at Squan Beach during a terrific snow-storm. She had two hundred and one persons on board, and after striking the beach lay there stranded, the sea breaking over her and the surf rolling in so high that it was impossible for any boat to reach her."

Through the instrumentality of the mortar and line, a hawser was stretched from the shore to the ship, and along this passway the life-car made frequent trips, until two hundred out of the two hundred and one persons on board were carried over the boiling surf in safety to the land.

This successful experiment brought Mr. Francis and his life-car into prominence before the civilized world. Everywhere, except in his own country, his services in the cause of humanity were fitly recognized; and now, in the eighty-fifth year of his age, as the last honor which is to crown his well-spent life, he asks his own Government to award him a suitable testimonial of his worth and life-long devotion to the welfare of his fellow-man. In this request he is sustained by the American Institute of New York and by the Chamber of Commerce of the State of New York, both of which bodies have memorialized "the Congress of the United States to take such action in recognition of the great services to the country and to humanity of Joseph Francis as in its wisdom it may deem most fitting and proper."

Mr. Francis asks no pension or pecuniary reward, but simply some acknowledgment from the Government of his native country of his honorable life and eminent services in the cause of humanity.

In view of these facts, the Committee on Commerce beg leave to report the accompanying joint resolutions, and recommend their adoption.

Mr. EVARTS. Mr. President, the relations of this valuable citizen to the measures that have been taken for the saving of life and which have been brought by this country into a recognition of an establishment more extensive than anywhere else employed, more useful in its results and more popular in public esteem than any other, which touches the sentiments of the people as well as their duties, do not permit me at this stage of this matter to enter upon any broad encomium on his conduct and his character, or to an enlargement of the public services he has performed and the value which will come from this recognition.

This matter of the services of Mr. Francis was introduced to Congress by a memorial of the Chamber of Commerce of the city of New York and another memorial from the American Institute. No more important bodies, I think, are engaged in the respective matters of commerce and of mechanical invention than these two bodies.

Mr. Francis, a native of Massachusetts, became at the age of eleven years a workman in a boat-building establishment. From the earliest date of his enlistment in mechanical employment he felt a great desire to save from the ruin that attended shipwrecks the lives, the loss of which by mechanical invention and proper energy and courage, as he thought, might be reduced, if not brought within a very narrow compass. Pursuing that purpose as a boy, as a workman, as a foreman, as an inventor, as a manager, and as a persistent skillful mechanic in overcoming all obstacles, as early as the year 1845 in progressive steps he had brought the invention to the complete perfection and practical application that have made the saving of live at shipwrecks now the common rule where before the almost universal rule was the loss of life.

Mr. Francis has never asked or received any pecuniary aid from this Government, nor has he solicited at all the attention of the public at his own home or in this country at large or in Europe, except so far as attraction has been drawn to the reports of his invention and the wonderful results that have followed from it; and now at the age of eighty-six years, still in possession of his faculties, still cherishing that same interest in the life-saving operations of this country that he was the first to start, the first to advance, the first to effect, he desires, and his friends desire that there should be added to the honors which have been conferred upon him by the principal states of Europe in various forms of recognition, that this recognition should be given by the Government of the United States.

I am not aware that any just reason can be given on this floor for not acceding to the purpose and the determination and the enactment that has came to us from the House of Representatives. In our own community of New York and its neighboring cities and shores, if any one should for a moment doubt that Joseph Francis was the originator in design and in invention and in perfection of what now constitutes the main apparatus and practice of saving life, he would be treated as at large on these topics and inattentive to what was known to everybody there.

Mr. COCKRELL. Will it interrupt the Senator to ask him a question?

Mr. EVARTS. No, sir.

Mr. COCKRELL. Did Mr. Francis secure a patent from the Government as the original inventor of the life-saving boats?

Mr. EVARTS. I understand that Mr. Joseph Francis in the successive stages of his progressive inventions has covered and has received by patents all that covers the patentable value of what is now in force.

Mr. MORGAN. If the Senator from New York will indulge me one moment I will submit a letter which the Commissioner of Patents addressed to me on the 20th of December, 1886. I will send it to the desk and have it read if the Senator from New York will allow it to go into the RECORD just now.

Mr. EVARTS. Certainly.

The Secretary read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
UNITED STATES PATENT OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., December 20, 1886.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 17th instant, inclosing copy of a statement furnished by Mr. Joseph Francis, in relation to his inventions in "life-saving apparatus," &c.

A careful examination of the records of this office discloses the following in regard to Mr. Francis's applications, caveats, and patents:

Joseph Francis, of New York, N. Y., was granted United States letters patent for the following inventions:

Portable screw-boat, patented April 23, 1833.

Life and anchor boats, No. 1067, patented January 11, 1839.

Life and other boats, No. 2018, patented March 26, 1841.

Method of building boats, vessels, &c., No. 2293, patented October 11, 1841.

Boats and other vessels of sheet-iron, No. 3974, patented March 26, 1845. (Extended for the term of seven years; expired March 26, 1886.)

Joseph Francis, of New York, N. Y., filed a caveat on February 11, 1850, for life-boat or car, in which he stated "that he has invented, made, and tried, and is about fully effecting certain new and useful improvements in the means of saving lives and property from wrecked ships, and is desirous of legal protection until he can so fully complete the same as to apply for a patent thereon."

Joseph Francis filed an application for patent on April 11, 1851, for a "life-car," which was rejected July 19, 1851, for the following reasons:

"First claim is rejected—see patent, Greene, 1849.

"Second claim rejected on the ground that 'air chambers are at the present day such ordinary devices that their application to any form of boat is not patentable.'

"Last claim likewise can not be allowed."

Mr. D. Ottinger, of Erie, Pa., filed an application on August 3, 1857, for life-car, which was rejected September 25, 1857:

"Your application for a patent for improvement in life-cars or life-boats has been examined upon the substitute specification filed under date of the 24th instant, and the invention therein claimed decided not to be patentable. As furnishing reasons for this decision, you are referred to an application filed by Joseph Francis, and rejected July 19, 1851."

March 10, 1858, upon request of D. Ottinger, an interference was declared between the rejected application of J. Francis of 1851, and the rejected applications of D. Ottinger of 1857. The interference was dissolved August 8, 1860, and both applications rejected for the reasons set forth in the rejections of Francis's application of 1851, and on Francis's patents of 1839 and 1845.

May 11, 1859, D. Ottinger filed another application for surf-car, which was rejected June 16, 1859, as follows:

"The first clause of the claims, the arched deck, has no novelty. See L. Alexander's patent submarine boat of September 3, 1850; G. F. Tewksbury's patent boat of August 7, 1849, and Joseph Francis's patent boat of January 11, 1839.

"As far as the deck of the latter extends, it appears to have the degree of curvature given in your drawings. For the second clause of the claim you are referred to the application of Joseph Francis, rejected in August, 1858—surf-car."

In connection with the foregoing I beg leave to quote the following from a report made by Mr. Frank MacArthur, in March, 1886, in regard to this same matter. A copy of this report was duly transmitted to Senator McPherson:

"Long prior to the proceedings in interference referred to, and long prior to the filing of either of the applications involved therein, patents had been granted to Mr. Francis for life-boats of the same general character. See patent to Francis, January 11, 1839, No. 1067, and patent to Francis, March 26, 1845, No. 2018.

"Neither of these patents was involved in the interference, and that adjudication did not therefore affect in any way the validity of these patents."

Very respectfully,

M. V. MONTGOMERY, Commissioner.

Hon. JOHN T. MORGAN,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let me ask the Senator who is the MacArthur referred to who makes a report, an attorney in the case?

Mr. MORGAN. I do not know anything about him at all. I only present the letter I received.

Mr. HARRIS. I did not hear the question of the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. COCKRELL. I asked who MacArthur was who is referred to by Commissioner Montgomery as having made a report to him, and from which he copies?

Mr. EVARTS. An examiner in the Patent Office, an official of the office.

Now, Mr. President, as this topic has been introduced, I will only say a word on the matter of what is called an interference. In 1859, which is about the date of this transaction I believe of a supposed inquiry as to priority in a particular and as I suppose quite immaterial invention, as bearing on the question of the great subject of completed inventions which Mr. Francis had brought to a close, Mr. Francis was abroad in Europe, and I will venture to say that the transaction in the Patent Office is unprecedented.

Mr. Francis on asking for a patent for an improved invention, after the general completion of his discoveries and of their application, is met with the response that there is nothing new patentable in it, because he has already covered it. Mr. Ottinger afterward makes an application, many years after this of Mr. Francis for the final and as I think very material invention, and is met with the same answer, that his proposed patent can not be allowed, because it is covered by the previous patents already granted to Mr. Francis.

There are also some indications that this very special matter had been covered by other inventions, for all this related rather to the convex deck of the life-car, and it was said that this really had been covered by very general inventions and that the patentable part was in what had already been reached and was patentable and valuable by Mr. Francis.

Then, in the absence of Mr. Francis in Europe, there is brought about an interference investigation between two patentees and their claims, both of which had been rejected and both rejected because Mr. Francis's previous inventions had covered both. And how and why and with what motive in the discharge of mere Patent Office obligations there could be an inquiry in an absolutely moot and idle investigation which of two unpatentable improvements was the earlier when both were held to be unpatentable by reason of the previous inventions of Mr. Francis, I can not say. So much for that.

Now, the Chamber of Commerce state—and I will give their words, as they carry more weight than mine would—

Whereas during the whole period of a long and active life Mr. Francis has devoted his talents and his means to the improvement and development of those appliances which have been the means of saving thousands of valuable lives in all parts of the civilized world, receiving in recognition thereof knighthoods, medals, testimonials, and diplomas from all the great nations of the world except his own country: Therefore

Resolved, That the Chamber of Commerce of the State of New York do hereby memorialize the Congress of the United States to take such action in recognition of the great services to the country and to humanity of Joseph Francis as in its wisdom it may deem most fitting and proper.

The American Institute uses this language:

Whereas in view of the eminent and distinguished labors of Mr. Francis in a field which, by the record of its results, has proved so humane in the protection of human life, and for which he has had no compensation commensurate with the benefits bestowed thereby; and now that he has reached the age of four score years and upward, when, if at all, his work should be appreciated and acknowledged by his country, to whose honor and renown he has added a share among the nations of the earth: Therefore,

Be it resolved, That this is the sense of this institute, of which Mr. Francis has been so long an honored and efficient member, that the philanthropic and self-sacrificing services which he has rendered in the interests of humanity by his invaluable inventions, as shown by remarkable results in the use of these inventions for many years past, by which the lives of multitudes of human beings have been saved and preserved from horrible deaths, ought to receive from his countrymen just and suitable recognition and recompense; and to that end

It is further resolved, That in behalf of Mr. Francis the American Institute of the city of New York urge upon, and do hereby memorialize, the Congress of the United States to favorably consider the claims of Mr. Francis for such appropriate action as is due to him from a Republic that never fails to recognize worth and merit in the humblest of its citizens, and to make suitable reward therefor by such other recognition as in its wisdom the honorable Senate and House of Representatives may see fit to bestow.

Few lives have been more beneficent than that of Joseph Francis. Few have been more simple, more honest, more suitable to the dignity of a mechanic and workman and laborer, and few have had any larger sphere of distinction than that which belongs to honest labor intelligently and benevolently applied. When there is added to it so great a fruit of benefit to mankind, it is certainly not to be expected that in the two Houses of Congress there will be a failure to recognize this merit.

I hope, therefore, that the resolution will be passed.

Mr. CAMERON. Mr. President, this is so old a claim that it has become a little musty. I do not think from the examination I have made of the subject that Mr. Francis is the inventor of the life-boat, and that the life-boat was first made by Joseph Ottinger.

Mr. EVARTS. Life-car. Mr. Ottinger says all the difference is between a life-car and a life-boat.

Mr. CAMERON. Mr. Ottinger was the inventor and is so recognized by Congress, but he never got a patent for his invention. He had his boat built, as I understand the story, at a ship-yard in New York in which Mr. Francis was a workman. Mr. Francis afterwards took up this invention and applied for a patent, but he was not recognized, while Ottinger was, by an act of Congress, and was paid $10,000 in recognition of the service which he had rendered humanity in this regard. I do not think Mr. Francis is at all entitled to this recognition.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, the House of Representatives has sent over a resolution here designed to confer a proper honor upon a very worthy man and that will also reflect credit upon the Government of the United States.

Mr. Joseph Francis, as was remarked by the Senator from New York, and as is recognized by the people of New York by the Chamber of Commerce there, has been among the very greatest of the benefactors of the human race in his devotion of all his energies from his very boyhood up now to his eighty-sixth year in providing means to rescue men from ships that are wrecked. He has devoted himself so strenuously to the distribution of his inventions through the world and for the sake of humanity that he has not given much attention to the making of money out of this enterprise, but he has received decorations of honor from various foreign governments and comes home now after long travel, as he hopes, to receive an honest and just recognition from his Government.

It would not be necessary perhaps for Congress to take any action at all upon this matter, but for the fact that his fame has been interrupted by a man who had no right to do anything, a man who has pirated or attempted to pirate his patent. The records of the Patent Office, which have been read here and which are sent to us in a letter addressed to me by Commissioner Montgomery, show conclusively, beyond all dispute whatever, that patent after patent was issued to Mr. Francis years before Mr. Ottinger ever undertook to assert a claim upon this invention.

I wish the Senate would give some attention to the dates in this matter. A patent was granted to Joseph Francis for "Portable screw boat," April 23, 1833; for "Life and anchor boats," No. 1067, January 11, 1839; for "Life and other boats," No. 2018, March 26, 1841; for "Method of building boats, vessels," &c., No. 2293, October 11, 1841; for "Boats and other vessels of sheet-iron," No. 3974, March 26, 1846 (extended for the term of seven years; expired March 26, 1866).

Those are the corrugated iron boats.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PALMER in the chair). The Senator from Alabama will suspend. The Chair announces that the hour of 2 o'clock having arrived it is his duty to lay before the Senate the unfinished business, which is the bill (S. 2288) to incorporate the Atlantic and Pacific Ship-Railway Company, and for other purposes.

Mr. MANDERSON. Mr. President——

Mr. HOAR. I believe I have the floor.

Mr. MANDERSON. The Senator from Massachusetts has the floor on this bill, but I ask his consent to allow me to request that a bill be considered, a public building bill, and it is important that it should be passed to-day in order to get consideration by the committee of the other House to-morrow. I ask that the pending business be laid aside informally, and that this bill to which I allude may be considered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska asks that the pending business be laid aside informally, and that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill sent up by him. The Chair hears no objection.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT OMAHA.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3254) for the improvement and enlargement of the public building at Omaha, Nebr.

The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds reported an amendment, in line 6, after the words "improvement of the," to strike out "public building" and insert "court-house and post-office;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, &c., That the sum of $100,000 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the enlargement and improvement of the court-house and post-office at Omaha, Nebr.; such improvement and enlargement of the said building to be made upon plans and specifications approved by the Secretary of the Treasury.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill for the improvement and enlargement of the court-house and post-office at Omaha, Nebr."

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BOWEN. I ask the indulgence of the Senate to call up Order of Business 1995. It is important that the bill should pass to-day. It is the bill (S. 3184) granting the Utah Midland Railway Company the right of way through the Uncompahgre and Uintah Reservations, in the Territory of Utah, and for other purposes. The railroad is now under construction.

Mr. VEST. I call for the regular order. I gave way yesterday, and did not get it up until 3 o'clock. Now, I want to give notice that I shall ask the Senate to remain in session until we dispose of the unfinished business, Senate bill 2288. The Committee on Appropriations desire to call up to-morrow, provided this bill can be finished to-day, the Post-Office appropriation bill. I understand there are some speeches yet to be made, but we can conclude the unfinished business to-day, provided we go to work at it now, and then we can pass the Post-Office appropriation bill to-morrow, and besides finishing the Post-Office appropriation bill we can finish the rest of the House bills on the Calendar.

Mr. PLUMB. I supposed, of course, that I should have to give way to the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] to enable him to complete his speech begun yesterday; but at the conclusion of that speech, unless there be something which will clearly indicate that the business of the Senate is to be better promoted by letting the Post-Office appropriation bill go over, I shall move at that time to take up the Post-Office appropriation bill; but if the bill under consideration can be disposed of to-day I will yield and not move the Post-Office appropriation bill. Otherwise, I shall do so at the close of the speech of the Senator from Massachusetts.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands the Senator from Massachusetts to object to the present consideration of the bill moved by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. BOWEN].

Mr. VEST. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, the Senate will proceed to the consideration of the bill moved by the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. GIBSON. The Senator from Missouri has objected.

Mr. VEST. Oh, yes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair could not hear it; but the Chair thought from the gentleman's demeanor he did not object. Does the Senator from Colorado make a motion?

Mr. BOWEN. I will not make a motion. I asked unanimous consent.

Mr. GIBSON. I inquire——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. HOAR. Yes, sir.

Mr. GIBSON. I ask the Senator from Missouri whether he expects to get a vote on this ship-railway bill to-day?

Mr. VEST. I hope to get a vote on it to-day. I have no speech to make myself. I simply want a vote on the bill. I hope we shall get through to-day.

ATLANTIC AND PACIFC SHIP-RAILWAY.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 2288) to incorporate the Atlantic and Pacific Ship-Railway Company, and for other purposes, the pending question being on the amendment proposed by Mr. VEST to the amendment of the Committee on Commerce, to add as an additional section:

SEC. —. That if stock to the amount of $10,000,000 shall not be subscribed, and 10 per cent. thereof actually paid in, before the expiration of two years next after the passage of this act, or if the work of constructing said railway shall not be actually commenced before and be in progress at the expiration of four years next after the passage of this act, the said corporation shall be deemed to have expired by limitation, and all its franchises and privileges shall be deemed to have absolutely ceased and become determined.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, when the Senate adjourned yesterday I was endeavoring to show what this plan is to accomplish as compared with Nicaragua or Panama. I had shown that it will draw closer our relations with Mexico, and that the route will be under the protection of a strong and substantial power, upon whose neutrality no government can intrude without flagrant violation of the law of nations and shocking the opinion of mankind; that we can move troops to its protection when called upon by Mexico over a land route with abundant railroad service, by lines easy to be defended (it is within 200 miles of Vera Cruz and 300 of the city of Mexico itself); that the forces that defend it will be stationed in a healthful climate; that it will complete the control of the Gulf of Mexico by these two allied and friendly republics.

I am always sorry when I hear in the Senate, as was heard from the honorable Senator from Alabama the other day, or from any person in public station in this country, anything which indicates a disposition to disregard or undervalue the rights of Mexico. I am sure that no considerable number of American citizens to-day look upon Mexico with any other feeling than that which is due to a cherished sister republic, having the same institutions, the same destiny, the same hopes as we have ourselves. There is no purpose on the part of any considerable number of American citizens, as General Grant well declared before his death, to obtain by encroachment or wrong any portion of her territory. Commercial and business relations, blessing both sides, are all that it is the desire of the people of the United States to cultivate with her.

If she think, as some of us think, that she sustained a great wrong at the hands of the United States more than a generation ago, she will, I am sure, remember that it was the first act of the restored unity of this Republic to enter the emphatic declaration which compelled France to take her tyrannous hands from the throat of that republic and call home her invading army. Certainly if we have been guilty of a wrong toward Mexico, it has been our great good fortune to confer upon her the greatest benefit, in preserving her autonomy and independence, which one nation can ever bestow upon another.

I do not think that any considerable number of persons in the Senate or elsewhere share the opinion of the Senator from Alabama that the Gadsden treaty is now in force. The reading of that treaty shows that it related to a particular proposed plank-road and railroad long since abandoned, and it would be incredible that there should be any proposition on the part of the United States to renew any assertion of right under that treaty.

Mr. President, I was also stating further that this plan saves us the Clayton-Bulwer question. I have read carefully the diplomatic correspondence of Mr. Blaine and his successor and his predecessor.

England certainly claims that the Clayton-Bulwer treaty is in force. She claims that she relinquished her Mosquito protectorate to the demand of the United States that it was in violation of the engagement of that treaty, and that thereupon the Government of the United States expressly declared itself satisfied.

In 1866 Mr. Seward directed Mr. Adams to suggest a negotiation having as a basis the continued existence of that treaty. Mr. Adams reports a discussion with Lord Clarendon on May 29 of that year, in which both parties refer to that treaty as in force, and express their sense of the particular international obligations which it creates.

April 26, 1873, Mr. Fish, then Secretary of State in the administration of General Grant, instructs Mr. Schenck, our minister at St. James, "formally to remonstrate against any trespass by British subjects upon the territory of Guatemala, as an infringement of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty."

Now, if this treaty were in force in 1873, by whom and when was it abrogated? There has been no other public act which bears upon that question except the action of Mr. Secretary Blaine about five years ago, during the administration of President Garfield. The Government of the United States must speak to foreign governments as a unit. It is one and the same. President Cleveland can not say that he differs from President Taylor, or President Grant, or President Garfield. The past declarations of our representatives, including Mr. Blaine, have made it impossible for us with honor to treat the Clayton-Bulwer treaty as annulled. Mr. Blaine's dispatch to Mr. Lowell, dated November 19, 1881, little more than five years ago, and by his express direction communicated to Lord Granville, declares that that treaty is still in force, states to what it binds the United States, what advantages it secures to Great Britain, and directs Mr. Lowell to attempt to obtain certain specified modifications. Ten days after, November 29, Mr. Blaine renews his proposal "to free the treaty of its embarrassing features and leave it as its framers intended, a full and perfect settlement for all time of all possible issues between the United States and Great Britain with regard to Central America."

Now, Mr. President, unless this Government chooses to abandon her ancient policy, her ancient honor, her ancient faith, unless she chooses to imitate Great Britain in declaring that her interest and her desire are the sole rule and law for her public conduct in dealing with other states, we cannot enter upon this great public transaction in Central America in defiance of the obligation of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty. Five years are but as a second, but as a heart beat, but as the pulsation of an artery in this mighty national life of ours; and it does not comport with the honor of a great and free people to assert one thing yesterday and another to-day.

But, Mr. President, I also declared my opinion that the reasons which operated in entering into that treaty are still in force. It is not, in my judgment, for the interest of the United States to elect the armed occupation of this little strip of land in the tropics, whose entrance is commanded and blockaded by Great Britain, to fortify the swamps of Nicaragua, to maintain a navy equal to that of England, instead of the ship-canal and the neutral zone to whose protection the faith, and the power, and the interest of all Christendom shall be pledged.

If we ever meant to violate the last injunction of Washington and "to leave our own to stand on foreign soil," the time to do it was when we were offered St. Thomas and San Domingo. When we rejected the offer of Denmark, pending I think for nearly ten years, the treaty negotiated by the President but not consented to by the Senate—when about the same time we rejected the San Domingo treaty, we forever turned our backs upon the policy of insular annexation and of tropical possession. Without the acquisition of those islands, or one of them, we can never permanently hold a canal at Nicaragua.

It was no temporary, or transient, or shallow feeling that led Seward to hail the Clayton-Bulwer treaty as one of the great steps in the world's history. It was an American policy and an American triumph, declaring forever the indissoluble marriage of commerce and peace.

General Taylor sent a message, which has remained in the secret archives of the Senate until last year its publication was authorized, in which he declares his sense of the transaction in which his administration had just been engaged. I ask the Secretary to read the sentence which I have marked.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

This treaty has been negotiated in accordance with the general views expressed in my message to Congress in December last. Its object is to establish a commercial alliance with all great maritime states for the protection of a contemplated ship-canal through the territory of Nicaragua to connect the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans, and, at the same time, to insure the same protection to the contemplated railways or canals by the Tehuantepec and Panama routes, as well as to every other interoceanic communication which may be adopted to shorten the transit to or from our Territories on the Pacific.

Let me add to this extract from General Taylor's message a statement of the vote in the Senate upon the question of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty. That treaty was adopted by a vote of 42 to 11 on the 19th day of April, 1850. That was a great period in the history of the Senate. I ask the Secretary to read the list of yeas and nays.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Those who voted in the affirmative are—

Messrs. Badger, Baldwin, Bell, Berrien, Butler, Cass, Chase, Clarke, Clay, Cooper, Corwin, Davis of Massachusetts, Dawson, Dayton, Dodge of Wisconsin, Dodge of Iowa, Downs, Felch, Foote, Greene, Hale, Houston, Hunter, Jones, King, Mangum, Mason, Miller, Morton, Norris, Pearce, Pratt, Sebastian, Seward, Shields, Smith, Soulé, Spruance, Sturgeon, Underwood, Wales, and Webster.

Those who voted in the negative are—

Messrs. Atchison, Borland, Bright, Clemens, Davis of Mississipp, Dickinson, Douglas, Turney, Walker, Whitcomb, and Yulee.

Mr. HOAR. It will be seen how the great names of both parties and of all sections of that day were united in support of the policy inaugurated by the Clayton-Bulwer treaty. With the exception of Mr. Douglas and Mr. Jefferson Davis, there is hardly to be found in the negative a name I had almost said even of second-rate importance in the record of that vote.

Mr. President, there is no doubt of the willingness and readiness of Mexico to join in a treaty with the United States that will embody a joint protectorate of this ship-railway and that arrangements can be made in this treaty which will practically give the United States what it wants, a prompt passage of troops for its protection, to say nothing of the movement of war vessels and munitions of war without violating the constitutional provisions of Mexico—such, for instance, as were arranged in our treaty permitting the United States to send its troops into Mexican territory in pursuit of hostile savages.

But, Mr. President, it may be well to spend one moment in recapitulating what I think is familiar to many Senators, the great saving which is to result from the operation of this scheme. I have here a statement prepared by an eminent engineer showing the differences in distance and the amount of tonnage to be accommodated by the establishment of this route. I have here a table showing the estimated tonnage of various routes between the ports of Great Britain and ports of the United States and the Pacific Ocean which must seek this route of travel and make the saving which I have mentioned if this plan turns out to be successful, which in actual tonnage carried on these routes in 1883 was 4,842,111 tons, and the tonnage this gentleman estimates for 1889 in the ratio of increase which he expects from the natural growth of the world's commerce and new business being developed, amounting to 7,564,597 tons.

I have here further the saving as compared with Nicaragua between our two principal ports of New York and New Orleans and San Francisco. Allowing a merchant ship 200 miles a day, the saving in distance between New York and San Francisco by the way of Panama is 1173 miles, equal to six days, or on the round trip twelve days. As compared with Nicaragua the saving in distance is 882 miles, making a saving of nine days in time on the round trip for a sailing vessel going at the rate of 200 miles a day. Between New Orleans and San Francisco the saving as compared with Panama in the round trip is eighteen days, and as compared with Nicaragua in the round trip is thirteen days. In addition to this it is well known that both the Atlantic and Pacific within the last eight or nine hundred miles of Panama or Nicaragua on each side constitute the portion of the globe where long calms, long periods without wind, are more frequent than perhaps in any other spot on the face of the earth except in certain portions of the Indian Ocean, so that sailing vessels frequently spend ten, fifteen, or twenty days without any considerable progress.

I omitted to read in its connection a letter from Mr. Webster, written when he was Secretary of State, to the Mexican minister at Washington, in which he declares his opinion that the Tehuantepec route is the route to which the statesmanship of America must look in the future for the solution of the problem of interoceanic communication. I ask the Secretary to read the letter from Mr. Webster.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MANDERSON in the chair). The Secretary will read the letter.

The Secretary read as follows:

All know that a communication from ocean to ocean, across the isthmus in this direction, for many years has been a matter of anxious consideration. The Governments of the United States and of Mexico long ago expressed their conviction of the importance of this object. Indeed no one can fail to see how exceedingly important this communication would be to the Government of Mexico. It proposes to give her a practical highway from sea to sea. It opens to her a communication on the one side and the other with the eastern and the western world. It gives her access to the markets of all nations, and makes her, in short, a central point of the commerce of modern times. And under the provisions of the treaty, now under consideration, all this is to be done without expense to herself. It is impossible that her enlightened government should not be alive to all these advantages, and should not seize with avidity the first opportunity to avail herself of them in a manner consistent with her own sovereignty and independence. Her known wishes on this point are not of recent date. She entertained the purpose years ago, and regarded it then as an object to be accomplished only by mutual arrangement and negotiation.

The late war between the two governments unhappily precluded, for a time, all such arrangements, but at the moment of returning peace the enterprise was renewed, and the Government of the United States saw with sincere pleasure a new and brighter prospect, not only for the accomplishment of an end desired by all commercial nations, but of the highest degree of utility and importance to Mexico herself. It felt then, and has never ceased to feel, a sincere desire that Mexico, as a neighboring government and a sister republic, should, at as early a day as practicable, avail herself of the obvious and vast benefits of this great work.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator from Alabama in his remarks the other day made some statements in regard to the engineering features of the Nicaragua Canal and the ship-railway. He stated that he had never seen a close instrumental survey of the ship-railway. I understand that a map has been prepared showing the entire route, with a proper and accurate profile; that plans of the harbor works at the extremities have been in the possession of the Commerce Committees of the Senate and the House for more than a year, and that this profile is one such as any legislative body in dealing with the question of a domestic railroad would consider ample for all purposes of its guidance.

The Senator says he prefers the Nicaragua route because of the shortness of the canal, which he gives at $38\frac{99}{100}$ miles, while he estimates for Tehuantepec at 40 miles of canal and 134 miles of railroad. He further states that the Coatzacoalcos River for 25 miles is so shallow, and the shallows are so shifting, that, as gentlemen have informed him, "there is almost as much work in the dredging out of the river as there would be in building the canal."

The distance of the Nicaragua route, as I understand from the best authority, is 169.8 miles—40.3 miles of canal, 73 miles of tortuous river navigation, and 56.5 miles of lake navigation, of which more than 3 miles require a constantly dredged channel.

The reports of the engineers, to which my attention has been called, show that the river at Tehuantepec is broad, deep, and easily navigable; that there is but one point in the river now where there is less than 20 feet of water, and that the river bed is not subject to shifting, but is permanent and stable.

Then, the Senator says, there are to be locks, as I understand. I do not see that the report indicates any locks to be required.

What the Senator speaks of as the necessity for a long jetty on the Pacific shore is met by Mr. Eads's statement that the jetty will be less than three-quarters of a mile in order to get out to water more than 30 feet deep.

I suppose there is nothing upon which the Senate has been called to act as a practical matter in regard to which we have less definite and trustworthy information than in regard to the probable cost of the preparation of the two harbors, I might say almost the creation of the two harbors, at the termini of the Nicaragua canal. There is in that canal one cutting which the Government engineers give the average of about three miles in length; one rock cutting, I suppose, of the average depth of 149½ feet, and another whose maximum depth is 318 feet.

I shall not detain the Senate by entering upon the details of these engineering controversies, a question which manifestly Senators can better deal with by studying the reports of engineers in the seclusion of their own dwellings than in debate here.

Another suggestion made by the Senator from Alabama I think ought not to be made in the Senate of the United States without dissent, though it is one often heard. I do not conceive that there can be found any support in international law, in morals, or in national necessity for the claim that if any South American State, great or small, choose within its own territory, in its own right, and by its own authority, to construct a canal within its own dominions, whether that canal sever the continent and go from sea to sea or not, the United States have any right whatever to interfere with the process. I think such a declaration when seriously made will encounter the remonstrance of mankind, and will excite and alarm the people of the fifteen sister republics of North and South America, with whom it is to our interest to cultivate the most friendly and peaceful relations.

The Monroe doctrine which declares that no European power shall get a new footing here, either by conquest, by negotiation, by protectorate, by guarantee which involves the right to make the guarantee good by the occupation of territory, is a doctrine to which I heartily agree, and which the American people without distinction of party or section will heartily support; but that a great nation has any right because of its own interests, fancied or real, to dictate to a small nation, because it is small and weak, its conduct of its own affairs or its government or management of its own territory and dominion is a pretension which belongs to Great Britain alone, and it is a pretension which she has tried to assert only to her cost when it has been the interest or the duty of the United States to undertake to interfere with it. It does not seem to me that it is becoming the United States to undertake to embark herself in any schemes which are founded upon an assertion of a pretension so preposterous.

Mr. President, this plan of a ship-canal at Tehuantepec solves the greatest of commercial problems and of international difficulties by a method which is peculiarly American. It puts an end to the risk or the opportunity of war by the beneficent faculties of peace. It calls into the service of mankind on a national and gigantic scale the great inventive genius with which as compared with all peoples and all times a benignant Providence has blessed our country and our age. We have thus far failed to call into the national service this wonderful inventive faculty of our people. With the exception of the construction of the Monitor and the famous naval engagement which saved our Atlantic cities from the Merrimac in the late war, I am not aware that any military or naval or national triumph has been accomplished which has been due purely to the genius of the inventors of America; and I confess I hail with peculiar pleasure the fact that from the South, from the West, from the valley of the Mississippi, there comes up this scheme, due to a genius which has already achieved the two greatest engineering triumphs of the age, which promises to confer a new glory on the American character by a triumph on a still larger scale.

Mr. PLUMB. I move that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 10793), being the Post-Office appropriation bill.

Mr. VEST. I ask unanimous consent that we proceed with the unfinished business until we reach a vote to-day.

Mr. MORGAN. I shall object to that, Mr. President.

Mr. PLUMB. I have been informed by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] that for reasons which are conclusive to him he will object to any consent being given to take a vote on the bill under consideration to-day. If unanimous consent could have been had I should have been willing to wait until the Tehuantepec bill was disposed of, but as it is, I feel that my duty would not be discharged if I do not now interpose and ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the Post-Office appropriation bill.

Mr. CULLOM. Does the Senator expect to conclude the consideration of the Post-Office appropriation bill to-day?

Mr. PLUMB. I do not see any reason why it should not be finished to-day.

Mr. VEST. Let it be understood that the pending bill shall be simply laid aside temporarily in order to take up the appropriation bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that the motion of the Senator from Kansas is that the pending bill be laid aside temporarily in order to proceed to the consideration of the appropriation bill.

Mr. PLUMB. I make whatever motion may be necessary, and such a one as can be made to enable the bill under consideration to keep its place. I move that the bill be informally laid aside in order that the Post-Office appropriation bill may be proceeded with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Kansas.

The motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House insisted upon its amendments to the bill (S. 1131) to amend an act to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building thereon at Detroit, Mich., approved March 2, 1885, disagreed to by the Senate, agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. WORTHINGTON, Mr. OWEN, and Mr. MAYBURY managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message also announced that the House further insisted upon its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 4616) for the relief of Maj. Michael P. Small, asked a further conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. FINDLAY, Mr. VIELE, and Mr. LAIRD managers at the further conference on the part of the House.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 6976) to erect a public building at Portsmouth, Ohio, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

MICHAEL P. SMALL.

Mr. WALTHALL submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 4616) for the relief of Major Michael P. Small, having met, after full and free conference have been unable to agree.

E. C. WALTHALL,
CHARLES F. MANDERSON,
F. M. COCKRELL,
Conferees on the part of the Senate.
JOHN V. L. FINDLAY,
E. S. BRAGG,
JAMES LAIRD,
Conferees on the part of the House.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will call the attention of the Senator from Mississippi to the fact that there has just been received from the other House the same bill, with a change of conferees on the part of the House.

Mr. WALTHALL. I am aware of that fact, and there is no objection to the further conference asked by the House.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair lays before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives on the bill.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES OF THE UNITED STATES,
February 11, 1887.

Resolved, That the House further insists upon its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 4616) for the relief of Major Michael P. Small, and ask a further conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Ordered, That Mr. FINDLAY, Mr. VIELE, and Mr. LAIRD be the managers of the said further conference on the part of the House.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. What is the pleasure of the Senate?

Mr. WALTHALL. I see no objection to the further conference asked by the House.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. A further conference will be granted, if there be no objection.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. WALTHALL, Mr. COCKRELL, and Mr. MANDERSON were appointed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT SCRANTON.

Mr. CAMERON. I ask the consent of the Senator from Kansas and the indulgence of the Senate to call up Senate bill 3234.

Mr. PLUMB. If I could yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania without being similarly solicited by other Senators, and if his bill would occasion no debate, I should not object to doing so.

Mr. CAMERON. If it leads to any debate I shall withdraw the bill. It is a matter in which the people of my State are deeply interested.

Mr. PLUMB. I yield provided it does not lay the foundation for some other request.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. I should like to say——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MANDERSON). The Senator from Pennsylvania has the floor.

Mr. CAMERON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 3234) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the purchase of a site and the erection of a suitable building for a post-office and other Government offices in the city of Scranton, Pa.," approved July 27, 1882.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. Will the Senator from Pennsylvania yield to me for a moment?

Mr. CAMERON. If I yield to you, somebody will stop me.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be read for information.

The Chief Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the amount heretofore fixed as the limit of cost for the purchase of a site and the erection of a suitable building for a post-office and other Government offices in the city of Scranton, Pa., be, and the same is hereby, increased to $250,000; and that sum is hereby fixed as the limit of cost for the erection of said building.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. CAMERON. I prefer not.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? The Chair hears none, and it is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole. The bill was reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds with an amendment, which will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 7, before the word "thousand," strike out "fifty" and insert "twenty-five;" so as to read "$225,000."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Unless there is objection, the amendment will be considered as agreed to.

Mr. CAMERON. I object to that amendment. I want to strike it out and have the bill left as it was originally referred to the committee, fixing the amount at $250,000.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

The amendment was rejected.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RAILROAD THROUGH CROW RESERVATION.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. I now appeal to the Senator from Kansas to yield to me to allow a bill to be passed which was reported favorably from the Committee on Indian Affairs, and which is precisely similar to two bills which were passed yesterday. The company is ready and waiting to commence work. It will take but a minute to pass the bill, I think.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kansas yield?

Mr. PLUMB. I will yield on that condition.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 2778) to authorize the Billings, Clark's Fork and Cooke City Railroad Company to construct and operate a railway through the Crow Indian Reservation, and for other purposes.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert:

That the right of way is hereby granted, as hereinafter set forth, to the Billings, Clark's Fork and Cooke City Railroad Company, a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the Territory of Montana, for the extension of its railroad through the lands in Montana Territory set apart for the use of the Crow Indians, commonly known as the Crow Indian Reservation, beginning at a point on the northern line of said reserve at or near where Clark's Fork empties into the Yellowstone River, and thence following in a southerly direction to a point at or near where said Clark's Fork crosses the southern line of the said Crow reserve; also a branch line of railway to be constructed for a distance of 30 miles up the Rocky Fork, and commencing from the point where said Rocky Fork empties into said Clark's Fork; with the right to construct, use, and maintain tracks, turnouts, and sidings.

SEC. 2. That the right of way hereby granted to said company shall be 75 feet in width on each side of the central line of said railroad, as aforesaid; and said company shall also have the right to take from said lands adjacent to the line of said road material, stone, earth, and timber necessary for the construction of said railroad; also ground adjacent to such right of way for station-buildings, depots, machine-shops, side-tracks, turnouts, and water-stations, not to exceed in amount 300 feet in width and 3,000 feet in length for each station, to the extent of one station for each 10 miles of road.

SEC. 3. That it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Interior to fix the amount of compensation to be paid the Indians for such right of way and material, and provide the time and manner for the payment thereof, and also to ascertain and fix the amount of compensation to be made individual members of the tribe for damages sustained by them by reason of the construction of said road; but no right of any kind shall vest in said railway company in or to any part of the right of way herein provided for until plats thereof, made upon actual survey for the definite location of such railroad, and including the points for station-buildings, depots, machine-shops, side-tracks, turnouts, and water-stations, shall be filed with and approved by the Secretary of the Interior, which approval shall be made in writing and be open for the inspection of any party interested therein, and until the compensation aforesaid has been fixed and paid; and the surveys, construction, and operation of such railroad shall be conducted with due regard for the rights of the Indians, and in accordance with such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may make to carry out this provision: Provided, That the President of the United States may, in his discretion, require that the consent of the Indians to said right of way shall be obtained by said railway company, in such manner as he may prescribe before any right under this act shall accrue to said company.

SEC. 4. That said company shall not assign or transfer or mortgage this right of way for any purpose whatever until said road shall be completed: Provided, That the company may mortgage said franchise, together with the rolling-stock, for money to construct and complete said road: And provided further, That the right granted herein shall be lost and forfeited by said company unless the road is constructed and in running order within two years from the passage of this act.

SEC. 5. That said railway company shall accept this right of way upon the expressed condition, binding upon itself, its successors and assigns, that they will neither aid, assist, nor advise in any effort looking toward the changing or extinguishing the present tenure of the Indians in their land, and will not attempt to secure from the Indian tribes any further grant of land, or its occupancy than is herebefore provided: Provided, That any violation of the condition mentioned in this section shall operate as a forfeiture of all the rights and privileges of said railway company under this act.

SEC. 6. That Congress may at any time, amend, add to, alter, or repeal this act. That this act shall be in force from its passage.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill granting to the Billings, Clark's Fork and Cooke City Railroad Company the right of way through the Crow Indian Reservation."

UTAH MIDLAND RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mr. BOWEN. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 3184) granting the Utah Midland Railway Company the right of way through the Uncompahgre and Uintah reservations, in the Territory of Utah, and for other purposes.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. BOWEN. In section 3, line 4, after the word "thereof," I move to insert:

And also to ascertain and fix the amount of compensation to be made individual members of the tribe for damages sustained by them by reason of the construction of said road.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BOWEN. In section 2, line 11, after the word "road," I move to strike out the proviso in the following words:

Provided, That before any such lands shall be appropriated by said railway company, the consent of the majority of the male adult Indians occupying the same shall be obtained in a manner satisfactory to the Secretary of the Interior.

And to insert in lieu thereof:

Provided, That the President of the United States may, in his discretion, require that the consent of the Indians to said right of way shall be obtained by said railroad company, in such manner as he may prescribe, before any right under this act shall accrue to said company.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BOWEN. I move to add as additional sections to the bill the following:

SEC. 5. That said railway company shall accept this right of way upon the expressed condition, binding upon itself, its successors, and assigns, that they will neither aid, advise, nor assist in any effort looking towards the changing or extinguishing the present tenure of the Indians in their land, and will not attempt to secure from the Indian tribes any further grant of land or its occupancy than is hereinbefore provided: Provided, That any violation of the condition mentioned in this section shall operate as a forfeiture of all the rights and privileges of said railway company under this act.

SEC. 6. That Congress may at any time amend, add to, alter, or repeal this act.

SEC. 7. That this act shall be in force from its passage.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BOWEN. In section 3, line 3, after the word "way," I move to insert "and materials;" so as to read:

That it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Interior to fix the amount of compensation to be paid the Indians for such right of way and materials.

The amendment was agreed to

Mr. BOWEN. In section 4, line 4, I move to strike out the words "together with the rolling-stock," and to insert "and right of way hereby granted and all of its real and personal property;" so as to make the proviso read:

Provided, That the company may mortgage said franchise and right of way hereby granted and all of its real and personal property for money to construct and complete said road.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I wish to inquire why the bill was reported from the committee without any provisions in the nature of the amendments now proposed by the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. BOWEN. That was the form of the bill agreed upon by the committee.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Can not the Senator explain why it is that they should be given the right to mortgage such property?

Mr. BOWEN. They are to be allowed to mortgage the right of way.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Then I ask if any other advantages are given the railroad company?

Mr. BOWEN. The amendment just agreed to gives the company the right to mortgage all its real and personal property. That, however, is not an essential provision, and I shall not insist on it.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Where was the company organized?

Mr. BOWEN. It was organized under the laws of Colorado.

Mr. VAN WYCK. It may be all right, but why is it proposed to delegate powers to the railroad company which the State of Colorado has not given it?

Mr. BOWEN. I will withdraw so much of my amendment as proposes to insert the words "and all of its real and personal property."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, the Senate will reconsider the vote by which the amendment was adopted. By consent the amendment will be modified as suggested by the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. BOWEN. In line 4, section 4, I move to add merely the words "and right of way hereby granted;" so as to read:

That the company may mortgage said franchise and right of way hereby granted for money to construct and complete said road.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment as modified.

Mr. DAWES. I am opposed to the idea of obtaining by consent of the Indians and then mortgaging to somebody else the right of way across the reservation. I suggest to the Senator from Colorado to withdraw that part of the amendment.

Mr. BOWEN. I will state to the Senator from Massachusetts that they can not build the road without mortgaging the right of way.

Mr. DAWES. I should like to discuss the question whether it is exactly fair to get the consent of the Indians to grant the railroad company a right of way over an Indian reservation so that the company may mortgage it to somebody in Wall street.

Mr. BOWEN. I withdraw that part of the amendment then.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment is withdrawn.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I understood the Senator from Colorado to say that the bill came to us with the approbation of the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. BOWEN. This is the bill reported from the committee, but it was my own amendment to it that I offered.

Mr. DAWES. These amendments were never considered in committee.

Mr. BOWEN. I withdraw the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment is withdrawn.

Mr. BOWEN. In section 4, line 8, after the word "from" I move to strike out the words—

The date when the consent of the Indians shall be obtained.

And to insert—

The passage of this act, or if the consent of the Indians is required under the terms of the proviso to section 2 of this act, then within three years from the date when such consent shall be obtained.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RAILWAY THROUGH CROW RESERVATION.

Mr. DAWES. I move to reconsider the vote by which the Senate passed the bill (S. 2778) to authorize the Billings, Clark's Fork and Cooke City Railroad Company to construct and operate a railway through the Crow Indian Reservation, and for other purposes. I understand a similar provision is in that bill that it was proposed to incorporate in the bill which has just passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts enters a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed.

Mr. DAWES. I was out of the Senate Chamber, but I understand that the same provision is in that bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion to reconsider will be entered.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. RANSOM. I ask leave to call up——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. PLUMB. I can not yield further.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kansas declines to yield, and the post-office appropriation bill will be proceeded with.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 10793) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888.

Mr. PLUMB. I ask consent that the formal reading of the bill may be dispensed with, and that the committee amendments may first be acted upon.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be so ordered, unless there be objection. It is so ordered.

Mr. PLUMB. Before the bill is read, I desire to make some observations in regard to its provisions.

Mr. BECK. I desire to ask whether it was agreed that the amendments of the Committee on Appropriations shall first be acted upon?

Mr. PLUMB. That was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It was so agreed by unanimous consent.

Mr. PLUMB. Mr. President, this bill, with the exception of a single item so far as it appropriates money, is precisely as it came from the House of Representatives; and I believe that the bill as it came from the House is precisely according to the estimates for the various branches of the service made by the Post-Office Department.

So far as the appropriations relate to supplies and things of that kind they are undoubtedly what is fairly required, no more and no less, and they indicate economy and care in administration. I can say for the entire bill, with possibly a single exception, that it is framed on an economical plan, and that the Department in making its estimates has been moved by a desire to save money, and I have no doubt it will, if permitted to go on as now, shortly bring the expenses within the receipts. The bill is not, however, what I think it ought to be for the interests of the service considered without reference to the mere saving of money.

So far as the item for the transportation of mails over railroad routes is concerned, the largest in the bill, it is one which may be larger or smaller without affecting the amount of money to be paid out, because the price to be paid is fixed by law; that is to say, the maximum is fixed. Unless the Postmaster-General interferes by making a reduction in the price, the accounts of the railroad companies are audited and paid upon the basis of the statutory allowance. That is true also of the salaries of postmasters which are provided for by law, and the question as to whether we appropriate a large or a small amount in no way concerns the individual postmaster, for he gets his pay out of the proceeds of his office before he settles with the Government.

When, however, the bill provides for what is called the star-route service the amount of the appropriation does concern the service to be rendered. If the amount is too small, then, of course, the Department must necessarily give an improperly diminished service. Of course, if we give more money than is asked for, the Postmaster-General is under no legal obligation to spend it, and he may therefore contract the service beyond the proper limit and deny to the people of the country the proper postal facilities.

A similar appropriation is that for clerk-hire in post-offices. No money can be spent that is not appropriated, and if an amount was appropriated beyond that which the Postmaster-General thought ought to be spent he need not spend it. So with regard to the appropriation for railway post-office clerks. The whole appropriation is within the discretion of the Postmaster-General except the rate of pay, and I might say that that is also within his discretion, because he need not appoint to any except to the minor grades. In fact, he never has appointed any one to the highest grade provided by law. There is, therefore, an entire grade of post-office clerks which is not represented by any appointment.

Mr. GEORGE. And never has been?

Mr. PLUMB. The Senator from Mississippi asks me if there never has been. I say none ever has been made. That results, of course, in a very considerable saving in the expenses of the Department.

These three items, that of star service, that for railway post-office clerks, and for the clerk-hire in post-offices, are, in my judgment, as provided for in this bill, all of them below what the necessities of the service require, but the committee did not think it worth while to increase them because they believed the Postmaster-General would not spend the money, even if we gave it to him. He asked for what he thought the service required, and doubtless for all that he proposed to expend, and the committee were willing under all the circumstances that the appropriation should be made exactly as asked for.

The appropriation for the star service which is, as we all know, the service by horseback and by wagon, as asked for and granted by the bill, is $5,400,000. The amount appropriated for the last year was $5,8 50,000, showing a reduction this year from the appropriation of last year of $450,000. There is a somewhat general impression that as the railroad service is extended the star-route service is contracted, but that is not correct. It operates in that way in some places, and in some places it operates in exactly the reverse way. The extension of the railways into entirely new areas causes an increased necessity for star service, and wherever star service is taken up by the extension of the railway service, a new star service is brought into play, and there is not therefore, as a rule, any diminution in the necessity for the star service by reason of the extension of the railroad service.

During the last few years the population of the United States has been extended into areas which a few years ago were not regarded as habitable. There are organized counties, prosperous towns and all the fabric of social and political organization, hundreds of miles beyond where ten years ago such things were supposed to have been possible, and that process of the extension of settlement into the higher altitudes of Western Kansas, Western Nebraska, Eastern Colorado, Wyoming, Idaho, Montana, and so on, is constantly going on, and with it goes the necessity for the extension of the mail service by railroads where railroads are provided and by what is known as the star-route system where railroads have not been built.

In my judgment, the Post-Office Department fails to appreciate the results of this extension of settlement, the needs and the duties which it imposes upon the Department to give to the active, enterprising, and energetic men who have gone into those great areas those mail facilities which are essential to their existence, the propriety of which has never been questioned and which the Government stands, by its action heretofore, pledged to furnish. The Department has not been, in my judgment, sufficiently considerate of these facts. It learns too late that this growth has taken place, and even after it learns of the growth it does not appreciate its needs; it withholds more than is meet, and we have Scriptural authority for saying that that tends to poverty.

There is not a cabin in all that Western frontier, however humble it may be, the occupant of which does not take at least one newspaper, and usually two or three in addition to the magazines and other publications of a literary character which he has been used to reading in his Eastern home, and which he never gets himself so far away from that he does not desire and does not have if possible.

The men who have gone into that country are naturally an enterprising people. They are of the most intelligent of the American people. If they had been sent there upon some principle of selection having reference to their physical and mental qualifications for the struggle with frontier life they could not have been stronger, or wiser, or better worth for the purpose of laying the foundations of society, organizing and governing new counties and new States, than they are to-day. To such men the mail, not merely the weekly, or the semi-weekly, or the tri-weekly, but the daily mail is as the breath of their nostrils, a necessity, something that they will have if they have to pay for it out of their own meager resources, to the deprivation of the ordinary comforts and conveniences of life.

So it happens that in Western Kansas and Eastern Colorado to-day a large service exists independently of the Post-Office Department, paid for by the settlers themselves, and the Department, looking at the map made for its use a year ago, which shows a great vacant space four, five, or six hundred miles from east to west, and a thousand or twelve hundred miles from north to south, with evidence of settlement, hears with amazement the fact that there are newspapers, county organizations, prosperous towns there, and, doubting, fails to act, and even when convinced gives grudgingly of the required mail service. It is hard to convince those who have never been in that great current of humanity which for years has been flowing westward.

Mr. President, the Post-Office Department is a Department organized to give a certain essential service to the people specially named in the Constitution, and which is as essential to the well-being of the American people as any other form of education is essential to the growth and the prosperity of the country, and between the receipts and outgoes of which there is no necessary connection any more than there is between the receipts and the outgoes of the War or the Navy Department. The first essential is to secure a speedy service, and a service which meets the new and quickened conditions constantly arising and which have been the accompaniment of the progress of the American people across this continent.

To say that because in the judgment of some Postmaster-General, or somebody else having for the time being control over the appropriations, that men have gone too far west, that they have moved too far from existing facilities, and that, therefore, they are to be inadequately supplied, if supplied at all, is opposed to the theory upon which the Department has heretofore been administered, and does violence to popular opinion and enlightened judgment. Yet that is too much the spirit which dominates the Department to-day; not by intention, perhaps, but on account of a lack of appreciation of the situation. New wine has been put into old bottles, or rather the old theories of twenty-five or thirty years ago are being fitted to a new condition of things which has arisen since the war, and which calls day by day for a greater, a more active, a more widespread, and a more frequent service at the hands of the Post-Office Department.

So, every day there are petitions coming here to the members of both Houses of Congress representing the new States and Territories asking for new post-offices, for the establishment of new mail-routes, for the addition of facilities on existing routes, the prayers of which are as daily denied because of this lack of appreciation, accompanied by the desire and determination to bring the expenses of the Post-Office Department within its revenue at the earliest possible moment, practically regardless of consequence.

As I said, it is a saving which is a losing; it is a saving of money to-day to the injury of the revenues of to-morrow, looking at it simply from the post-office standpoint; but more than that, it helps to check national growth and development, and this is fraught with disastrous consequence.

A few days ago I presented to the Senate a memorial adopted by the Legislature of Kansas in regard to the service upon railroads in that State. It set forth that which was in the knowledge of the Legislature, that which was in the knowledge of the newspapers of the State and of all intelligent persons in the West—the neglected condition of the postal service. That evening I noticed in the Evening Star an interview with the Second Assistant Postmaster-General, under whose purview this service is carried on, the following, referring to the memorial and to my statement accompanying it:

That is all politics; nothing else. I presume they want to find something upon which to attack the administration. Now, the figures will show what has been done for Kansas. Within the last few months I have put on 790 miles of new service in Kansas, and there remains under consideration 193 miles. With regard to a portion of the latter, we are waiting for the reports of the railroad officials as to distances. Now, out of a total of 983 miles and a fraction, 790 miles have either been supplied and the mail service in actual operation on the contracts let and everything about ready to go into operation. That shows how rapidly we have kept up with the increasing demand for service.

I might state what does not appear in this statement, that the next day or two after attention was thus publicly called to the matter service was put on two or three more railroads in Kansas. The fact is that during the last calendar year 1,300 miles of railroad were built in Kansas, and never before in the history of that State, or any other, has there been a moment's delay in putting mail service upon railroads as fast as they have been completed. The question of the propriety of doing it, the necessity, the duty of doing it has never before been even discussed, and yet it has taken months of time and hours of discussion and cords of petitions sometimes to get the Department to put service upon new railroads during the last year.

To show that it is not all done now, and to show that it is not a question of politics, I will read some letters I have here which have come to me, not by my solicitation, but in the ordinary course of the correspondence which I have with my constituents about matters which relate to their convenience as concerned in the administration of the Government. Here is a letter which was written to me from Elm Valley, on the line of railroad completed some time since from Salina, on the Kansas Pacific road, in the direction of the western part of the State. The writer says:

ELM CITY, KANS., January 31, 1887.

DEAR SIR: We have had the good fortune to have a railroad built through this part of the country. The road is an extension of the Topeka, Salina and Western, known this side of Salina (west) as the Kansas and Colorado Railroad. What I wish to get at is to have the mail service put on the road west of Salina. There is no regular mail route west from Salina to this place; therefore, it will not require any change in the service, except to establish a new route over the railroad. We hoped, through your influence, to be able to get our mail over the road soon; that is, if you would have the kindness to attend to the matter for us.

Our mail facilities are very poor, having only a tri-weekly mail, and it is very irregular. Our town is only six weeks old, therefore it has not a very extended acquaintance in Washington, and we will have to depend on a few of our friends there to help us in this mail matter. This town was commenced about December 10, 1886, and has a population of from three to four hundred people. I mention this merely that you may see our great need of better mail facilities, and hope you will kindly have the change made for us or advise us what we should do to get it done.

Very respectfully yours,

E. L. WILLIAMS.

Hon. P. B. PLUMB, Washington, D. C.

Mr. BECK. I ask the Senator from Kansas if that evil has not been corrected?

Mr. PLUMB. I have not heard of its having been corrected. It may have been within a few days.

Mr. BECK. What is the name of the place?

Mr. PLUMB. The name of the place is Elm Valley.

Mr. BECK. I shall endeavor to ascertain if it has been.

Mr. PLUMB. I have a letter here from the town of Cedar Vale, in Kansas, written to me by a leading Democrat of that locality, an active, intelligent man who has been esteemed good enough to be elected to the Legislature from a Republican county. It is dated February 5, 1887. The writer says:

CEDAR VALE, KANS., February 5, 1887.

MY DEAR SIR: Am glad to see you are stirring the Department up on the inexcusable bad mail service in Kansas. We now have two railroads completed to Cedar Vale, the C. K. and W. from Independence, completed November 1, and the D. M. and A. from Chetopa, completed January 1, and no mail service on either, although have been trying since November 1 last. The mail comes from Grenola by stage, 20 miles north of Cedar Vale. There is certainly no excuse for this. Please call the attention of the Post-Office Department to this.

And oblige, yours, very truly, ELI TITUS.

Senator P. B. PLUMB, Washington, D. C.

That I had done a long time ago. It may be a matter of no consequence to the people who live in the phlegmatic section of the country along the middle Atlantic coast that for three or four months after the completion of two railroads to this thriving town the mail is still brought overland by stage from a point on another railroad 20 miles distant.

Here is a letter from the city of Newton, with 8,000 people, in the central part of the State, dated the 7th day of February, from the publisher of a newspaper. He says:

DEAR SENATOR: It is now nearly three months since the Fort Scott and Wichita Railroad was completed and trains running thereon between this city and McPherson—

A town of six or seven thousand people, 30 miles north—and yet no mail trains are run thereon, but instead the mail is carried over the route as before, every other day in a "buckboard" wagon. The mail messenger comes up here from Eldorado and lies here until 7 p. m., and could just as well distribute mail for the towns between here and McPherson, and those people at three towns given a daily mail, as not. Last week the mail carrier failed to materialize and they had no mail at all along the line. Will you please give this matter attention at once before any further commotion is made over it?

Yours, &c., H. C. ASHBAUGH.

I have here a statement from one of the leading daily papers in the State, the Wichita Eagle——

Mr. BECK. Let me ask the Senator does he propose to finish this bill to-night? The only reason I ask is because if he does I should like to hear all these extracts read in full.

Mr. PLUMB. I do not suppose we shall be able to dispose of it to-night.

Mr. BECK. I want to look into some of the statements the Senator presents. I want to read them all.

Mr. PLUMB. This article is:

AN INTOLERABLE NUISANCE.

The complaints of an inadequate mail service in Kansas are loud and deep. They come up with a long and continuous wail from the southwest, and the correspondent of the Eagle is importuned to lay the facts before the Department. There is no excuse for a great government with hundreds of millions of surplus in the Treasury working its men worse than the slaves in the Siberian mines, and giving to the people who pay the taxes and swell the volume of the Treasury a partial, incomplete, and inadequate mail service. In the R. W. M. service the United States is divided into nine divisions; each division has a superintendent, all under the control of a general superintendent at Washington, D. C. The seventh division is composed of the States of Missouri, Kansas, Arkansas, Texas, Indian Territory, and New Mexico. The superintendent of this division is E. W. Warfield, with headquarters at Saint Louis, Mo. He has had charge of this division about six years. The State of Kansas receives more mail than any other State in this division, but for some reason is not in favor of headquarters at Saint Louis. All the principal mail-routes in Missouri are equipped. They have plenty of car room to work mail in, and plenty of men to do the work. The Post-Office Department do not expect agents on lines as long as 250 to 300 miles to be on duty more than half the time. The other portion of their time is for rest and study. The following is a statement showing the amount of mail carried on the principal routes in Kansas and Missouri; also the dimensions of cars, length of route, and number of accounts to each car.

KANSAS.

Name of route.	Number of pounds mail.	Length of route.	Number of agents.	Time of duty, hours.	Size of car, feet long.
Santa Fé Railroad	30,000	634	2	24	40
Kansas Pacific	6,000	640	2	24	24
Southern Kansas	4,600	337	2	16	21
Kansas City, Fort Scott and Memphis	2,300	487	2	18	25
Central Branch	3,100	293	1	15	22
Lawrence to Burlington	2,700	74	1	7	18

MISSOURI.

Missouri Pacific	29,200	285	4	11	60
Saint Louis and Cairo	15,700	194	4	9	60
Saint Louis and Pacific	4,200	250	2	12	50
Wabash	7,000	276	4	11	55
Hannibal and Saint Joseph	7,400	226	2	11	40

Now, take the Santa Fé for example and see what the men on that route have to do: A car starts out of Kansas City for Pueblo with 15 tons of mail; almost all of that quantity has to be handled letter by letter, paper by paper, during the run of 634 miles. The men are unable to work the amount off before they get to Pueblo. They have positive orders from Mr. Warfield to distribute it while they are lying at Pueblo, and when they ought to be resting and getting ready for the return trip. In the round trip of 1,268 miles they have to separate from thirteen States and two Territories. These trips are frequently made without the men taking one moment of rest only while they sit down to eat a hasty lunch. When a car reaches Kansas City on its return trip it would seem the men ought to be permitted to go home to seek the rest they so much need. But the mail for the State of Kansas has increased so fast in quantity that no matter how expert they are, can they distribute a car-load of mail so that none of it will be carried past its destination.

So these men who have just come in from a 634-mile trip and are so tired that if they sit down a few minutes they will go to sleep are required to take their places in the outgoing car as assistants and render all the aid they can until the train reaches Topeka. In addition to the six hours they have been on duty, this extra work which is required of them adds nearly eight hours more to their labor, making thirty-two hours they have been on duty without rest; and this plan has been in practice on this road for nearly a year.

On Missouri lines they are treated better. It frequently occurs that mail for Kansas and Colorado is brought into Kansas City by the different mail routes from the East unworked. The Colorado mail is loaded on the Kansas Pacific and Santa Fé with the distinct understanding that all of it must be properly distributed before it leaves the car. The Kansas mail must remain at Kansas City until enough men can be found to work it up, as has been the case several times this winter.

The Kansas mail, after lying at Kansas City for several days, has been sent to post-offices in small lots to have it distributed. Topeka, Emporia, Newton, and other places have received this mail. In the course of four or five days delay the Kansas citizen would get his Eastern paper. This delayed mail would collect in such quantities at Kansas City that it would not be disposed of in the manner above, so the Kansas mail agents would be drummed up, no matter if they had just returned from a hard run. These, to the number of eight or ten, would be put in a mail-car with this delayed mail, the car attached to the Missouri Pacific train and sent up to Atchison; and by the time the car returned to Kansas City this mail was expected to be worked for the different lines in Kansas.

Of course this mail has been delayed a long time—some of it a week, perhaps—and the Kansas man grabs it as if it was fresh, and many curse the mail agent because his paper has been so long on the road. But Superintendent Warfield wants to make a reputation for economy at the expense of the people and his men, and the State of Kansas is a good place to put it in practice.

One would suppose that this delayed mail, or a large portion of it, could have been worked on the lines that brought it to Kansas City, but these lines that run east of Kansas City are given to understand that when they have more mail than they can work comfortably they can dump it off when they get to Kansas City, and the Kansas mail agent can sweat over it. When the agents on the lines east of Kansas City arrive at that place they stop work, no matter if their car is half full of unworked mail.

THE NEEDS OF THE SERVICE

in this State are more car room and more help, and these wants have been told to Mr. Warfield repeatedly. How these just causes of complaint are received at headquarters at Saint Louis I would like to report, but as the slaves of the Department already have more grievous burdens than they can bear, I do not care to add to them by giving official superior officers opportunities and an excuse for further oppression, and perhaps secure their discharge.

The blame primarily is with Superintendent Warfield, in his desire to make a record for economy. Also, that his own official head may be more secure, he is taking the life and heart's blood out of as brave and worthy a class of men as ever served in any department of the Government. He is making premature physical wrecks of a noble class of young fellows and depriving the people of what they have a right to demand, a faithful and efficient mail service. This is no figure of rhetoric or extravagance of speech, and the facts I have stated above fully warrant the statement, and will in the judgment of all who are competent to study and examine them.

I am showing, as I think, conclusively, how inadequate is the postal service as put upon the railway trains to perform the ordinary duty of distributing the mail so that the people by whose doors these railroads run may receive the mail from the train.

Here is an article from the Lawrence Journal, another daily paper in the State:

No doubt Kansas is having about the worst mail service ever inflicted upon any State. In particulars not a few, it is worse than it was twenty-five years ago. We know of two copies of the Eagle ordered sent to different towns and but one copy has been received in two weeks. Such shameful neglect is inexcusable. If it is owing to the old rascals "turn 'em out," and never fear fracturing the spinal column of the civil service; if it is owing to the ignorance and inefficiency of the new hands at the bellows, better try again and ship in a few Arapahoe Indians and see what they can do. The fact is, we suppose, the men are worked to death. The Government is too stingy and niggardly to afford anything like the number of men needed to do the work. Men in high places want to make a record for economy, and they work their men like slaves and impair the public service so as to make their ledger show up well to the Department. The present arrangement is an outrage surely.

Mr. President, it is not for any political purpose and not for any purpose of complaint that I call attention to these facts. The State, it is true, has had in some respects an unparalleled growth, and yet it can not be that Nebraska and Dakota and Western Texas and so on have not furnished comparatively the same illustration of the western movement of population, and have not illustrated by hundreds of examples the necessity which exists in Kansas for a prompt and rapid extension of mail facilities and which ought to be heeded, and I object that under any pretense of economy, for any purpose merely of saving money to the Treasury, there shall be withheld from these people that proper postal service which they have a right to expect, and the service which the Department was organized to give them.

The first demand, as I said before, is not that money may be saved, but that it may be judiciously spent; that the service may be what the situation calls for. The mere question of expense is a minor one; and this is not a party question, because the increase of the mail service on the railroads in Kansas means an increase of Democratic employés. I will say to my vigilant friend from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN], who takes so much interest in the personnel of the administration and who is so desirous that all the places may be filled by Democrats, claiming, as he does, that that party possesses especial merit in the way of furnishing competent officeholders, that there has not only not been a single Republican appointed to office in Kansas, under this administration, but I believe there is not more than a handful of all the men who were in office at the time Mr. Cleveland came into the Presidency remaining in office, certainly not in the postal service.

If I were disposed to get up a debate with him about the question of the relative merits and intelligence of Democrats and Republicans I should have something to say about that service and its inefficiency, based upon the fact that these changes have been made; but I do not care if it takes three times as many Democrats as it did Republicans to do the work; I want the work done, and I am willing to vote the money necessary to have it done. The Postmaster-General is recreant in his duty if he does not expose to Congress the necessity for increased force which grows out of this change of administration.

But, Mr. President, it is a fact that the men who are in the postal service in Kansas distributing the mails upon these great through lines are overworked and underpaid as well. They are called upon to do more than physical endurance can accomplish, and the result is that mails are carried hundreds of miles beyond the place where they should be delivered, because the clerks are so overburdened that they can not distribute the mails in time. And it has been because the Department has been unmindful of the fact that each year there is an enormous addition to the weight of the mail, to the number of pieces to be distributed, to the essential requirements of the service, and has been attempting to keep it to the bounds within which they found it, that it has not kept up with the growth of population and with the progress of the times.

Next year we shall have by way of revenue from the postal service $50,000,000, which is an increase of nearly $7,000,000 over last year. The average annual increase of the revenues of the Department during periods when the rates of postage have been untouched is about 8 per cent. But it is a singular fact that for two or three years often the service will go ahead without any very considerable increase and all at once there will be an enormous increase added for a single year, going above the ordinary average rate. That probably may be the case this year, and if it is so, and if we are to have $50,000,000 where we got $43,000,000 last year, what preparation has the Department made for this increase of business by asking for increase of appropriations for this vital portion of the public service?

Mr. President, I have no doubt that notwithstanding the fact that we have given in this bill every dollar that the Postmaster-General has asked for, there will be a deficiency in this service before six months have gone by greater than we know now and that the people who are poorly supplied now will be still more inadequately supplied after six months from now, because the Department has itself voluntarily withheld the opportunity that presented itself to have proper provision made for the wants of the service. There has never been any question about appropriations for this service, so far at least as the Senate is concerned. I see a newspaper of this city is congratulating the Postmaster-General on the fact that he got this year the entire estimate made for his Department.

That reminds me that when the House was Democratic and the administration was Republican, the House always treated the appropriations on the theory that too much was asked for, and it was the hardest work for the Senate to get the House to yield enough to carry on the service in even a moderate way. There was complaint then, but that complaint is very much greater now, because the Department itself is not willing, it does not ask for what it ought to have, but considers more the question of how expenses may be brought within the revenue than it does how there can be given to the country a service which is absolutely essential.

When I say this, I do not speak of it because of any politics there is in it; I do not speak of it for the purpose of complaint; but I speak of it as voicing the sentiment of entire States west of the Mississippi River concerning the serious inconvenience to which the people are subjected, and who have no remedy against this penny-wise and pound-foolish action of the Department, but whose protest ought to be expressed somewhere.

A few days ago a postmaster recently appointed in Kansas sent his resignation to a friend in this city, and it was accompanied by this remarkable statement: He said, "I am now not only spending all my allowance for clerk-hire, but I am spending all my salary besides in employing clerks and $1,100 per annum additional; and myself and my wife are working fourteen hours a day in this post-office. I want the Postmaster-General to do one of two things, either give me adequate clerical force or accept my resignation." The Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN] says he was a Democrat. But even a Democrat can get too much of that, even a Democratic stomach will finally turn on provender of that kind.

So the service of a city of 30,000 people, as vital to them as its commerce and an essential part of its commerce, is paralyzed to-day because the Department fails to take note not merely of the representations of the postmaster himself but of the reports of its own special agents confronting it that this need exists, and this imposition is being practiced upon the postmaster and through him upon the entire community.

I think what we ought to have is a fair, square understanding that the Post-Office Department shall everywhere on the railroads, on the steamboats, on the high seas, on the great prairies, by means of the star-service, be first and always what the necessities of the situation call for, with a thorough reliance upon Congress to give the necessary money to carry it on independent of the question as to whether the revenue meets the expenses.

Congress has cut down twice in the last four years the revenues of the Department in a conspicuous way regardless of the fact that thereby there was to be created a deficiency, but believing that this service ought to be brought year by year nearer to the people whom it is designed to serve, brought to them cheaper, and that as little tax as possible should be put upon the dissemination of intelligence. The Post-Office Department ought to administer the law upon that theory which has been characteristic of the dealings of Congress with the Department from the beginning, and the necessity for which dealing increases year by year.

I now present some additional clippings from the press of my State, showing the condition of affairs there:

[Troy Chief.]

We, in common with many others in Kansas, have growled about the unsatisfactory conduct of mail matters, and especially the carrying of letters and daily papers by the office to which they belong, causing from a half a day to a day's delay in their delivery. The route agents or postal clerks receive most of the blame for this. It has for some time been dawning upon us that much of this blame was undeserved, that the route agents were overworked; and recent interviews with persons from different parts of the State, who are better posted than we are, reveal the fact that the situation is much worse than we had any idea of. The mail facilities for Kansas are shamefully deficient, and the inadequate force of route agents are worked in a manner which renders the lot of a street-car mule a happy one. This imposition upon the route agents seems to be in a great degree chargeable upon certain superintendents of the postal service, and other heartless bosses who are ambitious to build up a reputation for economical management of the service at the expense of the postal clerks; and they are deterred from any protest or complaint by the fear that the result would be their discharge instead of the needed relief.

Take for example the Santa Fé road, carrying the heaviest mails in Kansas. The route agent between Coolidge, on the southwestern line of the State, and Kansas City has a run of 500 miles or over. He is on his feet constantly during that run, except when eating his meals, and by the time he reaches Kansas City is so nearly worn out that he can scarcely stand. But this is not the worst of it. He arrives at Kansas City about 6 o'clock in the evening, but instead of going off to rest, is compelled to turn in and assist the agent on the train which goes out at 10 o'clock in the night, and help him as far as Topeka, where they arrive about 1 o'clock at night, and he gets back to Kansas City about 6 o'clock in the morning, having been on constant duty for more than twenty-four hours. The railroad companies do not furnish sufficient facilities for storing the mail, as one car is not sufficient. In starting out of Kansas City the car is packed full of pouches and sacks, giving barely room for the clerk to stand. The railroad company erected guards to keep the sacks away from the stove and catching fire; but in spite of this, the mail caught fire on several occasions. The last mails in are the sacks of daily papers, which are piled up on the other mail.

All this has to be handled before reaching the first station where there is a post-office, in order not to carry matter by that belongs to such office. The letter pouches are distributed first, and the paper mail is necessarily carried by. We have been told of several postal clerks whose health is not good, who are subjected to this treatment; and of one clerk who, in attempting to pull a letter pouch from a stack of paper sacks piled upon it, was so severely injured in the back by the heavy sacks falling upon him that he has been laid up for some time, unable to go on duty.

We have been told of one agent who, as a rule, was kept on duty constantly for three days and nights before having a lay-off; and often the clerks are so worn out and sleepy that they seem to be mechanically throwing the mail—in a sort of dream.

It will readily be seen that this sort of work will not only break down the strongest man that ever lived but that the public also suffers. This sort of economy the people do not desire. They want sufficient mail facilities and are willing to pay for them. They especially do not ask that poor route agents be murdered by slow degrees in order that some beast on a big salary may build up a reputation for economy.

The cry is growing stronger and more frequent from all parts of Kansas against the inefficient and outrageous mail service of the present administration. A lot of inexperienced men and boys have been installed in the places of experienced route agents and expert mailing-clerks not only, but no attention is paid to the growth of the State and its increasing demands. Daily papers are being forced to employ the express companies. Two hundred copies of last Tuesday's Eagle, which contained a synopsis of the proposed improvements in this city for the coming year, were mailed to Topeka for the members of the Legislature and State officers.

Those papers, Representative Hatfield informs us, have never reached the men for whom they were intended, although letters and telegrams were both sent notifying the parties to whom they were consigned. The failure to deliver those papers is not only an outrage upon us, but an injury to our city in whose interest the papers were sent. In truth that edition was especially gotten out for the purpose of imparting to the representative men of the State some idea of the importance of our city, nine out of ten of whom have never been here. Personally we would not have had the miscarriage for $500.—Wichita Eagle.

Mr. President, I will now consent that this bill may go over until to-morrow in order that the Senator from Kentucky and other Senators who may be interested in whatever is to be said upon the other side may have an opportunity to do so, and I certainly do not care how much there may be of it. I shall be glad of any excuses or palliations or defense which can be made. I have served my purpose when I have called the attention of the Senate and the country to the facts, so that wherever the fault may be the remedy may be applied.

Now, Mr. President, one other word about this bill. The first item of appropriation is in lines 8 and 10:

For mail depredations and post-office inspectors, and fees to United States marshals, attorneys, and the necessary incidental expenses connected therewith, $300,000.

That is an increase of $100,000, or 50 per cent. beyond what the appropriation was for last year, and beyond what it has been since 1883, when the amount was raised from $175,000 to $200,000. I do not speak of this by way of criticizing it, but simply to show that for this character of service which was specially asked for by the Postmaster-General in his report for the purpose of giving him the opportunity to make a more complete and thorough inspection of the post-offices of the country, and which involves the employment of a very considerable number of additional inspectors, the committee yielded it as they would have yielded freely to an application for an increase of two or three or four times as much for the star-route service or for any other essential branch of the postal service.

When it comes to stationery for postmasters, wrapping twine, wrapping paper, letter balances, scales, fuel, lights, and things of that kind, the amount is either what it has been heretofore or it is less, showing, as I said in the beginning, that the Department has been economical and quick to avail itself of the declining prices and of all the agencies of competition in cutting down the expense of these necessary items, but items of a character which the increase in their use does not correspond to the increase in business.

Mr. President, I will now ask that the bill be read, if no other Senator desires to make remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reading of the appropriation bill will proceed.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Appropriations with amendments.

The first amendment was, in line 25, after the word "dollars," to insert:

Provided, That no boxes for the collection of mail-matter by carriers shall be placed inside of any building except a public building, or a building which is freely open to the public during business hours, or a railroad station.

The next amendment was, in the appropriations for the "Office of the Superintendent of Foreign Mails," after line 88, to insert:

For the transportation of foreign mails by American built and registered steamships, to secure the greater frequency and regularity in dispatch and a greater speed in the carriage of such mails to Brazil, the Argentine Republic, and the Republics of Uruguay and Paraguay, $500,000; and the Postmaster-General is authorized to make, after due advertisement for proposals, such contract or contracts with such American steamships, for a term of not less than five years, and at a rate of compensation not exceeding for each outward trip $1 per nautical mile of the distance in the most direct and feasible sailing course between the terminal points, as shall be found expedient and desirable to secure the ends above set forth; but every such contract shall be subject to be modified or annulled by act of Congress.

Mr. PLUMB. The amendment need not be acted on now. It will bring up discussion. I wish to have the bill read through and some minor amendments agreed to, and this one laid over for the present.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HARRIS in the chair). The amendment will be passed over informally for the present.

The reading of the bill was resumed and concluded.

Mr. PLUMB. I ask consent to go back to line 20, for the purpose of offering two amendments, which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendments will be received and considered.

The CHIEF CLERK. After line 20 it is proposed to add:

And the Postmaster-General is hereby authorized to rent a suitable building for the use of the branch of the Washington city post-office known as Station C, at a rate not exceeding $1,000 per annum, until further action of Congress.

Mr. PLUMB. I will state that that is necessary for the purpose of enabling the Postmaster-General to keep going the branch post-office in the northwestern part of the city.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PLUMB. I offer the following amendment to come in after the one just adopted:

To pay rent of building for use of the Washington city post-office at a rate not exceeding $5,000 per annum, $5,000.

I will state that the lease of the Seaton building, now occupied by the city post-office, has expired, and the Postmaster-General says it is necessary, in order that he may be able to go on and contract for the coming fiscal year, that such a provision as this should be inserted.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BECK. The amendment from line 89 to line 103 has been passed over informally I understand?

Mr. PLUMB. Yes, sir.

Mr. BECK. Before that is brought up, I desire to say——

Mr. PLUMB. I only desired to get in the two amendments that might be overlooked before considering the one which would lead to discussion. As far as my convenience is concerned, I am willing now to proceed to the consideration of that amendment.

Mr. BECK. I have no doubt about that; but before that is considered I desire to say——

Mr. DAWES. Does the Senator desire to go on now?

Mr. BECK. I have no desire about it. I suppose we might as well let the bill go over until to-morrow.

Mr. PLUMB. If that suits the convenience of the Senator, I have no objection.

Mr. DAWES. I ask that the bill be laid aside informally.

Mr. PLUMB. Before the Senator from Massachusetts is heard I desire to know what condition the bill will be in to-morrow if its consideration is dispensed with now?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That would depend altogether on what disposition the Senate make of it to-night.

Mr. PLUMB. I wish to have it left as the unfinished business.

Mr. BECK. I would suggest, then, that by unanimous consent it be the unfinished business for to-morrow at 2 o'clock. I do not know how much time gentlemen desire to occupy, but we can finish the bill to-morrow, I think.

Mr. PLUMB. Had we not better say directly after the conclusion of the morning business?

Mr. FRYE. How long will the debate extend?

Mr. PLUMB. Probably not over an hour or two.

Mr. FRYE. I have no desire to discuss it, so far as I am concerned.

Mr. BECK. I should like to finish the bill to-morrow if we can, and if it is taken up after the morning business we can probably do so.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kentucky asks the unanimous consent of the Senate that the Post-Office appropriation bill may be informally laid aside with the understanding and agreement that it be the unfinished business at 2 o'clock to-morrow. Is there objection?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I object because I want it taken up earlier; immediately after the morning business.

Mr. BECK. Then I will modify the request and say immediately after the ordinary morning business.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That I agree to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. To which the Senator from Tennessee objects.

Mr. BECK. Then I do not know what else to do.

Mr. PLUMB. I will run the risk of bringing it up to-morrow.

Mr. BECK. Very well.

FORT HALL INDIAN RESERVATION.

Mr. DAWES. I move to proceed to the consideration of Order of Business 1637, Senate bill 2789.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2789) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to negotiate with the Shoshone and Bannock tribes of Indians for the relinquishment of their title to so much of the lands of the Fort Hall Reservation, in Idaho Territory, as is required for the uses and purposes of the Utah and Northern Railway Company and the Oregon Short-Line Railway Company, either separately or conjointly.

Mr. DAWES. I propose to offer a substitute for it being the House bill, and therefore I move by unanimous consent to dispense with the reading——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair suggests that the Senator had better move to consider the House bill in lieu of the Senate bill.

Mr. DAWES. The bill has not passed the House, but the bill reported there is the bill which I propose to substitute, in order to have the phraseology precisely alike.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection the substitute proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts will be read in lieu of the original bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Subject to call for the original bill being read if desired.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be subject to a call for the reading of the original bill if any Senator desires. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out all after the enacting clause of the bill and to insert:

That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to negotiate with the Shoshone and Bannock tribes of Indians, in such manner as he may deem most advisable, and upon just terms of compensation, for a cession to the United States, subject to the provisions of the eleventh article of the treaty of July 3, 1868 (Statutes at Large, volume 15, page 676), of their title to so much of the lands of the Fort Hall Reservation, in the Territory of Idaho, as are required for the purposes of the Utah and Northern Railway Company in the operation of its railroad running north and south through said reservation; that is to say, a right of way not exceeding 200 feet in width, with grounds adjacent thereto for station and depot purposes, not to exceed 20 acres for each station, to the extent of one station and no more for each 10 miles of said road, in addition to such right of way; also for a like cession to the United States of such additional land at Pocatello Station, the junction of the Utah and Northern Railway and the Oregon Short-Line Railway, as shall be demonstrated to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Interior to be actually necessary to the said Utah and Northern Railway Company and the Oregon Short-Line Railway Company for railway purposes, and in the transaction of their authorized and legitimate business at that point.

SEC. 2. That before such negotiations are had the Utah and Northern Railway Company shall file in the office of the Secretary of the Interior a map, duly certified by the chief engineer and president of said railway company, showing the definite location and line of construction of said north and south road on the Fort Hall Reservation; also plats, duly certified in like manner, showing the surveyed limits and areas, respectively, of grounds adjacent to such right of way, selected by said company for station and depot purposes in connection with said road. The said Utah and Northern Railway Company and the Oregon Short-Line Railway Company shall also, prior to such negotiations, file in the office of the Secretary of the Interior a map, certified by the chief engineers and presidents of said railway companies, respectively, showing, in accordance with the public surveys, the quantity of additional land required at Pocatello Station for the actual and necessary uses of said railway companies, conjointly, in the proper and legitimate prosecution of their railroad business at that point.

SEC. 3. That the result of such negotiations shall be embodied in a written agreement, to be signed by the requisite number of Indians in conformity with the provisions of the treaty hereinbefore mentioned, which said agreement shall be returned to the Secretary of the Interior, who shall thereupon report his action hereunder to Congress.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 929) for the relief of Albert H. Emery, with an amendment; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

COURTS AT WILMINGTON, N. C.

Mr. RANSOM. I move to take up Order of Business 2153, House bill 1684. It will not take half a minute.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (H. R. 1684) to authorize terms of the circuit court of the United States for the eastern judicial district of North Carolina at the city of Wilmington, in said district, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

COURTS IN ARKANSAS.

Mr. BERRY. I move to take up for consideration Calendar number 2151, being House bill 3160.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (H. R. 3160) to amend section 533 of the Revised Statutes of the United States was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with an amendment to insert as a new section:

SEC. 2. That all crimes and offenses heretofore committed within either of said districts shall be prosecuted, tried, and determined in the same manner and with the same effect as if this act had not been passed.

Mr. MCMILLAN. Is that the only amendment reported from the committee?

Mr. BERRY. Yes, sir; it is the only amendment reported from the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

Mr. BERRY. In line 11 of section 1 I move to strike out the words "Desha, Chicot," after "Phillips;" so as to read:

The eastern division shall consist of the following counties, to wit: Mississippi, Crittenden, Lee, Phillips, Clay, Craighead, Poinsett, Greene, Cross, Saint Francis, and Monroe.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

CALIFORNIA LAND SALES.

Mr. DOLPH. I move to take up for present consideration Order of Business 196, Senate bill 994. It will certainly not take long. The Senator from California [Mr. STANFORD] desires to leave soon, I understand, and I have been trying to get it up for the last year, since it has been on the Calendar. I will agree not to occupy more than three minutes myself.

Several SENATORS. What is it about?

Mr. DOLPH. It is granting to the State of California what every other land State has had, 5 per cent. of the net proceeds of the sales of the public lands within her limits. The bill has been three times favorably reported by the Senate Committee on Public Lands, and twice in the other House, at three different sessions of Congress.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? The Chair hears none.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 994) granting to the State of California 5 per cent. of the net proceeds of the sales of public lands in said State.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill has heretofore been read and considered in Committee of the Whole, and amendments agreed to.

Mr. PLATT. Let us hear the bill read as it has been amended up to the present time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill as amended will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Whereas the States of Ohio, Louisiana, Mississippi, Illinois, Alabama, Missouri, Arkansas, Michigan, Florida, Iowa, Wisconsin, Minnesota, Oregon, Kansas, Nevada, Nebraska, and Colorado, constituting the list of all the public-land States except California, have each received a certain per cent. of the net proceeds of the sales of the public lands situate within their limits, respectively; and

Whereas California is the only public-land State that has not received any per cent. of the net proceeds of the sales of the public lands in said State: Therefore,

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That there be, and is hereby, granted to the State of California 5 per cent. of the net proceeds of the sales of the public lands which have been made by the United States since the admission of said State or may hereafter be made in said State to aid in the support of the public or common schools of said State; and the sum of money necessary to pay said 5 per cent. to said State is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. DOLPH. I ask to insert the word "cash" before the word "sales" in line 4, according to a suggestion made by a Senator near me, so that it shall only apply to cash sales.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Oregon.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and was read the third time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is, Shall the bill pass?

Mr. SAULSBURY. I objected to this bill the other day when it came up for consideration, not because of any particular fact that is known to me, but because I intended to vote against it and desired to state very succinctly the reasons why I could not support it. This bill differs from any other bill that has been before the Senate proposing to give 5 per cent. of the proceeds of the public land sales to the States. In reference to the other States that have had any legislation of this kind, there was a contract in the enabling act which gave to the State 5 per cent. of the proceeds of the sales of the public lands. That was the case in Ohio in 1802 or 1803, and it was the first State that had a donation of that kind. Subsequently most of the States that have been admitted into the Union have had in their enabling acts a provision which secured to them 5 per cent. of the proceeds of the sales of the public lands. That provision is not contained in any legislation with reference to California.

Mr. DOLPH. If the Senator will permit me, I will state that there were no grants in the enabling act; indeed, there was no enabling act. The State was admitted in 1850 without any provision, because Congress did not have sufficient information in regard to the public lands there.

Mr. SAULSBURY. That is what I intended to call attention to; that California stands in a very different relation to this question from Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Iowa, or any other State that has received the 5 per cent. There was nothing in the legislation which admitted California into the Union that pledged the Government to give to her a single dollar of the sales of the public lands; and now California, one of the most prosperous, one of the richest States in the Union, rich in mineral resources, rich in her soil, rich in her commercial advantages, comes here to ask a donation from the public Treasury out of the sales of the public lands in that State of 5 per cent.

There are a number of the States of this Union, all the old States, that have had no donations of that kind. California has had public lands for educational purposes, as well as other Western States. The Eastern or older States had no appropriation of public lands for educational purposes, and they had no proceeds of the sales of public lands donated to them. Now, why should California, one of the most prosperous States of this Union, come here and claim or ask for a donation of 5 per cent. of the sales of public lands within the limits of that State when she is at present one of the richest States in the Federal Union? What justification can there be for it?

In reference to other States, there was a provision in their enabling acts that entitled them to this percentage by virtue of a contract with the Government; but there is nothing of that kind in this case, and therefore I shall vote against the bill; not because if there had been in the enabling act a provision similar to that put in the enabling act of other States she would not be just as much entitled to it, for I would not violate any contract entered into with the State, but I can not consent as a representative from one of the older States of this Union that has had none of the benefaction of the Government that the public Treasury shall now be depleted out of the sales that have been made of the public lands, or which may hereafter be made in that State, because there is nothing binding the Government to make any donation of that kind.

That is all I have to say in reference to it. I shall vote against the bill.

Mr. PLUMB. I want to call the attention of the Senate and of the Senator from Delaware to the third section of the act under which California was admitted into the Union, a consideration of which will show that the United States attached all the conditions to the admission of California, so far as those conditions could be performed by California, as were attached to the admission of all the other land States; but it did not, in consideration of those conditions, give to California what was given to the public land States named in the preamble of this bill. Section 3 of the act of admission, approved September 9, 1850, is as follows:

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That the said State of California is admitted into the Union upon the express condition that the people of said State, through their Legislature or otherwise, shall never interfere with the primary disposal of the public lands within its limits, and shall pass no law and do no act whereby the title of the United States to, and right to dispose of, the same shall be impaired or questioned; and that they shall never lay any tax or assessment of any description whatsoever upon the public domain of the United States, and in no case shall non-resident proprietors who are citizens of the United States be taxed higher than residents; and that all the navigable waters within the said State shall be common highways, and forever free, as well to the inhabitants of said State as to the citizens of the United States, without any tax, impost, or duty therefor.

The condition, which was a common one in the admission of all the public-land States, and in consideration of which the United States granted to them 5 per cent. of the proceeds of the sales of public lands within their limits, was that they should never lay any tax upon the public lands of the United States within their limits, and that condition, together with the others which I have read, which are similar to those imposed on the other States, is found in the act admitting California, and California by accepting this is irrevocably bound to observe the same conditions as the other States were; and therefore the United States has already received the same consideration for this grant to California which it received for similar grants made to the other public-land States.

Mr. SAULSBURY. The provision read by the Senator from Kansas is not a condition at all. It was a mere reservation of the rights of the Government; it imposed no duty upon California, but it simply reserved the absolute right of the Government to dispose of its own public land and public waters. There was no condition annexed, no service to be rendered by California, and therefore it was not a condition that attached to this matter. It was a simple reservation of the rights of the Government over its own property and the exclusion of any control over it by the State of California.

At any rate, as a citizen of one of the older States and a Senator of the United States, I can not consent to vote away money out of the public Treasury to a State that does not need it, which has rendered no service for it, which has nothing in her enabling act that would make this a claim on her part.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

Mr. SAULSBURY. On that question I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, the Senator from Delaware takes the ground, as I understand him, that the Government of the United States made reservations in California and in the other land States out of the public land. I think the Senator has got the matter exactly reversed. It was the States who made the reservation for their own benefit, with the consent of Congress, when they were admitted into the Union.

As I understand the history of this country, the State of Delaware never contributed a foot of land outside of her own borders to the public domain; but New York and Virginia, Connecticut and Massachusetts, and other States contributed very large areas to the public domain, as did also North Carolina and Georgia and other Southern States. In the deeds of cession or in the acts of cession which those States made to the United States the lands were conveyed to the Congress of the United States in trust for all the States of the Union then admitted or that might thereafter be admitted. The proceeds of the sales of the public lands went into the Treasury of the United States, first, for the purpose of paying the expenses of the Revolutionary war and bounties to Revolutionary soldiers, and, to some extent, in relieving the States themselves of their indebtedness. New Jersey and Delaware, Rhode Island and Maryland objected seriously to the very large outlying areas which were owned by Virginia, North and South Carolina, and Georgia, and by New York, Massachusetts, and Connecticut; said that those States having those areas should surrender them, must surrender them, into the hands of the general Congress of the United States before they would consent to take any part in the Union. They made it the condition of their uniting in the articles of confederation. So the other States made these cessions to the Congress of the United States, and upon this trust; and the money that was first realized from the sales of the public lands thus granted by the States that had these territories went into the Treasury of the United States, and assisted in paying the Revolutionary war debt of Delaware and the other States of the American Union. In the presence of these facts it will not do to say that the State of Delaware has had no benefit out of the public domain.

There is another proposition connected with this of a good deal of importance, which is that the people who have occupied the public lands of this country have had to encounter all the dangers and troubles and hardships of a pioneer population. The older States were colonized many years ago, and had become settled in respect of their governments and their public institutions of various kinds, their court-houses, schools, and jails, and public roads, and a great many other improvements that they had already received the advantage of before any of these new States were brought into the Union.

So when we come to consider now the question of what a new State shall have, the proper test of comparison is what the other new States have received; for the old States by these concessions received from the new States, from the territory that was thus conceded to the United States Government, very large advantages and benefits; and when you come to compare the real advantages that the new States have received under this 5 per cent. reservation, and the reservation for colleges and public schools, they are a very small item when contrasted with the amount of money that the old States received in paying off the Revolutionary war debt.

When we acquired territory by the Louisiana purchase, and in all the territory that we have acquired from Mexico, the provisions of these acts of Congress were continually extended to this additional territory. Even in the treaty of purchase of the territory of Louisiana, as it was called, a provision was inserted that the States to be formed out of that territory should have the same benefits and privileges in the public lands that the old States had, and that the lands should be held in trust by Congress for the benefit of these States on a footing of equality with the old States of the Union.

I do not see any reason for making an orphan child of California because the Senator from Delaware thinks she is rich. California is a splendid State. She has vast resources of gold and silver, and much more important resources in iron ore that I think will develop into something grand in the near future. It has already encouraged Californians to bid for one of the steamers which the Government advertised recently, and it is to be built in the Bay of San Francisco. In these respects she is rich, but California is almost a timberless country after you get off the mountains. She has to incur enormous expense in raising timber for her own use. Her wheat crop is not a crop of very great profit. I hope it will become so, and I believe it will as soon as they get the Chinese to eating bread instead of rice. I think California then will have a market for all that she can grow at a fair price; but at present she has to ship her wheat around the Horn, as she is very far from market, or else she will have to get it to come in under the short-haul and long-haul law of the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM], and have a burden placed upon it perhaps that California can not at all bear in shipping her crop.

When you have got through with the wheat crop of California, the next thing is grapes. That is a grand industry, but it lacks a great deal of being a very valuable one now; it is nothing like so profitable as the peach orchards of Delaware. In comparison to their size, Delaware is a richer State to-day, with her seaboard facilities, her proximity to Philadelphia and New York, with her peach orchards, acre by acre, than California is. There is no gronnd of complaint on this point.

The Committee on Public Lands looking over this question could not feel or believe that it was just to the State of California that she should remain in this Union on a footing of difference from the rest of the States. If I understand the object of the Constitution of the United States, it is that the States shall be as nearly equal as possible in all respects, and that the new States shall be as nearly equal to each other in all respects as possible.

We shall bring in Dakota, Washington Territory, Idaho, Montana, New Mexico, and Arizona as States after awhile, and in every one of the enabling acts we shall put a provision entitling them to 5 per cent. of the net proceeds of the sales of public land. There has not been a bill reported for the admission of a new State into the Union in the last four or five years (and there have been several reported here) that has not contained this provision. Therefore I think it would be very unjust and very unwise not to place California on a footing of perfect equality with the other States of the American Union. It must be remembered that at the time of her admission into the Union there was not very much deliberation. There was a good deal of political pressure on that question, and California was willing to struggle into this Union upon almost any terms at all, and I have always believed that the omission to put in the act of admission this reservation to her of the 5 per cent. was an injustice perpetrated against that State merely because of the pressure of politics at that time. I think it is time we corrected it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the passage of the bill, on which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. GEORGE. I desire to call the attention of the Senate to one point. I understand this bill to be put on the ground that it grants the State of California what was granted to the State of Ohio. The precedent of Ohio was followed in the case of all the other land States. I understand that the bill before us makes an absolute grant of 5 per cent. of the proceeds of the sales of the public lands to the State of California without any condition connected therewith whatever. In all the other States the grant was made of the sixteenth section in each township for the purposes of common schools, but the grant of the 5 per cent. was made in the case of Ohio in these terms:

That one-twentieth part of the net proceeds of the lands lying within the said State sold by Congress from and after the 30th day of June next, after deducting all expenses incident to the same, shall be applied to the laying out and making public roads, leading from the navigable waters emptying into the Atlantic, to the Ohio, to the said State, and through the same, such roads to be laid out under the authority of Congress, with the consent of the several States through which the road shall pass.

That was the trust, for the purpose of making a certain improvement in which all the States were interested. All were interested in having roads over which interstate commerce might pass. This grant was made to the State of Ohio for that purpose after she had received the sixteenth section, as the other new States did, for the purpose of common schools, a matter in which the State might be said to have been wholly interested. That is the difference between the grant in the other States and the grant here. So if the argument of the Senator from Alabama is worth anything (and it is worth a great deal), that all the States should be put on the same footing, a footing of equality, then the grant in this case ought to be made in trust for the prosecution of such improvements as all the other States are interested in. On that point I might state, as a reason why this grant should not be made at all, that the United States has already given about fifty or sixty million dollars for the purpose, or has loaned the Pacific railroads that money for the purpose of making highways to and in the State of California.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, I think the true ground on which this bill is justified is that the several States composing the Union were the proprietors of the soil of the new States and were looking upon it in the light of proprietorship. It was a very small donation from the proceeds of the soil of the whole territory constituted into a State, that the United States should give 5 per cent. of the proceeds of the sales of the property or soil on which that State was erected. The motives of public policy which justified this, which was a very correct business transaction, were of course to habilitate the new States, the new political communities, and give them the power to perform the public functions which they were created to perform. Outside the consideration of the exemption of the land from taxation by the State—that is a very strong State-rights view, and very correct, I think—it was an act of sovereign legislation which the State of Delaware and all the States of the old Union derived indisputable profit and benefit from, and as an act of public policy it was an act of sovereign legislation governed by the wisest consideration of public benefit.

Now, Mr. President, I see no reason why the State of California should not have this benefit as well as all the other States, 5 per cent. of the proceeds of the sales of lands within her borders. Nor is there anything in the argument that California has prospered, that she is a rich State. The Pacific Railroad, it is true, is a great highway, but it is private property; and how far the interests of the individuals and the education of the people there, may or may not be a matter for argument—certainly it is of public utility—but that the people should have this benefit, that it should be devoted to the cause of education, that it should be left a trust for this sovereign State to make highways, is proper; and I shall vote for the bill with pleasure.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. COLQUITT (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. CHACE].

Mr. STANFORD (when his name was called). I suppose my pair with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CAMDEN] will hold on this bill. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. PLUMB (when Mr. VAN WYCK'S name was called). The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. VAN WYCK] is absent unavoidably, and is paired with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY]. The Senator from Nebraska would vote "yea."

Mr. VEST (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY].

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. FRYE. I will take the liberty of pairing my colleague [Mr. HALE] with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CAMDEN], and that will leave the Senator from California [Mr. STANFORD] at liberty to vote.

Mr. STANFORD. With that understanding, I vote "yea."

Mr. HARRIS. I am paired with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] generally. How did his colleague [Mr. MORRILL] vote on this proposition?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. He voted in the affirmative.

Mr. HARRIS. I vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 41, nays 5; as follows:

The preamble was agreed to.

THE R. E. LEE VOLUNTEER BATTERY.

Mr. MAHONE. I move to take up Order of Business 2149, being the bill (S. 3170) to authorize the Secretary of War to exchange guns with the R. E. Lee Volunteer Battery of Petersburg, Va.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with amendments, in line 4, after the word "steel," to insert "or wrought-iron muzzle-loading;" and in line 8, after the word "Virginia," at the end of the bill, to add the following proviso:

Provided, That said brass guns are of the Government model and standard.

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized to exchange four three-inch rifled steel or wrought-iron muzzle-loading guns, mounted and otherwise equipped for service, for the four Napoleon twelve-inch brass guns, mounted and otherwise equipped for service, of the R. E. Lee Volunteer Battery, of the city of Petersburg, Va.: Provided, That said brass guns are of the Government model and standard.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ILLINOIS JUDICIAL DISTRICTS.

Mr. CULLOM. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Order of Business 2179, being the bill (H. R. 367) to amend section 536 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, relating to the division of the State of Illinois into judicial districts, and to provide for holding terms of court of the northern district at the city of Peoria.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is advised that the bill has not yet come from the printer.

Mr. CULLOM. If that is so, I will not call it up.

NAVAL CADET ENGINEERS.

Mr. MCPHERSON. I desire to call up Senate resolution No. 60, Order of Business 1498.

The joint resolution (S. R. 60) for the purpose of temporarily increasing the number of assistant engineers in the United States Navy by restoring certain cadet-engineers named therein to their legal rights and to their proper office and rank in the United States Navy, authorizing and directing the President to appoint such cadet-engineers (graduates) assistant engineers, to commission them as such, and to antedate their commissions, was read by its title.

Mr. PLUMB. The Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] is interested in that joint resolution I think, adversely.

Mr. MCPHERSON. I think the Senator from Maine is no longer opposed to the joint resolution. He wanted some amendments to it which were admitted, and I understand he withdraws his objection.

Mr. PLUMB. I do not object to it myself.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from New Jersey to proceed to the consideration of the joint resolution.

The motion was not agreed to.

RAILWAY THROUGH INDIAN TERRITORY.

Mr. DAWES. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 6393) to authorize the Fort Worth and Denver City Railway Company to construct and operate a railway through the Indian Territory, and for other purposes. I want to say that the bill has not been referred, for the reason that the Committee on Indian Affairs have agreed to report precisely the same bill. This bill comes from the House, and I move to put it upon its passage.

Mr. COCKRELL. Has the Committee on Indian Affairs reported?

Mr. DAWES. The Committee on Indian Affairs has decided on the same bill precisely.

Mr. COCKRELL. Why not report it and let it go on the Calendar, so that we may look at it!

Mr. INGALLS. What is the title of the bill?

Mr. CAMERON. Mr. President——

Mr. DAWES. I report it from the committee by their authority.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Pending this question the Senator from Pennsylvania rose.

Mr. CAMERON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. DAWES. Let us pass this bill.

Mr. CAMERON. I withdraw my motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts to proceed to the consideration of House bill 6393.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa (at 5 o'clock and 5 minutes p. m.). I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. ALLISON. I hope the Senator will allow the bill to pass.

Mr. PLATT. We have got to adjourn some time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is moved that the Senate adjourn.

The question being put, there were on a division—ayes 17, noes 20; no quorum voting.

Mr. INGALLS. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and taken.

Mr. BLACKBURN (after having voted in the affirmative). I am paired with the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON]. He is not present, and I withdraw my vote.

Mr. VEST. Before this vote is announced I wish to make a parliamentary inquiry. To-day, when the bill (S. 2288) to incorporate the Atlantic and Pacific Ship-Railway Company, and for other purposes, was under consideration, the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] called up the Post-Office appropriation bill. I then agreed, as I understood it distinctly, that the ship-railway bill should be laid aside temporarily in order to consider the Post-Office appropriation bill. I am informed now by the clerks at the desk that as the Journal stands it appears that the Eads bill is displaced permanently.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The occupant of the chair was not present at the time referred to. It is the duty of the Chair, however, to announce the vote before any business transpires except by unanimous consent. The Chair will state, by unanimous consent, the condition of business as the Chair understands it. The Chair was not present when the unfinished business was postponed, but understands that it was postponed by a formal vote of the Senate, which would displace the bill that the Senator has in charge.

Mr. VEST. I did not so understand.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. So the Chair is informed; but if there be no objection, the Chair will lay before the Senate the Eads bill, as it is called, as the unfinished business, subject to the decision of the vote now made. ["Agreed!" "Agreed!"]

The result on the motion of Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, was announced—yeas 18, nays 28; as follows:

YEAS—18.

Blair,	George,	Morrill,	Vest,
Conger,	Hampton,	Palmer,	Walthall,
Cullom,	Ingalls,	Platt,	Wilson of Iowa.
Eustis,	McMillan,	Saulsbury,
Evarts,	Miller,	Sherman,

NAYS—28.

Aldrich,	Cockrell,	Hoar,	Pugh,
Beck,	Coke,	Jones of Arkansas,	Ransom,
Berry,	Dawes,	Kenna,	Sawyer,
Bowen,	Farwell,	Maxey,	Spooner,
Call,	Frye,	Morgan,	Whitthorne,
Cameron,	Gorman,	Payne,	Williams,

ABSENT—30.

Allison,	Edmunds,	Jones of Nevada,	Sewell,

Colquitt,	Hawley,	Riddleberger,
Dolph,	Jones of Florida,	Sabin,

So the Senate refused to adjourn.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read House bill 6393.

Mr. PLATT. What is the parliamentary condition of the bill?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole and open to amendment. It is now being read in the first instance.

Mr. PLATT. Is it a House bill?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is a House bill.

Mr. PLATT. Is it being read for the first time to-day?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. In full.

Mr. PLATT. I will take the liberty to object to any further reading to-day.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is informed that it was read twice yesterday. The bill came over from the House yesterday and was read the first and second time, and is now open to amendment.

Mr. DAWES. It has been read the first and second times, I will inform the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. PLATT. It has not been read at length before?

Mr. DAWES. It has not been read at length.

Mr. PLATT. Has it been printed at all?

Mr. DAWES. The bill was printed in the House precisely as it is now, except two or three verbal amendments. It is being read from the engrossed copy of the House in order to read those amendments.

Mr. PLATT. I wish to inquire of the Senator who has it in charge if it is customary in the passage of a bill relating to matters pertaining to a Territory and while the Territory is in a Territorial condition to prescribe what a State may do if one should be erected out of the Territory. I notice that the bill in two or three of its provisions prescribes that when a State shall be carved out of the Territory that State may do certain things.

Mr. DAWES. Will the Senator call attention to it in the bill?

Mr. PLATT. It is in the provision in reference to some reservations of Congress with regard to the management of these roads, and then it goes on to say that whenever a State shall be erected in the Territory the State shall have the same right. I have no objection whatever to the principle which is involved with regard to the regulation of railroads; but it struck me as it was being read that it was quite an unusual thing to do in the passage of a bill to provide that when a State should be erected in the Territory it might do certain things.

When we come to make a State out of that Territory it will be quite time enough then to fix the condition on which the State shall be allowed to come into the Union. I have not objected to it, but I would like to look further into it.

Mr. DAWES. I have no objection if the bill can get through in some reasonable time. Of course I have no desire to hurry it through. It is in exactly the same form as four or five bills that have passed, unless I am very much mistaken, and all the allusion to what a State may do that occurs to me from recollection is that the State may regulate the tolls and tariffs of the road through the State. I do not know but that there is something more.

Mr. CULLOM. Is it in order to move an adjournment now?

Mr. SPOONER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 2553) for the relief of Thomas A. Osborn.

Mr. CULLOM. I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. SPOONER. I have the floor.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair recognized the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. DAWES. What is the condition of the Indian Territory railroad bill?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is in process of being read. Pending that the Senator from Wisconsin moves to proceed to the consideration of another bill.

Mr. DAWES. While this is pending?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Undoubtedly while this is pending. At any stage a motion may be made to proceed to the consideration of another bill?

Mr. DAWES. Then let us make some disposition of this bill which will be satisfactory to the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. PLATT. All that I ask in regard to the bill is that I may have an opportunity to examine it.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Virginia moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. DAWES. I suggest to the Senator from Connecticut to let the bill pass, and then he can enter a motion to reconsider it.

Mr. PLATT. I will do that.

Mr. DAWES. Then if there is anything in the bill that ought not to be there of course I shall aid the Senator in taking it out.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Virginia moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I shall not insist upon my motion, as some Senators wish to pass the bill. After that is disposed of I shall ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of executive business. I withdraw my motion.

Mr. DAWES. Will the Senator from Wisconsin yield for a moment?

Mr. SPOONER. I yield for that purpose.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Wisconsin withdraw his motion?

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa (to Mr. SPOONER). Withdraw it, and let us finish this bill.

Mr. SPOONER. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reading of the bill will proceed. The Senator from Wisconsin is understood to withdraw his motion.

The Chief Clerk resumed and concluded the reading of the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. PLATT. I enter a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion to reconsider will be entered.

THOMAS A. OSBORN.

Mr. SPOONER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of bill (S. 2553) for the relief of Thomas A. Osborn. It will take but a moment.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the bill be read for information.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Virginia moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. CAMERON and others. Withdraw the motion.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I will withdraw it again.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion to proceed to the consideration of executive business is withdrawn. The bill moved by the Senator from Wisconsin will be read for information.

The Chief Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and is hereby, directed to pay to Thomas A. Osborn, late United States marshal for the district of Kansas, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $8,701.93, on account of the loss of that amount of public funds by the failure of the banking-house of E. H. Gruber & Co., on the 6th day of October, 1866, the loss being without neglect or fault on the part of the said Thomas A. Osborn.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wisconsin moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. PLATT. Let the report be read.

Mr. SPOONER. The judge of the court certified that the marshal was entirely without fault; that so far from having been in the slightest degree negligent, he used extraordinary care.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Connecticut call for the reading of the report?

Mr. PLATT. If it is not too long, I should like to have the report read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Secretary read the following report, submitted by Mr. SPOONER, July 28, 1886:

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2553) for the relief of Thomas A. Osborn, having considered the same, make the following report:

This case was considered by the Committee on Claims of the House of Representatives during the present session, and a favorable report made thereon. The report was as follows, and is adopted by the committee as its report on said Senate bill 2553:

The Committee on Claims, to which was referred bill (H. R. 9008) for the relief of Thomas A. Osborn, having carefully considered the same, reports:

That the claimant, Thomas A. Osborn, was United States marshal for the district of Kansas in October, 1866, and for over two years prior thereto; that as such marshal certain money of the United States came into his hands to defray United States court expenses for his district; that his office as marshal was in the city of Leavenworth, Kans., in a room immediately over the banking-house of E. H. Gruber & Co.; that the Government furnished no safe or other depository in which the claimant could deposit the public money in his hands.

It had been and was, on the 6th day of October, 1866, the custom of the claimant, on receiving advances from the Government for the court expenses, to deposit the same with the said banking firm of E. H. Gruber & Co.; that the said firm was regarded by the business community of said city as being perfectly safe; the leading and best citizens made their deposits with said bank; that on October 1, 1866, the claimant had a balance in said bank, of funds belonging to the United States, of $2,966.59.; that on said 1st day of October he received from the Treasury of the United States the further sum of $6,596 for the purpose of paying the expenses of the October term of the United States district court, which sum he also deposited in said bank on said 1st day of October, 1866; that on the 6th day of October, 1866, the said banking-house of E. H. Gruber & Co. failed, having at the time of failure the sum of $9,562.59 of the moneys of the United States to the credit of the claimant as United States marshal; that the claimant at once made good said amount to the United States.

The committee is of the opinion that the claimant used due care in handling the said money of the United States, and that the loss was in no way the result of any negligence on his part.

In February, 1867, the late Hon. Mark W. Delahay, then United States district judge for Kansas, made the following statement:

I have been perfectly conversant with Marshal Osborn's manner of doing business since his appointment. I know that he has been doing his banking business through the house of E. H. Gruber & Co. This house I considered one of the safest in the locality until it failed, on the 6th of October, 1866.

I believe that Marshal Osborn has guarded with unusual diligence the interest of the Government, and that he is in no way to blame for the loss which occurred with E. H. Gruber & Co. Many of the best business men in Leavenworth were doing business with said firm at the time of its failure. I had been doing my banking business with said firm for years.

MARK W. DELAHAY,
United States District Judge for Kansas.

The committee concurs in the opinion expressed in the statement just cited. It is shown to the committee by competent evidence that the claimant received from the assignee of said firm of E. H. Gruber & Co. 9 per cent. of said sum of $9,562.59, and no more. The committee is of the opinion from all the facts and circumstances attending the loss that the sum of $8,701.96 should be paid the claimant.

The committee returns bill H. R. 9008 with the recommendation that the same do pass.

The committee therefore report the bill back with the recommendation that the same do pass.

Mr. PLATT. I should like to inquire of the Senator who reported the bill whether it is to be established by the bill as a precedent that whenever an official of the United States has money in his hands which he deposits with private bankers, and they fail without any knowledge on his part that they were going to fail, it is to be the loss of the United States and not of the official? Is there any distinction in this case from what there would be in any case which may arise where an officer of the United States deposits his money with a private bank and the private bank fails? Are we always hereafter to relieve them and say that it is the loss of the United States and not of the official?

Mr. SPOONER. I suppose each case will be decided as it arises upon its peculiar facts. The Senate, more than once at this session, has relieved officials of responsibility for losses of public money where it was perfectly manifest that they were in nowise at fault. There was a case of the kind of a Texas postmaster which the Senate passed within the last forty-eight hours, as I recollect, relieving the postmaster on account of moneys which had been stolen without his fault. It is a little difficult to see the distinction between the two cases where it is conceded that the official in one case is just as much liable as in the other for the public money, it appearing in each case that he is absolutely free from negligence.

Mr. CULLOM. I inquire whether there was any public depository in that section?

Mr. SPOONER. There was no depository there. There was a sort of a national bank there which failed the next day.

Mr. CULLOM. Was this money in a bank which was regarded as reliable?

Mr. SPOONER. It was in a bank which the judge certifies was the bank patronized by the business men of the community, the bank in which he had kept his deposits for years, and he certifies that this marshal had used extraordinary diligence and care in his handling of public money. The committee felt that the officer was entirely exonerated from any negligence, and that this relief should be granted.

Mr. PLATT. Of course, the sympathy of everybody goes out to an officer thus situated, but it is a new rule which is being established by legislation. I have noticed that occasionally a case has been passed this year relieving a postmaster, who, as I understand, is not authorized to deposit his money in a bank but is specially bound to keep it.

Mr. SPOONER. And paymasters have been relieved.

Mr. PLATT. And paymasters; but such has not been the rule of the Government heretofore, and it seems to me we are at this session of Congress establishing a principle which in future will hold it to be the loss of the United States whenever an official has deposited money in a national or private bank and it can not be shown that he had knowledge or ought to have had knowledge that the bank was in a doubtful condition or likely to fail.

Mr. HOAR. Why should it not be the law? He is an agent.

Mr. PLATT. I do not know but that it should be; I will not say that it should not be; I simply say it has not been heretofore, and that we are now establishing, as I understand, a new principle which really will have the force of a new law. If it were so now there would, of course, be no necessity for the passage of this bill. I do not find any fault with it, except I desire that the Senate shall act understandingly in the matter, and hereafter whenever any official deposits any money in a bank which fails it will be the loss of the United States undoubtedly, because it will be bound by these precedents.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

J. R. JONES.

Mr. SAWYER. I ask unanimous consent to take up Senate bill 603. It is a little relief bill. I presume no one will find any fault with it. It is for payment on account of a registered letter.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I ask the Senate to have an executive session for a few minutes.

Mr. SAWYER. This is for the relief of one of your constituents. It is a Virginia case.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. Still, I have other constituents; I have so many of them. However, I acquiesce.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wisconsin moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 603) for the relief of J. R. Jones, late postmaster at Boydton, Va.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads with an amendment, in line 6, after the word "dollars," to strike out "collected from him by the Post-Office Department, and which amount is in excess of what he should have paid to said Department," and to insert the words "and fifty-one cents;" so as to make the bill read:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to J. R. Jones, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $84.51.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WARREN MITCHELL.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President——

Mr. BECK. If the Senator from Massachusetts will allow me a moment, I only desire to give notice, the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY] being absent, that on next Tuesday at 2 o'clock I shall ask the Senate to consider the bill (S. 31) for the relief of Warren Mitchell. The Senator from Massachusetts knows all about it. I only want to have the bill considered then, and I give notice that I shall, at 2 o'clock on Tuesday, call it up and ask the Senate to give us a vote upon it.

NIGHT INSPECTORS OF CUSTOMS.

Mr. GORMAN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 3116) for the relief of night inspectors of the ports of New York and Baltimore.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. PLUMB. Cannot the bill be amended so as to have these cases reported to Congress and let Congress make the appropriation? I make that suggestion. It seems to me it is putting a large power in the hands of the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to have such an amendment made, and I should like to know how many hours these men work, and what they call double duty. If the bill proposes to give them double pay for ten or twelve hours work, I am opposed to it. We have prescribed the hours of duty. I am opposed to the way the Departments are doing here, requiring their clerks to work only six hours a day, when Senators work from twelve to sixteen hours; and I do not propose myself to be a party to paying these night inspectors, or any others, for doing four, five, or six hours work.

I move the amendment which the Senator from Kansas suggested, that the Secretary of the Treasury make this examination and report to Congress the facts in the case, the number of persons so employed, and the number of hours during each day or night that they perform service.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be reduced to writing.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. Pending that motion to amend I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business. In substantiation of that motion I will say that it seems to me I can see that there is a disposition to pass all kinds of bills, and we only want in executive session to have a few reports made, for instance, from the Judiciary Committee. Let them go upon the table and lie over for a day, because they are bound to lie over for a day, but I should like to see them reported from the Committee on the Judiciary.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Virginia moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. CULLOM. Pending that motion I move that the Senate adjourn.

ATLANTIC AND PACIFIC SHIP-RAILWAY.

Mr. VEST. I ask that the unfinished business be first laid before the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate what, by unanimous consent, is the unfinished business of the day.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (S. 2288) to incorporate the Atlantic and Pacific Ship-Railway Company, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM] moves that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 50 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Saturday, February 12, at 12 o'clock m.

Ordered, That Mr. MAHONE, Mr. VEST, and Mr. PALMER be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection the House will insist on its amendments and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Chair appoints as managers of the conference on the part of the House Mr. WORTHINGTON, Mr. OWEN, and Mr. MAYBURY.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. ROWELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask leave to present a report that is not of a public nature, in order to get the bill upon the Calendar, so that it may be called up Monday.

There was no objection.

Mr. ROWELL, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 11074) directing the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to establish streets and avenues in the county of Washington, D. C., and for other purposes; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. SPRINGER. Has the morning hour been dispensed with, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER. It has.

Mr. SPRINGER. Then I call up a bill which comes over from last Friday, the bill (S. 570) for the relief of Jabez Burchard.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the proper accounting officers of the Treasury be, and they are hereby, authorized and directed to allow to Jabez Burchard, assistant engineer on the retired-list of the United States Navy, an amount which, with payments heretofore made to him, will be equal to 75 per cent. of the sea-pay of the grade or rank held by him at the date of his retirement by a naval board of the United States Navy; said amount to be paid out of any money in the United States Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and to take effect from and after the date of his retirement by said naval board.

Mr. SPRINGER. I ask permission, before the vote is taken upon ordering this bill to be engrossed and read a third time, to call the attention of the House to the facts of the claim.

Mr. BURROWS. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BURROWS. I desire to know how that bill has precedence over another bill upon which the yeas and nays were ordered, and also the previous question?

The SPEAKER. It has not. If there be such a bill——

Mr. BURROWS. There is.

The SPEAKER. That bill was not called up, and the attention of the Chair was not directed to it. To what bill does the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS] allude?

Mr. BURROWS. It is the fourth bill on the calendar of unfinished business.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks, on the statement of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS], that the bill to which he refers has precedence.

Mr. SPRINGER. I will explain the situation.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman's explanation.

Mr. SPRINGER. That bill was reported from the Committee of the Whole, and pending the motion for the previous question the House adjourned. The bill was reached in order for consideration, and its further consideration was postponed until to-day. Therefore it becomes a special order for to-day.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is informed that the previous question was not ordered on the bill to which the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS] alludes. The previous question was demanded, but pending that demand the House adjourned.

Mr. BURROWS. Then I was misinformed.

Mr. TAULBEE. Mr. Speaker, is the previous question ordered on this Burchard bill?

The SPEAKER. It is not.

Mr. TAULBEE. Is it open for debate?

The SPEAKER. It is. The Chair will cause the record to be examined.

Mr. SPRINGER. I ask the attention of the House for a few moments while I explain the pending bill. It is a bill for the relief of Jabez Burchard——

Mr. TAULBEE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman allow me to ask what was the recommendation of the Committee of the Whole House in reference to this bill?

Mr. SPRINGER. The Committee of the Whole House reported against the bill, but the recommendation was not concurred in; and then the House postponed its further consideration until to-day. There was a misapprehension with regard to the facts of this case, and I desire now briefly to explain——

Mr. STEELE. Regular order!

The SPEAKER. This is the regular order.

Mr. STEELE. Had not the previous question been ordered on this bill, and was there not a motion to recommit?

The SPEAKER. The previous question had not been ordered on this bill.

Mr. TAULBEE. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. TAULBEE. I have not examined the record with reference to the action on this bill; but according to the statement of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER], the House refused to concur in the recommendation made by the Committee of the Whole, which was adverse to the bill. My point of order is that that action sends the bil back to the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. SAYERS. That is so.

Mr. SPRINGER. The proper time to have made that point was when the vote was taken in the House. But I then moved to postpone——

The SPEAKER. As the Chair understands, and as the record shows, the bill was by unanimous consent postponed until to-day, which of course dispensed with the operation of the rule to which the gentleman from Kentucky has referred.

Mr. TAULBEE. I did not know that. As I stated, I had not examined the record.

Mr. STEELE. Would a motion to recommit the bill to the Committee of the Whole House be in order now?

The SPEAKER. It will be in order whenever the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. STEELE] gets the floor to make it; the gentleman from Illinois is now on the floor to discuss the bill. He will proceed.

Mr. SPRINGER. If I had been permitted to proceed, I could have said by this time all I desired to say with reference to this bill. The claimant in this case was an assistant engineer in the naval service, having been, as I understand, appointed in 1865. He served five years continuously, and at intervals during two years, having been during a part of the last two years on leave, by reason of sickness. In 1874 a retiring board was asked to consider his physical condition; and that board reported that he was afflicted with chronic retinitis——

A MEMBER. What is that?

Mr. SPRINGER. Inflammation of the retina of the eye. This disease, according to the report of the board, incapacitated him for service; but they found no record evidence that the disease had been contracted in the line of duty. No proof as to the fact of its having been so contracted was submitted to the board. As soon, however, as the officer was informed of this decision, he appealed to the Secretary of the Navy, who caused the question to be again examined, and it was found that the disease had been contracted on board the monitor Terror, off Key West, in the summer of 1872, and was incident to, or grew directly out of, the service. The claimant also produced the certificate of a prominent physician of Philadelphia to the effect that he had been perfectly sound as to his eyes up to the time when he entered the naval service.

The then Secretary of the Navy, therefore, in view of the fact clearly established before the Navy Department that the disease had been contracted in the naval service, endeavored to have the officer placed upon the retired-list in the position in which he would have been had it been found at the time of his retirement that the disease was incident to the service. An order to that effect was made; and he was placed in a position where he drew 75 per cent. of the sea-pay of his rank. This went on for several months—nearly a year, I believe, when a new Comptroller came in, and, reversing the decision of his predecessor, held that the action placing him in this position where he would be entitled to draw 75 per cent. of his sea-pay did not come within the law. This new Comptroller then began to check against the pay which the officer had received; and this ran on until the President nominated Mr. Burchard to the Senate for transfer from the furlough to the retired pay-list.

The Senate, after examination of the question whether he had rightfully been placed on the retired-list, and was entitled to 75 per cent. of the sea-pay, ratified the recommendation of the Secretary of the Navy; and the nomination of the President was confirmed. This bill is for the purpose of allowing Mr. Burchard his pay on that basis from 1872 to 1874, when he was declared by the action of the President and Senate as rightfully on the retired-list upon 75 per cent. of sea-pay.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. What amount of back pay on the retired-list does this bill carry?

Mr. SPRINGER. I think about $2,900 or $3,000.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Is it not $4,000 or $5,000?

Mr. SPRINGER. The gentleman can figure it up for himself; he will find the data set forth in the report.

Mr. TAULBEE. The printed copies of the report are exhausted, and we can not get any.

Mr. SPRINGER. He ought to have received $1,275 per year; and this bill is for the purpose of giving him the amount he should have received from the time of his retirement until the time when the Senate confirmed him as on the retired-list at three-fourths of his sea-pay. The Senate has adjudicated this matter, and found that this man is entitled of right under the law to this pay.

But the Comptroller held that the pay, not having been appropriated for from year to year, must be provided by a special act of Congress. He is here now for the purpose of getting that pay which the President and the Navy Department have held over and over again he is entitled to. It is not a favor on the part of Congress, but simply to correct the record so that he may be entitled to receive this pay, which has been, under the circumstances stated, withheld from him; and on that point I desire to have read a letter received from Admiral Rodney upon this subject.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, Washington, January 27, 1887.

DEAR SIR: In behalf of Assistant Engineer Jabez Burchard, United States Navy (rank of lieutenant), I point out that, if you can get unanimous consent to make a statement, the bill is, in a nutshell, simply to correct an error in his record. The Navy Department has repeatedly tried to effect this, and, under Secretary Thompson, supposed they had finally done so, but have been overruled by the Comptroller's Office holding that Congress alone can make correction. The officer was seized with the disease of the eyes while actually on sea-service in the fire-room of the monitor Terror, Key West, summer of 1872; and though paid his rightful 75 per cent. line of duty retired-pay for some years, has been reduced to half-pay (only $850 per year), as if disabled while neither on sea nor any other duty, a confessed error of record, and a sum of several thousand dollars, back difference between the two rates, checked against him by the late Comptroller (Upton), who reversed his predecessor's settlement.

Very respectfully,

ROBT. RODNEY,
United States Navy.

Hon. Mr. SPRINGER.

Mr. SPRINGER. It will be seen, Mr. Speaker, that this is not a bill to increase his pay on the retired-list, but to give him that to which the law entitled him from the date of his retirement up to the time he was placed on the retired-list.

Mr. REAGAN. I desire to ask the gentleman if this officer is drawing a pension?

Mr. SPRINGER. No, sir; only his retired-pay as a naval officer. He is nearly blind, and is unable by reason of that misfortune to perform any manual service whatever.

Mr. TAULBEE. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. SPRINGER. Certainly

Mr. TAULBEE. What is the present pay received by this officer?

Mr. SPRINGER. His pay is one-half of his sea-pay—$850.

Mr. MORRISON. That is enough.

Mr. TAULBEE. Does the bill propose to increase that rate of pay, or to rerate his pay as a retired officer?

Mr. SPRINGER. It proposes to give him the rate to which his rank entitled him during this time when it was withheld from him, but does not increase his pay. It only gives him an amount which will make the pay equal to 75 per cent. of the sea-pay for the entire time.

Mr. BURROWS. It is stated that he was retired on one-half pay, but this proposes to retire him on three-quarter pay.

Mr. SPRINGER. No; that is a mistake. He is now retired on three-quarter pay by the President, with the advice and consent of the Senate; and this would bring the rating up to the full time for which he was entitled to that pay.

I yield now to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SOWDEN], who reported the bill, five minutes.

Mr. SOWDEN. Mr. Speaker, if there ever was a meritorious bill before this House, the one now under consideration is that bill. Jabez Burchard entered the United States Navy March 14, 1865, as acting third assistant engineer. He served five months on the monitor Naubuc; was detached and ordered to the United States steamer Powhatan. He served a little over two years and six months on this steamer; was detached and granted one month's leave of absence, and was honorably discharged. He re-entered the Navy on September 1, 1870, as second assistant engineer, and was ordered on special duty at League Island, Pennsylvania; detached from there January 11, 1872, and ordered to the United States monitor Terror, at Havana. While attached to this monitor, at Key West, Fla., in July, 1872, he was taken with an affection of the eyes, was examined by a board of medical officers, condemned, and sent home.

After remaining on sick leave for nearly a year, he reported as fit for duty, and was ordered to join the United States steamer Tuscarora, at San Francisco. After joining this ship he was again attacked with affection of the eyes, and was again condemned by a medical survey and sent home, and while there he was ordered before the naval retiring board at Washington for examination, and which made the following report:

NAVAL RETIRING BOARD,
Washington, D. C., October 12, 1874.

SIR: We have examined Jabez Burchard, assistant engineer, United States Navy, and find him affected with chronic retinitis. He had been twice condemned by medical survey of disease for the eyes, and there is no evidence on record that his disability originated in the "line of duty." He is at present unfit for duty, and, in our opinion, is permanently incapacitated to perform the duties appropriate to his commission.

Respectfully, &c.,

GEORGE PECK,
Medical Inspector.

DAVID KINDLEBERGER,
United States Naval Surgeon.

Commodore J. W. NICHOLSON,
President Naval Retiring Board.

Observe the peculiar language of this finding:

He had been twice condemned by medical survey of disease for the eyes, and there is no evidence on record that his disability originated in the line of duty.

It will thus be observed that the board does not find the fact that the disease for which the beneficiary of this bill was condemned was not contracted by him while in the service and in the "line of duty," but simply that there is no evidence of that fact on record. Jabez Burchard had no reason to believe that any such evidence would be required. He, like all others who enter the naval service of the United States, had to undergo the most rigid physical examination, and had he not been physically sound he never would have been accepted into the service.

The presumption was therefore in his favor, and he had a right to suppose that he need submit no evidence to the board on the subject of his physical condition prior to his re-entering the service. There can be no doubt but that he contracted the disease for which he was condemned as unfit for duty in the "line of duty." Who can gainsay it? The late Secretary of the Navy Robeson believes with us on this subject after carefully reviewing the facts of the case, as the following letter, of date March 1, 1877, clearly shows:

NAVY DEPARTMENT, Washington, March 1, 1877.

SIR: Upon a full review of all the facts in the case of Assistant Engineer Jabez Burchard, United States Navy, the Department is of the opinion that the causes which incapacitated him for active duty were incident to the service, and that he should receive the higher rate of pay allowed to retired officers by section 1588 of the Revised Statutes.

Very respectfully, &c.,

GEO. M. ROBESON,
Secretary of the Navy.

Hon. S. J. W. TABOR,
Fourth Auditor of the Treasury.

Mr. TAULBEE. Would it disturb the gentleman to ask him a question?

Mr. SOWDEN. Certainly not.

Mr. TAULBEE. If this bill is passed, what rate of pay will this officer receive?

Mr. SOWDEN. Seventy-five per cent. of his sea-pay.

Mr. TAULBEE. How much will that be?

Mr. SOWDEN. Twelve hundred and seventy-five dollars per annum.

Mr. TAULBEE. That is what I thought.

Mr. SOWDEN. He should have received it from the very day he was retired under the finding of the naval retiring board. He was entitled to 75 per cent. of the sea-pay to which his grade entitled him under the law. I have a letter before me now from Medical Inspector Kindleberger, who was a member of the naval retiring board in 1874 when Jabez Burchard was examined, and who is still a member of the board. I will send it to the Clerk to have read, so that the House may see what he has to say on this subject now. No; I will read it myself:

UNITED STATES NAVAL HOSPITAL,
Washington, D. C., January 20, 1887.

SIR: On examination of the records of the retiring board in the case of Jabez Burchard, assistant engineer, United States Navy, it appears evidence was not furnished to show that his eye disease originated in line of duty. In view, however, of his service in the Navy for over three years at sea, from March 14, 1865, without treatment for the eyes, on the monitor Naubuc and steamer Powhatan, there seems a fair probability that his affection, which appeared while on duty on the United States monitor Terror, July, 1872, and which I understand has steadily advanced to almost total blindness, originated from the heat of the fire-room and the glare of the coral reefs about Key West.

Very respectfully,

D. KINDLEBERGER,
Medical Inspector, United States Navy.

Surg. Gen. F. M. GUNNELL, United States Navy,
Navy Department, Washington, D. C.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SOWDEN. I ask the gentleman to yield me five minutes more.

Mr. SPRINGER. Very well.

Mr. SOWDEN. As stated already, Jabez Burchard never dreamed that it was necessary for him to prove that he contracted his sore eyes in the "line of duty." He relied upon the presumption in his favor. Had the question been raised before the board he could very easily have produced the testimony of the distinguished oculist, Dr. P. D. Keyser, of Philadelphia, who had been treating him for this disease in October, 1873, as also that of Dr. W. T. W. Dickeson, whose evidence was afterward submitted to the Navy Department, and upon which the case was reviewed with the result indicated in Secretary Robeson's letter of March 1, 1877. This is their testimony:

1630 ARCH STREET, PHILADELPHIA, May 2, 1876.

Mr. Jabez Burchard, assistant engineer, United States Navy, came to me in October, 1873, suffering from a severe attack of retinitis, which has assumed a chronic form.

This affection of the eyes is the result of his duties on monitor service, the great heat and severe changes of light, &c. I can find no signs of any constitutional (acquired or congenital) disease.

He has been under my treatment up to the present date, and is still and always will be incapacitated for any use of his eyes.

P. D. KEYSER, M. D.,
Surgeon Wills Eye Hospital, Philadelphia.

This is to certify that I am personally acquainted with Dr. P. D. Keyser, and know him to be among the first physicians and oculists in this city.

L. G. WUNDER,
Chief Clerk Philadelphia Post-Office.

I hereby certify that I am acquainted with Dr. P. D. Keyser, a physician in good standing, and, further, that the foregoing is his certificate.

Witness my hand and official seal this 3d day of May, A. D. 1876.

ROBERT R. SMITH,
Magistrate of Court No. 8, Philadelphia.

MEDIA, PA., May 4, 1876.

I certify that I have known Jabez Burchard, assistant engineer, United States Navy, since he was a child, and can positively assert that there never was any hereditary disease about him; that he was in a sound physical condition on entering the United States service, and had always good eyesight until sent home from duty on board the monitor Terror.

In his present condition, from chronic retinitis, he is absolutely unable to use his eyes from the painfulness caused by this disease.

WILLIAM T. W. DICKESON, M. D.

DELAWARE COUNTY, ss:

On this 4th day of May, A. D. 1876, personally appeared before me, a notary public of the commonwealth of Pennsylvania, residing in said county, William T. W. Dickeson, M. D., who, being duly affirmed according to law, says that the above facts are true as he verily believes.

Affirmed and subscribed before me the day and year above written.

A. P. OTTEY, Notary Public.

Can any one have any doubt as to the injustice done Jabez Burchard by the finding of the naval retiring board after hearing this evidence? The Navy Department had none.

Mr. REAGAN. May I ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania a question?

Mr. SOWDEN. Yes, sir.

Mr. REAGAN. I do not know how long this officer was in the service. Will the gentleman state how long it was?

Mr. SOWDEN. In all he was in the naval service a little over seven years.

Mr. HOLMAN. It has been stated that he was but four years in the service.

Mr. SOWDEN. He first entered the naval service in March, 1865, and after serving over three years was honorably discharged. He re-entered the service September 1, 1870, and was examined by the naval retiring board October 12, 1874, so that he was in the service for more than four years from the time he re-entered the Navy.

Mr. REAGAN. I ask the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] to yield to me for a few moments.

Mr. SPRINGER. I yield to the gentleman three minutes.

Mr. REAGAN. I do not know if the yeas and nays will be called so that I can record my vote against this measure; but I want to make my record consistent on all occasions by voting against every measure which creates a retired-list, because it is un-American, not in conformity with our theory of Government, and creates a privileged class which ought not to be done and which will endanger this Government in the future. It is claimed that this officer served seven years, and it is proposed that he shall go on the retired-list. My understanding of section 1588 of the Revised Statutes is that he should have served forty years——

A MEMBER. Forty-five years.

Mr. REAGAN. Before he can be put on the retired-list. That section provides as follows:

The pay of all officers of the Navy who have been retired, after forty-five years' service after reaching the age of sixteen years, or who have been or may be retired after forty years' service, upon their own application to the President, or on attaining the age of sixty-two years, or on account of incapacity resulting from long and faithful service, from wounds or injuries received in the line of duty, or from sickness or exposure therein, shall, when not on active duty, be equal to 75 per cent. of the sea-pay provided by this chapter for the grade or rank which they held, respectively, at the time of their retirement.

Now, it is not claimed that there was any particular accident connected with the service in which this officer was injured. It may have been a constitutional disease. He may have had a constitutional weakness of the eyes. The blindness may have occurred anywhere else as well as in the service. There is no fact presented to show that this officer's blindness was the result of his service in the Navy. It occurred, it seems, when he was in the service, but no fact is given to show that it was the result of his service, or of any wound, accident, or disease incident to the service.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. I rise to a question of order. There is so much confusion in the Hall that we can not hear what the gentleman from Texas is saying.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The House will be in order.

Mr. REAGAN. I had occasion two or three Congresses back to examine this whole matter and to present a report to the House on the subject of a civil-list and a retired-list. It was a thing unknown to this country until within recent years. The whole practice of the Government has been to pay men for their services when in office, and when they go out of office they become citizens like every other person.

It is against the policy of the Government, it is against the principles of the Government, it is against the principles of equality under the Government that we should create a class of persons who are to live by the labor of other persons. It can not be said that if we do not do this we do not provide for those who have been injured in the service. That is not so; we have pension laws which provide for those who have been disabled in the military or in the naval service, and who have been rendered incompetent to earn a living for themselves and to support their families. Those pension laws provide for that contingency. But the object of measures of this kind is to create an aristocratic class who are to live upon the labor of other men. You may walk the streets of this city and find gentlemen much younger than I am, stouter than I am, and worth ten times as much as I am, receiving large pay from the Government on the retired-list. It is an outrage that such things should exist, that the poor and humble should be compelled to labor and pay taxes to enrich those who are so much better off than themselves.

It was a great mistake when provision was first made to retire the Federal judiciary. It was a greater mistake, because more extensive in its operation, when provision was made for retiring officers of the Army and of the Navy and of the revenue marine. In the last Congress—I am not sure how it is in this one—there were bills pending for the creation of a dozen more classes to go on the retired-list; so that directly if this be continued we will have the English policy of sustaining an aristocracy, who labor not and serve not, at the expense of the country by taxation levied upon those who have to toil for the means of support.

I had not expected to participate in this discussion. My object in rising was simply to enter my protest against this system as I have offered it heretofore against everything tending to establish a retired-list. I have desired to make this protest, as I do not know whether there will be an opportunity of going upon record in a vote by yeas and nays.

Mr. TAULBEE. I think it is perfectly apparent to those who have listened to the remarks of the gentlemen who are championing this bill that they do not understand the bill themselves or that they are attempting to mislead the House with reference to the facts. It will be remembered by those who were listening that in response to a question I asked of the gentleman from Illinois, the chairman of the committee who reported the bill, he stated the present pay of this officer was $850 a year, and if this bill passed his future pay would be $850 a year. When the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SOWDEN] took the floor I propounded to him the same question, and he answered that the present pay was $850 a year, and that the subsequent pay, if the bill passed, would be $1,275 a year.

Mr. SPRINGER. That is correct. I made the other statement inadvertently, and I wish to correct it.

Mr. TAULBEE. I wish now to say that the effect of this bill is that if it passes it will increase the pay of this retired officer of the Navy; and not only that, but it embodies a principle of legislation upon which this House has seldom or never acted, that is, the rerating of officers upon the retired-list. Further, the bill provides for the payment of this additional back pay "out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated," not even requiring the accounting officers of the Treasury to charge up this rerating to the naval retired fund. I undertake to say, Mr. Speaker, that there has never been a more iniquitous line of legislation entered upon by this House. Here is a man who is retired after seven years' service, and who is now attempting to procure an increase of his pension from $850 to $1,275 a year.

Mr. SOWDEN. He receives no pension.

Mr. TAULBEE. Well, call it pay as a retired officer if you prefer; I care not by what name it is called. There is no disguising the fact that it is a pension for service in the Navy, or for disabilities incurred therein. Now, Mr. Speaker, let this House understand this bill; let it understand that the bill is not only an innovation upon the regular system of legislation with reference to these retired officers, but also that, as has been well said by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN], it is legislation which will encourage an aristocratic class in this country, a class who shall enjoy special favors from Congress, in contravention of the spirit of our institutions and of every sound principle of legislation. This bill does more; it takes money from the earnings of the people instead of from the fund for retired naval officers; it pays to this man, out of the taxes which we all contribute to the Treasury, the difference between the amount to which he was found entitled under the law and the other amount which he asks, but which every officer of this Government who has had anything to do with the question says he is not entitled to.

If gentlemen caught correctly the reading of the report which has been read by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SOWDEN], and to which he invited our attention, they have noticed that not one of these statements has even the sanction of being sworn to. They consist of letters written by this man's comrades in the Navy, whose interest in the matter can be readily understood. If we go on piling up these allowances, increasing these rates of pay, giving men the advantage of every claim like this, which they do not even dare to set forth themselves in a sworn statement, where is this to end? When will the tax-ridden people find relief?

Mr. SAYERS. This man served only four years in the Navy.

Mr. TAULBEE. I am reminded by the gentleman from Texas that this officer served only four years. Now I call attention to the fact that if we pass this bill we enter upon a new line of legislation and furnish a precedent for hundreds, yea, possibly for thousands, of similar bills for other naval officers; and if naval officers are entitled to this extra compensation and this special relief by act of Congress, show me, I pray you, the difference in that respect between them and the officers of the Army. And when the officers of the Navy and of the regular Army have received this extraordinary relief at our hands, then the entire volunteer force of this country (to whom we owe as much as to any other class of men) will be equally entitled, according to precedent, to receive such relief upon an equal basis with the regular officers who have had no longer service than the volunteers, and in some cases not so long. For my part, I shall take great pleasure in voting against this bill, and I wish now to announce that when the proper time comes I shall move to recommit the bill to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. SPRINGER. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SOWDEN].

Mr. SOWDEN. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. TAULBEE] has fallen into an error. He says that this bill would make an innovation on the existing law. I desire to call his attention to the law on this subject. Section 1588 of the Revised Statutes reads as follows:

> The pay of all officers of the Navy who have been retired, after forty-five years' service after reaching the age of sixteen years, or who have been or may be retired, after forty years' service, upon their own application to the President, or on attaining the age of sixty-two years, or on account of incapacity resulting from long and faithful service, from wounds or injuries received in the line of duty, or from sickness or exposure therein, shall, when not on active duty, be equal to 75 per cent. of the sea-pay provided by this chapter for the grade or rank which they held, respectively, at the time of their retirement. The pay of all other officers on the retired-list shall, when not on active duty, be equal to one-half the sea-pay provided by this chapter for the grade or rank held by them respectively at the time of their retirement.

Now, Mr. Speaker, at the time of this man's retirement he was receiving sea-pay at the rate of $1,700 per annum, and, having been discharged on account of sickness, or disease of the eyes contracted in the service and in "the line of duty," as subsequently shown to the satisfaction of the Navy Department by the proper medical testimony, he has brought his case within the provision of the statute under which he is entitled to 75 per cent. of the sea-pay.

Mr. TAULBEE. Will the gentleman allow a question?

Mr. SOWDEN. Certainly.

Mr. TAULBEE. If this officer contracted his disability in the line of duty, and the law provided for his retirement at 75 per cent. of his annual pay in the active service, why is it that he was not given that pay, and is not now receiving it?

Mr. SOWDEN. Because of the mistaken course on the part of the retiring medical board in assuming that he had been accepted into the service with this disease upon him instead of giving him the benefit of the presumption of physical soundness to which he was entitled by reason of the medical examination to which he had been subjected by the United States before he re-entered the Navy. The Government never accepts anybody who is physically incapacitated for duty either in the military or naval service.

Mr. TAULBEE. Will the gentleman please say whether the rule which he has just stated has ever been the rule either in the retirement of Army or Navy officers, or in the adjudication of pensions for soldiers? Is not the burden always put upon the applicant to show affirmatively and conclusively that he was sound at the time of enlistment or muster?

Mr. SOWDEN. This man has taken the burden upon himself and made out his case through the testimony of Drs. Keiser and Dickeson; but the wrong and injustice under which he suffers has not yet been remedied.

Mr. TAULBEE. Then why did not the Department give him relief?

Mr. SOWDEN. The Department now holds that the volunteer soldier who applies for a pension is entitled to the presumption that he was sound at the time of enlistment. It is no longer made incumbent upon him to prove that he was physically sound when he entered the service.

Mr. DOCKERY. Was that true in 1874?

Mr. SOWDEN. That has not been the ruling until recently; but the injustice done in this case has been established, and has been conceded by the Department.

Mr. TAULBEE. If this claimant has made out his case to the satisfaction of the officers of the Department, why is he now coming here to get $1,275 a year?

Mr. SOWDEN. Because he was unjustly deprived of a part of his pay by the decision of the Second Comptroller of the Treasury. Mr. Robeson, when Secretary of the Navy, after a full review of the case, decided that this officer was entitled to 75 per cent. of his sea-pay, because the causes which incapacitated him for active duty were incident to the service.

By reason of the injustice resulting from the decision of the Comptroller, the Secretary of the Navy recommended to the President of the United States the propriety of nominating this officer for the retired-list of the Navy, so that he could lawfully receive 75 per cent. of sea-pay, and upon his nomination by the President to the Senate he was confirmed. But the Comptroller still adhered to his former ruling—holding that because the Naval Retiring Board had not found that the causes which incapacitated this officer for active duty were incident to the service, he was entitled to only one-half of his sea-pay, or $850 per annum, under section 1588 of the Revised Statutes, when in fact he was entitled to $1,275.

Mr. TAULBEE. Will the gentleman explain why this bill provides that the pay under this re-rating, as well as the subsequent pay, shall be paid out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated?

Mr. SOWDEN. Because having received for several years $1,275 and having been deprived of that pay by the decision of Comptroller Upton, who reversed the decision of his predecessor, there is being checked against his account $425 per annum by the Treasury Department.

Mr. SAYERS. Did not the Court of Claims confirm that decision of the Comptroller?

Mr. SOWDEN. The court held very properly that it could not go back of the finding of the naval retiring board. The case is now pending in the Supreme Court on appeal.

Mr. SAYERS. Here in the report is a statement of the finding of the Court of Claims:

Believing this decision erroneous, Mr. Burchard brought suit in the Court of Claims for the difference between $850 and $1,275 per annum, but the court affirmed the decision of the Comptroller (19 Ct. Cls. Report, 137).

Mr. SOWDEN. That is precisely in accord with the statement I have made. But the Department itself, seeing that a manifest injustice had been done this officer, undertook to reverse its own action and correct the injury done him; but it would seem that the only way in which the wrong can be righted is through the passage of this bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SOWDEN] has expired.

Mr. SPRINGER. I wish to say only a few words, and then I shall ask the previous question. This bill does not seek to place an additional officer on the retired-list, as my friend from Texas supposes. The retired-list exists; and this man is on that list. Therefore the case has nothing to do with the principle which my friend from Texas would apply to it.

This gentleman being now on the retired-list, the question is whether he should receive the pay to which the law entitles him in view of the facts as now established, or whether the pay which he is receiving shall be checked against in future as it has been, so as to allow him only 50 per cent. of his sea-pay, on the ground that in the first instance the retiring board held that the disease for which he was retired was not incident to the service.

Mr. STORM. The gentleman will allow me to ask him whether this claim was not reported upon adversely in the Forty-eighth Congress?

Mr. SPRINGER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania has called my attention to a report of that kind made in the Forty-eighth Congress by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WARNER], who has stated in the previous debate that he did report against this claim. The report, however, is very brief, setting forth none of the facts, but simply the conclusions of the committee.

I have examined this case very carefully. The question is simply whether this officer should be placed in the same condition with other officers of the Navy whose cases involve similar facts. The statute provides that the officer shall be entitled, when retired, to three-fourths of his sea-pay, if the disease for which he retired was contracted in the service. The retiring board found, in the first instance, that there was no record in the case showing the disease to be incident to the service; and therefore the Comptroller, standing upon that record, refused to allow the officer the pay to which the Secretary of the Navy afterward held he was entitled.

Mr. STEELE. I would like to ask the gentleman this question: Is it not supposable that a man, although he enters the service perfectly sound and well, may contract during the time of his service a disease not incident to the service?

Mr. SPRINGER. It is possible of course.

Mr. STEELE. This retiring board found this officer was not suffering from disease incident to the service.

Mr. SPRINGER. They found there was no record of service.

Mr. STEELE. They did not ask for the record. They found as to the fact.

Mr. SPRINGER. Afterward the Secretary of the Navy caused an examination to be made, and that board found that he contracted this disease in the furnace-room of the ironclad. Mr. Thompson, Secretary of the Navy, also made this recommendation in his letter to the chairman of the Senate Naval Committee:

Under all the circumstances, and considering the probability that Mr. Burchard's disease might have been incident to the service; that the Secretary of the Navy had given him the benefit of this view, and that he had received the difference of pay; that a checkage against his small pay of $500 per annum would be peculiarly hard; that he is nearly blind, and was not charged with or retired for immoral conduct, I consider the case as calling for my favorable action, and his name was submitted to the President for transfer from furlough-pay to the retired-pay list.

This bill simply places him where other officers are now placed whose disease was contracted in the service. It is not to increase the pay of an officer on the retired-list. It only places him where the law places him.

Mr. DUNHAM. Is this man totally blind?

Mr. SPRINGER. He is not totally blind, but the evidence is that he is so blind as to be unfit for any service whatever. I demand the previous question.

Mr. TAULBEE. I desire to move the recommittal of the bill.

The SPEAKER. That cannot be done at this time.

Mr. TAULBEE. When can the motion be made?

The SPEAKER. After the previous question has been ordered on the passage of the bill.

The previous question was ordered, and under the operation thereof the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. SPRINGER demanded the previous question on the passage of the bill.

Mr. TAULBEE moved to recommit the bill to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar.

Mr. SPRINGER. Is that one of the standing committees?

Mr. TAULBEE. Is not that the calendar to which it would have gone under the rule if the motion had not been made to postpone it to this day?

The SPEAKER. There is an express ruling on that subject.

Mr. SPRINGER. I shall regard the vote on postponing as determining the question. I think, however, the gentleman had better take the vote on the passage of the bill.

Mr. TAULBEE. I prefer to take it on my motion to recommit.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 83, noes 57.

Mr. SPRINGER. No quorum has voted.

The SPEAKER appointed as tellers Mr. TAULBEE and Mr. SPRINGER.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 88, noes 87.

So the bill was recommitted.

MICHAEL P. SMALL.

Mr. FINDLAY submitted the following privileged report.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 4616) for the relief of Michael P. Small, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That your committee of conference have been unable to agree, and would respectfully request a further conference.

JOHN V. L. FINDLAY,
EDWARD S. BRAGG,
JAMES LAIRD,
Conferees on the part of the House.

E. C. WALTHALL,
CHARLES F. MANDERSON,
F. M. COCKRELL,
Conferees on the part of the Senate.

The report was adopted.

Mr. FINDLAY moved to reconsider the vote by which the report was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman ask for a further conference?

Mr. FINDLAY. I do.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

The SPEAKER appointed Mr. FINDLAY, Mr. VIELE, and Mr. LAIRD as the conferees on the part of the House.

PHOTOLITHOGRAPHING FOR PATENT OFFICE OFFICIAL GAZETTE.

Mr. MARTIN, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Patents, reported as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Patents have had under consideration House resolution No. 100, and report the same back with the following amendment:

"Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, directed to inform the House of Representatives what sums have been annually paid for the past five years, and to whom, for photolithographing or otherwise producing plates for the Patent Office Official Gazette, and for photolithographing or otherwise producing copies of drawings of the weekly issues of patents, designs, trade marks, and pending applications, and for the reproduction of exhausted copies; if contracts have been made therefor or advertised to be let to the lowest bidder; also, whether bids have been invited from or permitted to parties for such work outside the city of Washington."

Add to the first clause, after "Washington," the following:

"Also whether any part of said work has been done outside of the city of Washington; and if any parties either in or outside of the city of Washington have ever undertaken or contracted to execute any part of said work, and failed to fulfill their undertakings; and if there ever have been such failing contractors, who they are and the cause of such failure."

Also:

"Resolved, That the Public Printer be requested to inform the House of the amounts annually expended for the past five years, and to whom paid, for photolithographing."

After the word "photolithographing," in line 3, add the following:

"Lithographing, engraving, and for all other processes for the production of maps and illustrations for the Government Printing Office, and whether the said photolithographing."

After the word "photolithographing," in line 4, add the following:

"Lithographing, engraving, or other processes, has been advertised to be let, or was let, under competition to the lowest bidder."

So that said resolution may read as follows:

"Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, directed to inform the House of Representatives what sums have been annually paid for the past five years, and to whom, for photolithographing or otherwise producing plates for the Patent Office Official Gazette, and for photolithographing or otherwise producing copies of drawings of the weekly issues of patents, designs, trade-marks, and pending applications, and for the reproduction of exhausted copies; if contracts have been made therefor, or advertised to be let to the lowest bidder; also whether bids have been invited from, or permitted to, parties for such work outside the city of Washington; also whether any part of said work has ever been done outside of the city of Washington, and if any parties either in or outside of the city of Washington have ever undertaken or contracted to execute any part of said work, and failed to fulfill their undertakings; and if there ever have been such failing contractors, who they are, and the cause of such failure; and whether there are good and sufficient reasons for confining the performance of said work to the city of Washington; and, if so, state what those reasons are.

"Also, resolved, That the Public Printer be requested to inform the House of the amounts annually expended for the past five years, and to whom paid for photolithographing, lithographing, engraving, and for all other processes for the production of maps and illustrations for the Government Printing Office, and whether the said photolithographing, lithographing, engraving, or other processes has been advertised to be let, or was let, under competition to the lowest bidder."

And the committee recommend the passage of the resolution as amended.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the substitute.

The substitute was agreed to; and the resolution as amended saw then adopted.

Mr. MARTIN moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. SPRINGER. I now renew the motion to go into Committee of the Whole.

Mr. HOLMAN. I trust the gentleman from Illinois will allow the diplomatic and consular bill to be taken up and concluded, so that we may go on with the legislative bill promptly.

Mr. DUNHAM and others. Regular order!

Mr. HOLMAN. I will submit that motion.

Mr. DUNHAM. Let us have the regular order. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. HOLMAN. I rise to a question of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to know whether it is not in order to move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the further consideration of general appropriation bills?

The SPEAKER. Not until the private business has been dispensed with or the pending motion rejected. The effect, the Chair will state, of refusing to agree to the present motion will bring the House to the consideration of bills as on other days.

Mr. HOLMAN. Then I trust the House will vote down the pending motion so that we may go on with the appropriation bills.

The question was taken on the motion of Mr. SPRINGER; and on a division there were—ayes 86, noes 22.

So the motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, Mr. HATCH in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole for the consideration of bills upon the Private Calendar.

Mr. SPRINGER. I ask unanimous consent that the first four bills on the Calendar be passed over, not to lose their places. This has been done once or twice before.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

JAMES J. JOHNSTON.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1773) for the relief of James J. Johnston.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the patents granted to James J. Johnston, of Columbiana, Ohio, for improvement in process for evaporating liquids and apparatus for evaporating liquids, reissue numbered 8373 and 8374, divisions A and B, on the 13th day of August, 1878, be, and the same are hereby, referred to the Commissioner of Patents, to hear and determine the propriety of extending the patents for the term of seven years from and after the passage of this act, if in his judgment the patents should be extended; and that the said reissued letters-patent, divisions A and B, shall have the same effect in law as though originally granted for the term of twenty-four years from the day of the passage of this act.

Mr. SPRINGER. I ask to have the report read.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to make a brief statement.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois has demanded the reading of the report.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think the report had better be read.

Mr. MARTIN. Before the reading of the report I wanted to make a brief statement for the information of the House, and with a view to causing the attention of the House to be directed more particularly to the report the committee make in this case.

The Committee on Patents have been influenced in recommending an extension of this patent by a consideration of the public welfare. They believed that by having this patent extended they will be doing something in the line of the advancement of the public interests rather than the advancement of any separate individual interest, and for that reason, and believing something of this kind is necessary in order to perfect and complete what appears to be a valuable and very important invention, the committee have seen proper to make the report, which I now ask to have read for the information of the House.

The report (by Mr. MARTIN) was read, as follows:

Mr. Johnston is the inventor of a process and apparatus for combining superheated steam and air with the vapors evolved from hydrocarbon oils, for the production of illuminating gas and the generation of heat to be used in the arts and for general purposes, for which a patent was granted him in 1865, which was subsequently surrendered and a reissue obtained, which was again, on account of imperfections, surrendered, and another reissue was granted on the 13th of August, 1878, in two divisions, A and B.

From the date of his discovery, Mr. Johnston states that he has been indefatigable in testing and perfecting his invention; that he has been entirely successful in accomplishing all that he claims; that he has expended thousands of dollars in money without having received any return, and that he has demonstrated the advantages and economy to the public of his invention.

The extension of this patent does not involve the manufacture of an article to be put up for sale, and upon which the purchaser is obliged to pay a royalty, but it is designed to produce light and heat for general and common use, at a greatly decreased cost to the consumer.

It appears, also, that in his efforts to test and protect his invention, Mr. Johnston has exhausted his means, brought embarrassment upon himself, and this without any lack of diligence on his part, but in the encounter of discouragements such as are common to men who have made discoveries that are valuable to the public. The committee, therefore, in view of the fact that if time is given the inventor can further demonstrate the practicability of economizing the cost of light and heat, and that he may therefore reasonably ask for an extension of his patent to enable him to recover his losses, and to enjoy the credit due to those whose efforts have resulted in a common benefit, favor early action on the bill as amended, and recommend its passage.

Amend the bill (H. R. 1773) as follows: Strike out all that follows after the word "extended," in the twelfth line of the bill, and add the following words, namely: "And the Commissioner of Patents is hereby authorized and empowered to grant an extension of the patents herein described for the period herein named."

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. Chairman, Mr. Johnston, as the report states, is the inventor of a process by means of which he thinks both artificial light and heat can be generated at a greatly reduced cost to the public than we now pay for them. He proposes to experiment further in the line of his discovery, if this extension can be granted to him. I do not propose, nor will I undertake, to explain the methods he pursues in what he claims to accomplish, even if I were able or prepared to do so. But the committee in the investigation of the subject thought it would involve the public in no expenditure of money if the patent was extended, and it would afford facilities for perfecting the discovery. Mr. Johnston proposes to furnish, as I have said, the means of evolving light and heat by a chemical process at a greatly reduced rate. He hopes to be benefited, of course, if the patent is extended, by receiving a reward from his discovery in the sale of rights to towns, cities, villages, and communities wherever they see proper to use it. It is not for the purpose of manufacturing something to put on the market for sale, and, in no point of view that I can conceive of, will the public be injured by this extension.

I hope, therefore, that the report of the committee will be agreed to, the amendments adopted, and the bill passed.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Will the gentleman permit a question? What length of time is it proposed to extend this patent? I failed to hear this part of the bill.

Mr. MARTIN. It is proposed to extend the patent for a period of seven years.

Mr. MCMILLIN. What length of time has he already had the benefit of the patent?

Mr. MARTIN. He has really had no benefit at all. It has been in process of development, or in an experimental stage, all the time. It is one of those scientific discoveries to which I suppose it is necessary to devote a great deal of time for the purpose of perfecting it.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I presume that a portion of the invention has been perfected, else how could he obtain a patent?

Mr. MARTIN. Certainly; the principle of it has been patented; but the mode of carrying it out has not been developed.

Mr. MCMILLIN. What equity, then, is there in his behalf that does not exist in favor of any other patentee who has a meritorious invention?

Mr. MARTIN. There may be none. But in this case there is this inducement, or reason, why it should be extended: that it is a matter of discovery; and though the principle has been patented, the mode of carrying into execution that principle is still a subject of investigation. It has never been worked out and developed, so as to make it a practical success, as far as public use is concerned. What he desires now, having expended large sums of money, having devoted a great length of time to the work, is a further opportunity of perfecting the mode of carrying into execution the principle, so as to derive benefit from the sale of rights, as I have before explained.

Mr. MCMILLIN. In other words, he wants another seven years' lease from the people of the exclusive use of this invention?

Mr. MARTIN. I do not regard it in that light.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I must confess I look with some reluctance on the extension of the life of patents. The patent laws of the United States are already very liberal.

Mr. MARTIN. I would remind the gentleman in this case the public have never had any benefit from the invention at all.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Possibly if the restrictions were taken off the public would get the benefit. If the public has not got the benefit in the time the law has protected the patentee, what assurance is there that it would get the benefit in the seven years of extension?

Mr. MARTIN. If the inventor has not been able to bring his invention to that degree of perfectness that the community can enjoy the benfit of it, it does not appear that doing away with his rights in the matter and turning over the bare principles to the public would be expediting the matter.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I desire to be heard on this question.

Mr. MARTIN. I yield the gentleman from Kansas five minutes, and retain the floor, reserving the balance of my time.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. It appears from the report that this inventor obtained a patent for his invention in 1865—and that was twenty-two years ago—which was subsequently surrendered and a reissue obtained. I am reading from the report:

This reissue on account of imperfections was again surrendered, and another reissue was granted in 1878.

It appears, then, that for twenty-two years this inventor has been protected by patents for the purpose of enabling him either to sell, and have the public benefited by the use of his invention, or else to obtain such control of the process that no other inventor could have any benefit from it. In other words, we have already, as I understand this report, given to him for twenty-two years the opportunity of perfecting this invention. The patent under which he now holds was issued on the 13th day of August, 1878. Therefore, under the existing very liberal patent law, it has yet some eight years of life; and eight years before the patent expires this patentee comes to Congress and asks not only that his eight years shall continue, but that seven years shall be added to that period. In other words, that his patent shall run for twenty-four years from 1878, as I understand it, he having been protected by patent since 1865.

I suppose these facts to be correct, and only make this statment upon my understanding of this report. Now if this be correct I certainly, for one, am opposed to the extending for seven years more, in addition to the eight years yet to run, a patent which this inventor has really had already for twenty-two years. I am opposed to this upon the general principle of opposition to the extension of any patent, holding, as I do, that the existing law protecting the patentee for seventeen years is not only ample for the inventor but is more than ample, and in the great majority of instances is a sad oppression of the people.

I do not mean that you shall not give patents for a reasonable time, five or seven years; but giving as we now do patents for seventeen years, I, for one, am opposed to the extension of any patent.

In this particular case the reason alleged is that this is not an article which will be put upon the market for sale; meaning thereby, I suppose, that it is not of the nature of a sewing-machine or a reaper or some other article which is manufactured and sold generally through the country. If I understand the case it is claimed that this is a process, far superior to any now in use, by which light and heat will be generated; and under the patent the course of the patentee will be to sell the right to use that process in towns and cities. Suppose, now, that this invention of his, on which he has already had a patent for twenty-two years, should have the value which he claims for it; suppose that he should be able to furnish an illuminating material better and cheaper than gas, as we now have it in cities, and, in addition, that he should be able to furnish heat in cities; and that he should have under this patent an article which all cities would want—who can estimate the value to him and by consequence the amount of money taken from the consumers in these cities by this patent? He has had this process for twenty-two years. He has yet seven or eight years in which to introduce it; and, as I understand it, eight years before the life of his last patent expires—I hope I will be pardoned for the expression—he absolutely has the cheek to come and ask for seven years more on the ground that it is not an article generally to be sold. What is the reason that it is not to be sold? What difference does it make whether you sell the right to use an article in a city to a company or whether you sell it to individuals?

I am frank to say from the reading which I have given to this report, from the facts which it sets forth, and from my present understanding of the case, I am absolutely and organically opposed to the passage of this bill.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. With pleasure.

Mr. BUCHANAN. The gentleman says that this man has had a patent for twenty-four years. Will he tell us how that is possible?

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. The report sets forth that he first obtained a patent in 1865 on this general process. That patent was subsequently surrendered and a reissue obtained. On account of imperfections that also was surrendered and another reissue granted on the 13th of August, 1878, which is his present patent.

Mr. BUCHANAN. But does not the gentleman know that no reissue extends the duration of a patent?

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Very well. Then this patent, having been issued in 1865, has already expired.

Mr. BUCHANAN. If it was issued in 1865 it certainly has. It extends for seventeen years and no more. I thought the gentleman was posted.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. The gentleman is sufficiently posted to know that you are coming in here with a bill "to extend a patent"—that is the exact phraseology—and if that patent was issued in 1865 it should have expired five years ago. Is not that correct?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I have nothing to do with this bill. I simply desire the House to have the correct information.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I am much obliged to the gentleman for his kindness to the House.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed on principle to the extension of patents. In one or two instances since I have been in Congress I have voted to extend a patent; but the rule with me has been to oppose all such extensions, and I do not see that this bill ought to be an exception to the general rule. I think it would be time enough toward the close of the term for which his patent runs for this claimant to come here and ask relief, even if he is entitled to relief. In a recent opinion on a patent case the supreme court of the District of Columbia uses this language:

> The invasion of every department of life by the daily increasing number of unnecessary patents is becoming a serious tax upon the public. The amusing complaint of Sidney Smith of the universality of taxes in England may well be applied here to this grievance. From the safety-pin of the new-born infant to the "casket" that receives the octogenarian, almost everything we use pays tribute to the patentee, and frequently for devices that might well suggest themselves to any quickwitted housewife or intelligent mechanic.
> A justice of this court, while recently announcing an opinion overruling an application for a proposed highly important improvement in the method of lengthening and shortening the cords for hanging pictures, read his notes from a patented paper pad, written with a patented pencil, while the ink, pens, penholder, and block of india-rubber before him all bore the mark of patentees. Several articles of his clothing were also patented down to the hem of his garments, which were bound by strips of gutta-percha duly patented. And these probably were but a small part of the articles in the room thus paying a duty to patentees.

Every gentleman here is aware of the fact that patents are too easily and too frequently granted in this country.

Mr. CUTCHEON. The gentleman has given us the text; will he please give us now the application to this case?

Mr. SPRINGER. The application is, that we have more patents granted now than we ought to have, and that when a man has obtained a patent under the law he ought not to come to Congress and ask to have it extended beyond the time which it has to run by law.

Mr. CUTCHEON. That is an argument against the patent law.

Mr. SPRINGER. It is an argument against going beyond the patent law. The law grants too many patents, and we should not be asked to supplement the patents which the law grants by turning Congress into another patent commissioner to grant additional ones.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I agree with that.

Mr. SPRINGER. Yet that is the rule. The cry is still for more. Gentlemen who obtain patents are not satisfied with what the law gives them, but they come in here and seek to have Congress resolve itself into a board of patent examiners to issue more patents.

And, Mr. Chairman, this brings me to a bill which was reported two or three weeks ago (H. R. 9630) conferring jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to finally determine the claim of Charles E. Creecy, who is the assignee of some patents; which case has been reported by the Committee of the Whole House and will be the first business before the House when this committee rises.

In view of the fact that the previous question is ordered upon the engrossment and third reading of that bill, I want to call the attention of the committee now, before we reach the bill, to the fact that it ought not to pass. I have examined a great many claims involving the right to equitable relief in cases of this kind, and I have never known one that is so devoid of equity as this case upon which we shall soon be called upon to act.

Mr. RANNEY. Can not you go over the rest of the Calendar now? [Laughter.]

Mr. SPRINGER. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. RANNEY] wants to know whether I can not go over the rest of the Calendar. I can not. I am not going to reach the telephone case——

Mr. RANNEY. It is the only chance you will have.

Mr. SPRINGER. Nor the Emery case. I am not going into those cases at this time. But, Mr. Chairman, as I am on the patent-right question, I want to refer to another abuse. This patentee demands that he shall be paid $65,000 royalty on the pavement laid around this Capitol, and the patent consists in the placing of a tar-paper between the concrete matter when it was laid down, so as to make it a pavement in blocks that could be taken up in parts without disturbing the whole surface.

Mr. LEHLBACH. The gentleman will allow me to ask whether the Committee on Patents did not report adversely in that case.

Mr. SPRINGER. I am very glad my friend has called attention to that point. I have in my hand a report from the Committee on Patents, made by the honorable gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. GILFILLAN], on a bill referred to it in this House at the last session. This report of the Committee on Patents was adverse. Afterward another bill was introduced and was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, who reported in favor of the bill, which went to the Committee of the Whole House, by which it has been reported to the House with a recommendation that it pass. The committee, in reporting favorably, certainly did not have an opportunity to examine the very able and conclusive report of the gentleman from Minnesota in opposition to this patent. In the first place, the supreme court of the District of Columbia held that the patent was void. In the second place, the present claimant acknowledges that he purchased the patent from the widow of the owner for the sum of $10. Upon this slender foundation, the patent having been purchased for $10, the claim is founded by which it is undertaken to mulct the United States in $65,000. If there ever was another case so devoid of law and equity and justice as this I have never heard of it; and I hope that when we reach that case in the House to-day we shall vote against ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time, and shall send it to the Committee on Patents, where it belongs.

Mr. SOWDEN. Let us dispose of the bill now before the House.

Mr. SPRINGER. As to the pending bill, I ask the Committee of the Whole to note well the language which I have read from the opinion of the supreme court of the District of Columbia. We already have more patents than we want; and I hope Congress is not going into the business of extending patents before their terms have expired.

I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. MORGAN].

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. Chairman, I do not propose to enter into any discussion of the bill now under consideration; but as the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] has called attention to a bill upon which we shall be required to vote when we get back into the House, I desire to supplement with a few words the remarks which he has made, as the bill when it presently comes before the House will not be open to discussion.

That claim underwent a full and thorough examination before the Committee on Patents, which reported unanimously against it. It is an application not very circuitously to appropriate $66,000 out of the Treasury of the United States to pay a claim against the Government which in my opinion has no foundation whatever in merit. I refer to the Creecy case. The claim is based upon the alleged infringement of what is known as the Schillinger patent, which, when considered by the Committee on Patents, underwent as thorough an examination at the hands of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. GILFILLAN] as perhaps any claim ever received; and upon this thorough examination, after careful consideration by the committee, the bill was reported adversely.

Now, if gentlemen desire to look into this matter, we are prepared to call their attention to the fact that in the Forty-eighth Congress this claim was referred to the Court of Claims for the purpose of ascertaining the facts of the case. That court not only reported the facts, but also did that for us which it was not asked to do; it gave us its conclusions of the law upon the facts as found. When the claim came before the Committeee on Patents we called for the papers, and they were furnished to us. We went behind the judgment of that court, and brought the evidence before us. It appeared to us that the Court of Claims must have been influenced by a recent decision of Mr. Justice Cox, of this District, in an entirely similar case, whose decree was brought before the Court of Claims; and upon the opinion of Judge Cox, as I have no doubt, that court proceeded to render its findings. But the case was appealed from the decision of Judge Cox and carried before the supreme court of the District of Columbia, a court having special jurisdiction to determine cases of this kind; and by that court the decree of Judge Cox was reversed, the court holding that there was no infringement of this patent.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Did not the court also hold that the Schillinger patent was void?

Mr. MORGAN. No, sir, it did not so hold.

Mr. SPRINGER. Oh, yes, it did.

Mr. BUCHANAN. That was my impression.

Mr. MORGAN. That is a mistake. I hold the opinion in my hand.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I refer to the action of the supreme court of the District of Columbia.

Mr. MORGAN. The supreme court of the District of Columbia did not hold that the Schillinger patent was void.

Mr. BUCHANAN. That is my reading of the decision.

Mr. MORGAN. I have the decision here.

Mr. SPRINGER. The court held that it was void as to the claim in this case.

Mr. MORGAN. They held that there was no infringement in that case; and that and this are identical, I think.

Mr. SPRINGER. That was it.

Mr. MORGAN. The suit was for an infringement; and the decision did not turn upon the validity of the Schillinger patent. But that is not all. The Schillinger patent has recently, and since this case was reported from the supreme court of the District of Columbia, gone before the Supreme Court of the United States and, in an opinion which I hold in my hand, that court, without passing judgment upon the validity of the patent, has held in a case identical with this that there was no infringement.

If the House should now pass the bill which has been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary, it will simply give the claimant a standing in court to which he is not entitled.

The Court of Claims having taken the evidence and rendered its conclusion as to the law of the case, which it had no right to render, this bill confers jurisdiction upon that court and requires it to enter final judgment for $66,239.80 on the finding heretofore made, allowing an appeal within sixty days to the United States, of course to be tried upon the loose record as it now stands in the Court of Claims.

But the point is this; the patent has not been infringed. The facts have all been before the Committee on Patents, and most careful examination has been given to it, and if gentlemen will vote for the bill and pass it, then they will ultimately give $66,000 out of the Treasury to a man who has no more right to it than you or I have, or any one else who is not entitled to it.

As to the question of infringement, every member who sits on this floor can determine for himself in less than twenty-five minutes by first reading the opinion of the Supreme Court of the United States and finding out what the Schillinger patent is, and then by stepping out and examining the pavement for himself.

Mr. GALLINGER. Allow me to interrupt the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. MORGAN. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. I would like to inquire of the gentleman whether he is discussing the bill now under consideration or a bill already considered and reported from the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar to the House.

Mr. MORGAN. I am discussing a bill which has been already considered and which has passed beyond the reach of argument in the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar. But, sir, every one here will be called upon to vote upon that bill just as soon as this is disposed of.

Mr. GALLINGER. I do not care to make the point of order; I will say the gentleman is now speaking in reference to a bill already reported to the House and which is on its third reading and engrossment under the operation of the previous question.

Mr. MORGAN. It is just because of the extraordinary situation in which we are placed in reference to that case that I am asking the indulgence of the House. The bill has been reported to the House and members will be called upon to vote upon it as soon as the committee rises, and by that bill in my judgment the Government is to be cheated out of $66,000, because the question was not debated at all when in committee and is not understood by the House.

Mr. GALLINGER. That may be unfortunate, but it occurs to me it is better to confine ourselves to the discussion of the bill under consideration.

Mr. MORGAN. The only excuse I have in presenting the matter to the House at this time is this, and it is also the excuse of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER], that it is the only means we now have of advising members as to the real character of the bill upon which the House will be called to vote in a few moments. That bill refers the matter to the Court of Claims, and does the unprecedented thing to confer on it jurisdiction not to try the case, but to enter judgment upon a finding heretofore made, with an appropriation to pay it, when the points of the case have already been adjudicated adversely to the claim involved in exactly similar cases in the supreme court of the District of Columbia, and by decision of the Supreme Court of the United States rendered very recently. When you come to vote on the bill pending in the House, if you vote to take out $66,000 from the Treasury and pay it to this claimant, you will be paying money to one who in my opinion has no right to it.

Mr. GILFILLAN. Mr. Chairman, it had not been my purpose to engage in debate on this bill, but inasmuch as the discussion of the pending bill has proceeded in such way as to involve another bill pending before the House upon which we will be soon called upon to vote, and inasmuch as I have some knowledge of the subject embraced in that bill, gained by virtue of my service in the Committee on Patents when the subject-matter was pending before that committee, I am constrained to say a few words in relation to the matter since it has been disposed of in Committee of the Whole and reported to the House, and which has been, as I have said, unexpectedly drawn into this discussion. I refer now to House bill 9930, which has been recommended by the Judiciary Committee of this House, and has passed to its third reading and engrossment.

I apprehend if the Committee of the Whole of this House had carefully examined this matter, or if the Judiciary Committee had had the time and opportunity to examine the matter in the bill which they reported, they would have hesitated, they would have refused to report favorably the bill which they did report, and which has passed, as I have already stated, to engrossment and third reading.

The matter involved in this bill is a claim against the Government amounting originally to $250,000 for an alleged infringement of a patent right. This claim was presented to the Forty-eighth Congress in the form of a petition, and was referred to the Committee on Patents. By that committee it was sent to the Court of Claims under the act of March 3, 1883, commonly called the "Bowman" act, to be found in 22 United States Statutes at Large, page 485, which authorizes either House of Congress or a committee of either House, when any matter or question is pending before the committee involving an examination and determination of questions of fact, to refer such matters to the Court of Claims for them to find and report their conclusions of fact to the committee or House by which the case was transmitted for its consideration. The first section of the act conferring jurisdiction on the Court of Claims is as follows:

SEC. 1. That whenever a claim or matter is pending before any committee of the Senate or House of Representatives, or before either House of Congress, which involves the investigation and determination of facts, the committee or House may cause the same, with the vouchers, proofs, papers, and documents pertaining thereto, to be transmitted to the Court of Claims of the United States, and the same shall there be proceeded in under such rules as the court may adopt. When the facts shall have been found, the court shall not enter judgment thereon, but shall report the same to the committee or House by which the case was transmitted for its consideration.

The Committee on Patents in their report on this matter say:

Prior to the passage of the "Bowman" act the jurisdiction of the Court of Claims extended only to cases of legal rights founded upon any law of Congress or upon any regulation of an Executive Department, or upon any contract, express or implied, and upon claims referred by either House of Congress.

Aside from the foregoing claims there were pending before Congress at every session claims which addressed themselves solely to the discretion and liberality of Congress, in which there was no legal right of recovery, and as to which that discretion and liberality could not constitutionally be conferred upon any other tribunal. To afford assistance and relief to Congress in the investigation of claims and demands of this class against the Government was one of the main objects of the "Bowman" act. When the facts should have been found the court was not however, authorized by the act to enter judgment, but simply to report the same to the committee or to the House by which the case was transmitted for its consideration. This case, then, is one, or at any rate it has been classed by the claimant and placed upon the footing of one, coming under the "Bowman" act, where no legal claim exists, but which addresses itself to the discretion and liberality of Congress.

We think it can be successfully maintained that the object of the "Bowman" act was simply to afford assistance to the committee or House before which any given case might be pending as to the facts in issue therein, and that upon the coming in of the report of the findings of the Court of Claims it is competent for Congress, and it is its duty, to examine and act upon such findings, and to adopt or reject the same, and to grant or withhold relief, as in its judgment and discretion may seem most conformable to the right and equity of the case. In other words, we are of opinion that such findings are analogous to, and are to be treated substantially as, a court of equity would treat the verdict of a jury upon any issue of fact referred to such jury for its findings; that they are to be considered as simply advisory and not conclusive. We can not approve of the doctrine that Congress by this act intended to oust itself of its jurisdiction to ultimately pass upon all questions of facts in this class of claims, or of its power to allow or reject any claim as in its judgment and discretion might seem proper, or that it could constitutionally do so by attempting to confer such jurisdiction upon any other tribunal.

It must be borne in mind that this act did not authorize or give jurisdiction to the Court of Claims to report or pass upon any question of law whatever. That question was not therefore submitted to them, and could not have been under the act. It was only matters or questions of fact that were so referred.

Now this matter, as I have said, was sent to the Court of Claims. Later, and in February, 1886, they reported their conclusions, not of fact, but partly of fact and partly of law, or mixed questions of both law and fact; and as one of their conclusions of law they held that this patent, known as the Schillinger patent, was valid. Another conclusion of law they reported was that it had been infringed by the Government in the laying of certain pavements around the Capitol in this city. But no facts justifying such conclusions or bearing upon such issues were found or reported.

Now, I submit that these conclusions of law were without authority and not within the jurisdiction of that court; and it seems to me they must have been inadvertently found and reported by the court. Perhaps the findings were drawn up by some attorney interested in the matter, and not sufficiently scrutinized by the court before being reported.

I have said that it was the province of that court, as shown by the law, to report the facts as to what had been done by the Government in the use of this patent; and whether these acts of the Government, as shown by the facts, did or did not constitute an infringement of the patent, was a question of law. The question of infringement was a mixed question involving both law and fact; first the fact must have been found which the Court of Claims was called upon to find and did not find, but they simply failed to find the question of fact and submitted conclusions of law.

Again, it is true that this patent and its validity has been sustained by several decisions of the district and circuit courts. It is true that the supreme court of the District of Columbia in the case of Schillinger vs. Cranford did not hold the patent to be void, neither did they hold it to be a valid patent; but they did undertake in the most clear and unmistakably distinct manner to intimate that if the question were a new one before them they would have been compelled to hold that it was void for want of novelty.

Now, then, out of deference to the courts which had previously held on this question, and because it was not necessary to a decision of the question before them, they refrained from so deciding; but I submit that the intimation of the supreme court of the District of Columbia, a court which has exclusive jurisdiction of appeals from the decision of the Commissioner of Patents, is entitled to great weight.

Mr. Chairman, the whole question of infringement was covered by the decision of the supreme court of this district—not in this Creecy case, but in the case of Schillinger vs. Cranford, which two cases are as much alike as two peas can be alike. The process used by the Government in laying this pavement is not reported by the Court of Claims; but, going behind their findings to an examination of the evidence, as shown by the record, we find that the process used by the Government in laying the pavement around the Capitol was precisely the same as that used by Cranford for which the infringement suit was brought in the case of Schillinger vs. Cranford. In the latter case the decision rendered since the hearing and report of the Court of Claims, and concurred in by three judges of the supreme court of this district, and evincing great research, learning, and ability, covers the whole question of infringement in the case before us, and upon which this claim is made. In the Cranford case the court held there was no infringement. The case was appealable, but no appeal has been taken. The decision was accepted as final, and ought to be decisive against the claimant here.

If the acts of Cranford constituting the alleged infringement of the patent was no infringement, neither was the action of the Government of the United States in this case an infringement. The case of Schillinger vs. Cranford is the only one we have directly in point as decisive of the question, and it seems to fully dispose of it.

Now the fact has been alluded to that claimant is only a nominal claimant; that he purchased the right for a mere song. It appears from the petition filed in this matter that the claimant is the owner. The Court of Claims find he is not the owner, though they find an infringement, and report that the Government had infringed upon the patent to the extent in this city of some 236,571 square feet; but they nevertheless are constrained to find that claimant had no title to the damages.

After that, as appears from the supplemental findings of the Court of Claims, the claimant set himself busily at work to procure administration of the estate of the person to whom the claim did belong, if to any one. After the decision and the finding of the Court of Claims had been made, in which they virtually found not him, Creecy, but the estate of one Charles A. Roberts, deceased, entitled to sixty odd thousand dollars damages, I say, the same claimant set himself busily to work to have the widow of the deceased, who was entitled, under the law, to be appointed administratrix, and procured an appraisement of the whole estate, including this claim, to be made under oath, in which this claim was so appraised at the sum of $100, and no more, and purchased the claim of the widow, who had chosen it as her own portion, as she as widow had the right to do under the statutes of Indiana to the extent of $500, purchased it when it constituted her all in this world, at the beggarly pittance of $10, and all this after this finding of the Court of Claims in behalf of the patent.

Now, we submit that this claim went to the legal representatives of the deceased, and not to the widow, if it was of the value now claimed for it, and that this purchase was a mere sham and pretense. If it was worth sixty-odd thousand dollars, the whole of these parties engaged in the appraisal and sale and purchase of it were engaged in a gigantic fraud, and they know it, and the transaction gave them no title. If it was not worth more than $10, it was not worth anything.

According to their pretensions now it was worth $66,239.80, and the Judiciary Committee have reported a bill allowing judgment to be entered for that amount.

Now let me mention another circumstance in relation to this bill, which has been considered by the Committee of the Whole. They have amended it by striking out this limitation of $66,239.80, and leave this man to recover $100,000 or $150,000—we know not how much—according to what the next findings may be. I submit, Mr. Chairman, that if this bill can be examined, if the facts can be inquired into and scrutinized in the light of the decision of the supreme court of this District concurred in by three eminent judges—I submit the proposition that there is not one in ten of the members of this House that will vote to support the bill, and I hope it will be rejected when the final vote is had thereon. The Committee on Patents unanimously rejected this claim in its final action thereon, and I trust that the final action of this House will be such as to fully justify the action of the Committee on Patents.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I do not know anything about this Creecy case except what I have heard here to-day, and do not propose to say anything about it. But I desire to avail myself of this opportunity, while we are discussing the pending bill, to say a few words upon the general question of the extension of patents. I intend to vote against this bill. I believe that this whole class of bills, for the extension of patents, is mischievous and wrong in principle.

In the first place, I do not think that Congress is the proper authority to either grant or extend a patent. I do not think that we have here the technical appliances for investigating the merits of such cases as these so as to act upon them intelligently, as they ought to be acted upon.

Mr. MARTIN. Will the gentleman yield to me for a moment?

Mr. CUTCHEON. Yes, sir.

Mr. MARTIN. If the gentleman from Michigan will permit me, I will call his attention to the fact that Congress does not propose to extend this patent, but the Commissioner of Patents is to be invested with power to extend it.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Then, Mr. Chairman, I have this to say in regard to that phase of the case, that in any case that would be directory only, and if the patent is to be extended in those cases in which the patents ought to be extended, then we ought to provide the machinery by which that extension can be regularly accomplished by law in the Patent Office. If our present law is infirm, if it is not adequate to the cases like the present one, constantly arising, then let us have a law that shall be broad enough, comprehensive enough, so that any patentee, when his patent expires, may go to a proper tribunal, to be known as a court of patent appeals, or something of that kind, lay the equities of his case before that court, have them adjudicated and passed upon, and if the court finds him entitled to an extension of his patent, then let them have authority under the law to grant the extension. But do not let Congress be deluged session after session with this matter of applications for the extension of patents. That is my view of the general question of the extension of patents.

Mr. LONG. The gentleman knows how easy it is to get a general law passed on any subject.

Mr. CUTCHEON. There is another view of this case, Mr. Chairman, to which I desire to allude in a few words. I do not believe that our present patent system ought to be enlarged or extended. I believe, upon the contrary, that if it is to be in any way modified by legislation, it should be curtailed. The patent law of the United States creates and maintains the only actual, legal monopoly that we have in this country.

There is not a great monopoly to-day existing in this country that is not based upon the patent law. If you take the Western Union Telegraph Company, they maintain their grasp upon the telegraphic system of this country by their ownership of every valuable patent that affects the subject of telegraphy; and every new invention affecting the telegraph that great monopoly at once seizes upon, purchases it, and drives its competitors out of the field.

Then there is the great sewing-machine monopoly, which has burdened this country for the last quarter of a century and more.

I recognize the value of these inventions and the right of property of the inventor in his invention, but I do not believe the system ought to be extended beyond its present scope.

I might refer to other great monopolies. We talk about the railroad monopoly; and yet, to a very great extent, the railroad monopoly is maintained by virtue of the patent laws. There is hardly a thing which enters into the construction of a railroad from the locomotive to the brakes and the wheels, the seats and the cars and the process by which the rail is manufactured—hardly a single thing that enters into the railroad system that is not protected by the patent law.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman permit me a question?

Mr. CUTCHEON. Yes, sir.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. How does that create a monopoly?

Mr. CUTCHEON. Because it gives the greater railroad companies facilities which enable them to break down the smaller roads. The stronger and richer roads, by means of their wealth, monopolize these patents.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. But the question is, does it prevent the building of other roads?

Mr. CUTCHEON. No; but it prevents free competition. I simply allude to that as one feature of the general case. But the point here is, whether we shall establish a precedent. We have done the like, of course, in other cases; but the question is, whether we shall proceed further in that direction, and shall extend a patent simply because the patentee has failed to realize the profit that he hoped to realize during the regular term of the patent.

I do not believe that principle is a sound one; I do not believe that it is a safe one; I do not believe it is a practice that ought to be carried farther. On the contrary, I believe that if we legislate in either direction we should curtail rather than extend the present patent system. For my own part I shall content myself with voting against the pending bill for these general and public reasons, and not for any reason pertaining to that particular bill.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to occupy but a few moments, and I shall have nothing to say as to the general policy of our patent laws. Undoubtedly, under the operation of that policy American ingenuity has been largely developed, and it is equally beyond question that that policy, wise and beneficent as it was intended to be, has been in some respects grossly abused.

As the Creecy case has been referred to here, I desire to call attention to one or two facts in connection with that case.

First, let me express the hope that whatever discussion may have been had here upon the Creecy case will in no wise prove detrimental to the case that is really before the committee—the Johnston case. I suppose the discussion is to be upon the Creecy case and the vote upon the Johnston case. [Laughter.] Let us keep the distinction clearly in mind.

There is a certain concrete pavement laid down around this Capitol. That pavement was laid under a written contract between the Government and the contractor, and he was paid the price which the Government had agreed to pay for the work, every penny of it. After that pavement has been laid down a gentleman by the name of Creecy comes in and presents a claim against the Government by virtue of an assignment of a patent which it is alleged this pavement infringes. That patent has been before different district courts of the United States, and in some instances it has been declared to be a valid patent.

Not long ago it was before the supreme court of the District of Columbia, and Judge Hagner, of that court, delivered an opinion in which he holds, though not in express terms, that the patent is invalid; first, originally for want of novelty; and, second, as a reissue, because reissued on broader claims than the original. For my own part, I do not hesitate to say that, in my judgment, the patent as originally issued was void for want of novelty, and that as reissued it is void because it includes matter not included in the original patent. The claimant has appealed to different committees of this House. He appealed to the Committee on Patents, and that committee brought in a report unanimously against his claim. He appealed to the Judiciary Committee, and the Judiciary Committee reported the bill which is now before the House awaiting action. Since the report of the Judiciary Committee was made, or about the time it was made, the question came before the Supreme Court of the United States—not this particular case, but a case involving a pavement laid in the same manner as this one around the Capitol—and the Supreme Court of the United States held in that case that a pavement laid in that manner was no infringement of the Creecy patent.

Mr. PLUMB. The supreme court of the District of Columbia, not the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Oh, I am aware of what I am saying, and I reaffirm that in December last the Supreme Court of the United States adjudged (as the supreme court of the District of Columbia had done previously) that a pavement laid as the pavement about the Capitol is laid was no infringement of the Creecy patent. Now, that is the bill that is to be voted upon here, a bill which, if it passes this House, will take $60,000 out of the Treasury of the United States for the benefit of a man who was not the patentee, who bought the right for a song, and who, so far as this claim is concerned, has never done a dollars' worth of work for the Government.

Mr. SPRINGER. Now, Mr. Chairman, I ask a vote upon the Johnston case.

Mr. MARTIN. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PLUMB].

Mr. PLUMB. Mr. Chairman, I desire to add but a single statement to what has been said by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. BUCHANAN] in reference to the Creecy case, and that is that seven years had transpired after the pavement was laid before the purchase was made by the gentleman who comes here and makes this claim. Seven years, I say, had elapsed before there was an attempt on the part of Mr. Creecy to obtain this patent from the widow of Roberts. It was not until it had become clear to him that he might possibly get Congress to allow him these damages that he made the purchase of this patent, for which he paid $10. As the matter has been elaborately discussed here, I do not desire to go into the case further than to say that as a member of the Committee on Patents I became perfectly satisfied that no bolder steal was ever presented to any Congress than that which is proposed by this Creecy bill.

I wish now to say a word or two with reference to the question which is immediately before us, the question of extending the Johnston patent. It seems to me it would be unwise on our part to follow the suggestion which has been repeatedly made on this floor, that under no circumstances should a patent be extended. I have heard gentlemen say here that they are opposed on principle to extending any patent. Now I would like to know what kind of a principle it is which should lead any one to declare that a patent should not under any circumstances be extended. I claim that we ought to examine every question coming before us in view of its peculiar and particular merits; and it is impossible for us to say that there is any principle which should keep us from extending any patent.

What are the circumstances of this particular patent? This man Johnston has been for a long time endeavoring to perfect an invention by which light and heat shall be produced at a cheaper rate than heretofore. There is not a man or woman in the United States who is not interested in having Mr. Johnston or any other inventor succeed in such an attempt. Now this man has proceeded with his investigations, but up to this moment, although he has made so much progress that it has become apparent he will succeed in achieving a valuable invention, yet he has never reaped one dollar of advantage from his investigations. Why may not the Congress of the United States sit in judgment upon this case; and if we determine that this man ought to be encouraged to go forward and perfect his invention, which promises to be so valuable to the whole people, why should we not grant the extension asked?

I know nothing particular about this individual, but from what I know of the case I submit that if we desire to encourage the making of useful inventions, if we deem it important to secure to the people the benefit of patents under any circumstances, we may with great propriety in this case do what is asked, and what it seems to me the special circumstances of this case justify.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. Chairman, if there be no disposition on the part of other gentlemen to discuss this subject further, I wish to submit a few remarks, after which I shall move to lay the bill aside, to be reported favorably to the House. I think that the bringing of this Creecy patent into the discussion has certainly been most unfortunate for the interests of Mr. Johnston, for whose benefit it is proposed to pass the pending bill. Like other gentlemen who have spoken, I feel great opposition to the passage of the Creecy bill, because, after a thorough and exhaustive examination into the merits of that bill, the Committee on Patents resolved—unanimously, if I mistake not—upon an adverse report. But what has that bill to do with the measure now under consideration? That bill does not come before this House with the approval of the Committee on Patents. On the contrary, it came here with their disapproval. If any man can show me that there is any connection between the two cases, or that the disapproval of the Creecy bill should be any reason against the passage of the Johnston bill, I am willing to concede the force of the argument; but such is not the case.

Nor am I willing to admit that the argument made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] in order to persuade the House to vote against this bill is entitled to any weight. The gentleman from Illinois spoke of a man getting up to read from a paper pad which was patented, written upon with a pencil which was patented, and, in fact, everything connected with it patented. What does that argue? It argues that the gentleman has a better pad to write upon, a better pencil to write with, that everything connected with it is better than it otherwise would be, because inventive genius had been turned in that direction causing better work to be done than could have been done but for the inducements held out to inventors under our patent system. The gentleman from Illinois, in order to make light of patents, alluded to the safety-pin for infants and the burial case for octogenarians. Why, sir, if the safety-pin had been invented some fifty years ago, who knows how much of anxiety and unrest the mother of our distinguished friend would have been saved? [Laughter.] And who can say that if the burial case had not been invented, some coming "Waxem" would ever return to this House saturated with grief from carrying the gentleman from Illinois to his last resting-place.

Everything said by my friend from Illinois on this subject goes to show that there was wisdom in the provision of the Constitution of the United States giving Congress power—

To promote the progress of science and useful arts by securing for limited times to authors and inventors the exclusive right to their respective writings and discoveries.

That provision is as old as our Government; it is part of the organic law of this country; and the propriety, the wisdom of our patent laws is daily exemplified in the wonderful achievements which our citizens have made in all the useful arts and sciences.

I now come to consider more immediately the pending bill, proposing to extend the patent of Mr. Johnston. My friend from Kansas [Mr. ANDERSON] was mistaken in supposing that by the reissue of the patent in 1878 the term of the patent was extended.

This proposition is merely to give this inventor twenty-four years in all—the seventeen years allowed by statute, and seven years additional. As already stated, it was made to appear to the Committee on Patents that Mr. Johnston had never derived any benefit from his patent. He has spent all his means; he has expended years upon years of hard, diligent labor in order to perfect this invention. All that he asks is that, after these many years of hard work, his patent may be so extended as to enable him to derive some benefit from it. That is the sole and simple proposition. If hardships had grown out of the operation of the patent laws in the case of sewing-machines and other patented articles, I do not think that should justify a gentleman of the ability of my friend from Michigan [Mr. CUTCHEON] in declaring himself opposed to the extension of patents. Nor is there anything in the argument he made that we ought not to extend any patent, but that there should be a court to which all questions of this kind should be remitted. There is no such court, and that is the reason this bill is before us. There is in the bill no proposition that Congress should extend the patent, but merely that the question be referred to the Commissioner of Patents, who shall be authorized and empowered to extend it.

Such are the provisions of the bill. But, Mr. Chairman, I come now to another feature, which I referred to in my opening remarks, and which I wish to dwell upon with peculiar earnestness. It is a fact that this man is not making a sewing-machine which he is selling at a very good price; it is a fact that he is not making a lightning-rod, or a wire fence which he is selling at a large profit; but it is a fact that he is a man who has made a great invention by which he evolves light and heat by chemical process, and by means of such invention he says he will be able to furnish light and heat to the people at greatly reduced rates. As the invention has not been perfected, or put upon the market, he has not derived a dollar of benefit from it. He now feels he is in a condition to present to us something perfect in the way of a machine for the purpose of evolving heat and light, and to make a legitimate profit out of his invention. All we ask is that he may have, not seventeen years in which to do it, but that he shall have seven additional years, in which he may derive something for the thousands of dollars he has spent and the weary years he has devoted to the perfecting of his patent.

I will say one other thing, and then I will consume no more of the time of the House. It is true that where a man has patented an article and put it upon the market it may not be well to extend the duration of his patent. He ought to be content with the profit to be derived from it in the seventeen years granted to him. If he can not perfect it in seventeen years and derive sufficient profit; if he has not been able to present it to the country in a sufficiently perfect form in that time, then I am not in favor of encouraging him. But, sir, when a great invention like this, of such universal benefit throughout the world, a matter of scientific research, is about to be lost because he who has spent his time and exhausted his means upon it is unable to go further, I say then there is presented a case which appeals with great earnestness to every reflecting man upon this floor.

Mr. MCKENNA. I wish to ask the gentleman whether this invention will enable us to have supplied in railway cars throughout the United States such light and heat as will relieve us hereafter from the present danger to human life?

Mr. MARTIN. The intention is that it may be used wherever gas and electricity are now used for such purposes.

Mr. MCKENNA. But that does not answer my question.

Mr. MARTIN. The question has never been propounded to me before, and I do not know that I can answer except generally from the statements made before the committee. But it is to be used for all purposes of lighting and heating.

Mr. MCKENNA. If that question could be answered in the affirmative, that this invention would do away with the danger to human life arising from the present mode of heating railway cars, there would be little objection to granting this application.

Mr. MARTIN. I have presented to the House the case as I understand it.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Will the gentleman yield to me for five minutes?

Mr. MARTIN. I will when I have concluded.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I have presented, in my feeble way, the considerations which have influenced me (and the considerations which have influenced the Committee on Patents), to concur in this unanimous report. I will say in vindication of the Committee on Patents that, notwithstanding the great number of bills coming before them; notwithstanding the urgent appeals to report bills for patent extensions, I believe but three have been reported to the House, two of which have already been passed; one in reference to the teaching of chemistry in kindergarten style, and the other for the extension of a patent to a blind man. Now we have this bill, which is the third, for the extension of a patent to enable a man to derive some benefit from the great work of scientific research and the thousands of dollars and the years of weary toil he has spent in discovering his invention.

Mr. CUTCHEON. If I understand the gentleman from Alabama this person took out his patent before he had perfected his invention.

Mr. MARTIN. Yes, sir. When he took out his patent it was not in a perfected condition.

Mr. CUTCHEON. He took it out too soon and has derived no benefit from it.

Mr. MARTIN. No benefit whatever.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I have done my duty. I have presented the reasons which influenced the committee. I have also presented my own reflections on the subject. I am willing now to submit the matter to a vote of the House.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. The gentleman has yielded to me five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. How much time does the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN. Five minutes, and I wish to say just so soon as remarks are completed I will move to lay the bill aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I wish to say in regard to the correction which my friend from Alabama has made of my inference that this patent, having been issued in 1865 and reissued in 1878, ran for seventeen years from the latter date, that the committee of course know more of the details of the patent law than I do.

My impression was based upon this language used in the bill now pending before the House, as follows:

That this case be referred to the Commissioner of Patents to hear and determine the propriety of extending the patents for a term of seven years from and after the passage of this act, if in his judgment the patents should be extended.

This patent was originally issued in 1865, and under the law would have expired in 1882. If it did, then how can this bill "extend" a dead patent? In that event for the last five years there has been no patent, unless, and I ask attention to this point, the patent issued in 1878 does hold good. I asked a gentleman, who is an expert on the patent law, as to that fact, and he replied that so far as he was advised he was unable to say that the courts would not hold the patent issued in 1878 to be still in force. So, Mr. Chairman, one of two things is true: either the original patent, being issued in 1865, must have expired in 1882, and for five years there has been no patent, or else the patent subsequently issued in 1878 is good to-day, and during the past five years there has been a patent. Then the bill proposes that seven years shall be granted from to-day. That would give to this gentleman a patent for twenty-nine years.

Now, I know nothing of the particular case before us. I have no personal feeling in regard to any patent bill; not a bit. My opposition is based upon the broad ground that seventeen years are enough, and I agree with my friend from Michigan [Mr. CUTCHEON] that if the present patent law is imperfect we should amend it. I further agree with him that the imperfection of the present law is that it extends the lifetime of a patent too far. I would rather curtail it. But that has nothing particularly to do with the present case. Here the proposition is whether, in the one case, a patent having expired five years ago, or else in the other a patent which still has eight years to run, shall be extended for seven years longer; and on principle I am opposed to it.

Mr. MARTIN. I move now that the amendment reported from the committee be agreed to.

The amendment was again read.

The amendment was adopted.

The question recurred on laying the bill aside to be reported to the House favorably.

The question was taken; the committee divided, and there were—ayes 52, noes 34.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I do not think there has been a quorum, and I would like to have tellers on this motion.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas, and Mr. MARTIN were appointed tellers.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 76, noes 36.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. If the gentleman from Alabama will allow this to go over, retaining its place on the Calendar until next Friday, I will not insist upon the point.

Mr. MARTIN. I would prefer to dispose of it now.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I have no desire to detain the House from the consideration of other business; and if the gentleman will agree to unite with me in a request for the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill in the House I will withdraw the point.

Mr. MARTIN. I will do so.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Then I withdraw the point of no quorum.

So (no further count being demanded) the bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MCKENNA. I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. MCMILLIN having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. HATCH reported that the Committee of the Whole House having had under consideration the bill H. R. 1773, had instructed him to report the same to the House with an amendment and with the recommendation that the bill pass as amended.

ALBERT H. EMERY.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Before proceeding to the consideration of the bill just reported from the committee the bills presented by the committee on a preceding day will be disposed of as the unfinished business. The Clerk will report the first bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 929) for the relief of Albert H. Emery, reported from the Committee of the Whole with amendments.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The yeas and nays have been ordered on the demand for the previous question on this bill.

Mr. SPRINGER. At the last meeting of the committee, when the committee rose, I asked unanimous consent that the case known as the Creecy case, which was ahead of this on the Calendar, and which was passed over, not to lose its place, should be taken up and considered to-day. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It does not lose its place, but will be reached immediately after the pending bill is disposed of.

The question is on the demand for the previous question, on which the yeas and nays are ordered.

Mr. BURROWS. I ask unanimous consent that the order to take the yeas and nays on ordering the previous question be vacated, and that the yeas and nays be taken on the passage of the bill.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendments reported from the Committee of the Whole.

The amendments were read.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, and was read the third time; the question being on the passage of the bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. On that the yeas and nays have been ordered by unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state that the gentleman from Michigan asked unanimous consent to dispense with the call of the yeas and nays on ordering the previous question, with the understanding that there be a yea-and-nay vote on the passage of the bill.

Mr. BURROWS. That was my intention.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. And the Chair supposes that after the statement from the gentleman from Michigan, and the consent given, it would be but fair that the yeas and nays should be considered as ordered.

Mr. BURROWS. That was what I intended.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Mr. Speaker, I would ask that so much of the amendment as states the amount carried by the bill be reported.

The Clerk read as follows:

It is proposed to strike out the words "two hundred thousand dollars," in the bill, and insert the words "sixty-three thousand one hundred and sixty-one dollars and sixty-two cents."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the passage of the bill as amended, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 156, nays 59, not voting 103; as follows:

On this vote:

Mr. BURNES with Mr. MCCOMAS.

The result of the vote was then announced as above stated.

Mr. MCKENNA moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. STEELE. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. TAULBEE. Is it the purpose of the gentleman from Indiana to cut off the evening session?

Mr. STEELE. Yes, sir.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MCMILLIN). The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I wish to inquire whether a motion to take a recess is of higher privilege than a motion to adjourn.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. A motion to adjourn takes precedence.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I should otherwise have made the motion for a recess.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If the motion to adjourn is voted down then a motion to take a recess would be in order.

The question being taken on the motion to adjourn, it was not agreed to—ayes 14, noes 105.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next bill.

CHARLES E. CREECY.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 9930) conferring jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims and Supreme Court of the United States to finally determine the case of Charles E. Creecy, assignee in Congressional case No. 71, reported to the House of Representatives by said Court of Claims under the provisions of the act of Congress approved March 3, 1883.

Mr. SPRINGER. I am requested by gentlemen interested in this bill to have it passed over until next week not to lose its place on the Calendar.

Mr. MORGAN. I object. Let us dispose of it now.

Mr. PARKER. I wish to say with reference to this bill that it is in charge, in the House, of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. COLLINS] who is not now here. I am myself opposed to the bill, but I think it would be unjust to the bill to consider it when a gentleman who has made a special study of its subject is not present. I ask that the consideration of the bill be postponed. I think that courtesy should be extended to the gentleman from Massachusetts, who is now absent. If the House sees fit to do otherwise it is their business, not mine.

Mr. SPRINGER. I think the request for postponement is reasonable and ought to be granted, with the understanding that the order for the previous question shall be rescinded.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The previous question having been ordered on the engrossment and third reading, the request that the bill be passed over can only be granted by unanimous consent; and the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. MORGAN] objects.

Several members called for the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The question being taken, it was decided in the negative.

Mr. SPRINGER. I move to strike out the enacting clause of the bill.

The motion to strike out the enacting clause was agreed to.

So the bill was rejected.

FREDERICK W. RUGGLES.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 187) for the relief of Frederick W. Ruggles, of Westport, Nova Scotia.

The SPEAKER. This bill is reported from the Committee of the Whole House with the recommendation that it be indefinitely postponed. The question is on agreeing to the report of the committee.

The report of the Committee of the Whole House was agreed to.

Mr. SPRINGER moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

EDWARD BYRNE.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 1207) for the relief of Edward Byrne; amended.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I ask to have the amendments reported.

The SPEAKER. The amendments have been agreed to.

Mr. MCMILLIN. If there be no objection I would like to have the bill reported.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has the right to have the bill reported before he votes on it.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Then let it be read.

The bill as amended was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized to nominate and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, appoint Edward Byrne, late a captain in the Tenth Regiment of Cavalry, a first lieutenant of said Tenth Cavalry, in the Army of the United States, to rank as such from the 1st day of July, 1875; and he shall be assigned to the first vacancy occurring in the grade of first lieutenant in said Tenth Cavalry: Provided, That he shall receive no pay or allowances for the period he was out of the service.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

Mr. BRAGG. What is the title of the bill?

The title of the bill was again read.

Mr. BRAGG. I object to the passage of that bill.

Mr. STEELE. The bill had an adverse recommendation.

The SPEAKER. There have been amendments to it.

Mr. STEELE. I move to lay the bill on the table.

Mr. BRAGG. That bill was objected to and a quorum was called, and the House adjourned upon it.

Mr. STEELE. That was on the night assigned to the business of the Committee on Military Affairs.

The SPEAKER. The bill appears to have been referred in the first instance to the Committee on Military Affairs, and to have been reported back from that committee with amendments and referred to the Committee of the Whole House. The Committee of the Whole House was afterwards discharged from the further consideration of the bill. The Chair will cause the record to be examined.

Mr. BRAGG. The bill came up just before we adjourned on the night assigned to the Military Committee for the transaction of its business, a quorum was called, and the House adjourned upon the bill.

The SPEAKER. Still that was an evening for the consideration of bills reported by the Committee on Military Affairs and this bill was considered. The Committee of the Whole House was discharged from the further consideration of it, and it was being considered by the House. Is not that the fact?

Mr. BRAGG. I think not, sir.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read from the record the proceedings which took place.

The Clerk read as follows:

EDWARD BYRNE.

Mr. LAIRD. I call up for present consideration the bill (H. R. 1207) for the relief of Edward Byrne.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If there be no objection the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar will be discharged from the further consideration of this bill, and it will be considered in the House.

There was no objection.

The bill was read.

Mr. BRAGG. I shall object to the passage of this bill.

Mr. LAIRD. I hope the gentleman will not insist on that objection. This is certainly as just a measure as any of this nature which the House has considered.

Mr. BRAGG. I do not want to discuss the merits of the bill.

The amendments reported by the committee were agreed to.

The question being on ordering the bill as amended to be engrossed and read a third time,

Mr. BRAGG called for a division.

The question being taken, there were—ayes 4, noes 3.

Mr. BRAGG. No quorum.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. No quorum having voted, the Chair will appoint tellers.

Mr. BRAGG. I move that the House now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 10 o'clock and 35 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

Mr. BRAGG. I endeavored the best I could to object to that bill from the time it was called up until we got through.

The SPEAKER. The record shows that the Committee of the Whole was discharged from the further consideration of the bill, and that it was brought into the House and considered so far as to agree to amendments to it; which leaves it unfinished business in the class of business to which it belongs. The question is upon ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time.

Mr. STEELE. Is it in order to move now to recommit the bill?

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. STEELE. Then I make that motion.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. STEELE] moves to recommit the bill to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar.

The question being taken,

The SPEAKER declared that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I call for a division.

The House divided; and 81 votes were reported in the affirmative.

Mr. MCMILLIN (before the completion of the count). Mr. Speaker, at the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BRAGG] I withdraw the demand for a division.

The motion of Mr. STEELE was agreed to, and the bill was recommitted.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

A message, in writing, from the President of the United States was communicated to the House by Mr. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries.

The Speaker laid the message before the House, and it was read, as follows:

To the House of Representatives:

I herewith return without my approval House bill 10457, entitled "An act for the relief of dependent parents and honorably discharged soldiers and sailors who are now disabled and dependent upon their own labor for support."

This is the first general bill that has been sanctioned by the Congress since the close of the late civil war, permitting a pension to the soldiers and sailors who served in that war upon the ground of service and present disability alone, and in the entire absence of any injuries received by the casualties or incidents of such service.

While by almost constant legislation since the close of this war there has been compensation awarded for every possible injury received as a result of military service in the Union Army, and while a great number of laws passed for that purpose have been administered with great liberality, and have been supplemented by numerous private acts to reach special cases, there has not, until now, been an avowed departure from the principle thus far adhered to respecting Union soldiers, that the bounty of the Government in the way of pensions is generously bestowed when granted to those who in this military service, and in the line of military duty, have, to a greater or less extent, been disabled.

But it is a mistake to suppose that service pensions, such as are permitted by the second section of the bill under consideration, are new to our legislation. In 1818, thirty-five years after the close of the Revolutionary war, they were granted to the soldiers engaged in that struggle, conditional upon service until the end of the war, or for a term not less than nine months, and requiring every beneficiary under the act to be one "who is, or hereafter by reason of his reduced circumstances in life shall be, in need of assistance from his country for support." Another law of a like character was passed in 1823, requiring service until the close of the Revolutionary war; and still another, passed in 1832, provided for those persons not included in the previous statute, but who served two years at some time during the war, and giving a proportionate sum to those who had served not less than six months.

A service pension law was passed for the benefit of the soldiers of 1812 in the year 1871—fifty-six years after the close of that war—which required only sixty days' service; and another was passed in 1878—sixty-three years after the war—requiring only fourteen days' service.

The service pension bill passed at this session of Congress, thirty-nine years after the close of the Mexican war, for the benefit of the soldiers of that war, requires either some degree of disability or dependency, or that the claimant under its provisions should be sixty-two years of age; and in either case that he should have served sixty days or been actually engaged in a battle.

It will be seen that the bill of 1818, and the Mexican pension bill being thus passed nearer the close of the wars in which its beneficiaries were engaged than the others—one thirty-five years and the other thirty-nine years after the termination of such wars—embraced persons who were quite advanced in age, assumed to be comparatively few in number, and whose circumstances, dependence, and disabilities were clearly defined and could be quite easily fixed.

The other laws referred to, appear to have been passed at a time so remote from the military service of the persons which they embraced, that their extreme age alone was deemed to supply a presumption of dependency and need.

The number of enlistments in the Revolutionary war is stated to be 309,791, and in the war of 1812, 576,622; but it is estimated that on account of repeated re-enlistments the number of individuals engaged in these wars did not exceed one-half of the number represented by these figures. In the war with Mexico the number of enlistments is reported to be 112,230, which represents a greater proportion of individuals engaged than the reported enlistments in the two previous wars.

The number of pensions granted under all laws to soldiers of the Revolution is given at 62,059; to soldiers of the war of 1812 and their widows, 60,178; and to soldiers of the Mexican war and their widows up to June 30, 1885, 7,619. The latter pensions were granted to the soldiers of a war involving much hardship, for disabilities incurred as a result of such service; and it was not till within the last month that the few remaining survivors were awarded a service pension.

The war of the rebellion terminated nearly twenty-two years ago; the number of men furnished for its prosecution is stated to be 2,772,408. No corresponding number of statutes have ever been passed to cover every kind of injury or disability incurred in the military service of any war. Under these statutes 561,576 pensions have been granted from the year 1861 to June 30, 1886, and more than twenty-six hundred pensioners have been added to the rolls by private acts passed to meet cases, many of them of questionable merit, which the general laws did not cover.

On the 1st day of July, 1886, 365,763 pensioners of all classes were upon the pension-rolls, of whom 305,605 were survivors of the war of the rebellion, and their widows and dependents. For the year ending June 30, 1887, $75,000,000 have been appropriated for the payment of pensions, and the amount expended for that purpose from 1861 to July 1, 1886, is $808,624,811.51.

While annually paying out such a vast sum for pensions already granted, it is now proposed, by the bill under consideratien, to award a service pension to the soldiers of all wars in which the United States has been engaged, including of course the war of the rebellion, and to pay those entitled to the benefits of the act the sum of $12 per month.

So far as it relates to the soldiers of the late civil war, the bounty it affords them is given thirteen years earlier than it has been furnished to the soldiers of any other war, and before a large majority of its beneficiaries have advanced in age beyond the strength and vigor of the prime of life.

It exacts only a military or naval service of three months, without any requirement of actual engagement with an enemy in battle, and without a subjection to any of the actual dangers of war.

The pension it awards is allowed to enlisted men who have not suffered the least injury, disability, loss, or damage of any kind, incurred in or in any degree referable to their military service, including those who never reached the front at all and those discharged from rendezvous at the close of the war, if discharged three months after enlistment. Under the last call of the President for troops, in December, 1864, 11,303 men were furnished who were thus discharged.

The section allowing this pension does, however, require, beside a service of three months and an honorable discharge, that those seeking the benefit of the act shall be such as "are now or may hereafter be suffering from mental or physical disability not the result of their own vicious habits or gross carelessness, which incapacitates them for the performance of labor in such a degree as to render them unable to earn a support, and who are dependent upon their daily labor for support."

It provides further that such persons shall, upon making proof of the fact, "be placed on the list of invalid pensioners of the United States, and be entitled to receive for such total inability to procure their subsistence by daily labor, $12 per month; and such pension shall commence from the date of the filing of the application in the Pension Office, upon proof that the disability then existed, and continue during the existence of the same in the degree herein provided: Provided, That persons who are now receiving pensions under existing laws, or whose claims are pending in the Pension Office, may, by application to the Commissioner of Pensions, in such form as he may prescribe, receive the benefit of this act."

It is manifestly of the utmost importance that statutes which, like pension laws, should be liberally administered as measures of benevolence in behalf of worthy beneficiaries, should admit of no uncertainty as to their general objects and consequences.

Upon a careful consideration of the language of the section of this bill above given, it seems to me to be so uncertain and liable to such conflicting constructions, and to be subject to such unjust and mischievous application, as to alone furnish sufficient ground for disapproving the proposed legislation.

Persons seeking to obtain the pension provided by this section must be now or hereafter—

1. "Suffering from mental or physical disability."
2. Such disability must not be "the result of their own vicious habits or gross carelessness."
3. Such disability must be such as "incapacitates them for the performance of labor in such a degree as to render them unable to earn a support."
4. They must be "dependent upon their daily labor for support."
5. Upon proof of these conditions they shall "be placed on the lists of invalid pensioners of the United States, and be entitled to receive for such total inability to procure their subsistence by daily labor $12 per month."

It is not probable that the words last quoted, "such total inability to procure their subsistence by daily labor," at all qualify the conditions prescribed in the preceding language of the section. The "total inability" spoken of must be "such" inability—that is, the inability already described and constituted by the conditions already detailed in the previous parts of the section.

It thus becomes important to consider the meaning and the scope of these last-mentioned conditions.

The mental and physical disability spoken of has a distinct meaning in the practice of the Pension Bureau, and includes every impairment of bodily or mental strength and vigor. For such disabilities there are now paid one hundred and thirty-one different rates of pension, ranging from $1 to $100 per month.

This disability must not be the result of the applicant's "vicious habits or gross carelessness." Practically this provision is not important. The attempt of the Government to escape the payment of a pension on such a plea, would of course, in a very large majority of instances, and regardless of the merits of the case, prove a failure. There would be that strange but nearly universal willingness to help the individual as between him and the public treasury, which goes very far to insure a state of proof in favor of the claimant.

The disability of applicants must be such as to "incapacitate them for the performance of labor in such a degree as to render them unable to earn a support."

It will be observed that there is no limitation or definition of the incapacitating injury or ailment itself. It need only be such a degree of disability from any cause as renders the claimant unable to earn a support by labor. It seems to me that the "support" here mentioned as one which can not be earned, is a complete and entire support, with no diminution on account of the least impairment of physical or mental condition. If it had been intended to embrace only those who by disease or injury were totally unable to labor, it would have been very easy to express that idea, instead of recognizing as is done a "degree" of such inability.

What is a support? Who is to determine whether a man earns it or has it or has it not? Is the Government to enter the homes of claimants for pension, and after an examination of their surroundings and circumstances settle those questions? Shall the Government say to one man that his manner of subsistence by his earnings is a support, and to another that the things his earnings furnish are not a support? Any attempt, however honest, to administer this law in such a manner would necessarily produce more unfairness and unjust discrimination and give more scope for partisan partiality, and would result in more perversion of the Government's benevolent intentions, than the execution of any statute ought to permit.

If in the effort to carry out the proposed law, the degree of disability as related to earnings, be considered for the purpose of discovering if in any way it curtails the support which the applicant if entirely sound would earn, and to which he is entitled, we enter the broad field long occupied by the Pension Bureau, and we recognize as the only difference between the proposed legislation and previous laws passed for the benefit of the surviving soldiers of the civil war, the incurrence in one case of disabilities in military service, and in the other disabilities existing but in no way connected with or resulting from such service.

It must be borne in mind that in no case is there any grading of this proposed pension. Under the operation of the rule first suggested, if there is a lack in any degree, great or small, of the ability to earn such a support as the Government determines the claimant should have, and by the application of the rule secondly suggested, if there is a reduction in any degree of the support which he might earn if sound, he is entitled to a pension of $12.

In the latter case, and under the proviso of the proposed bill, permitting persons now receiving pensions to be admitted to the benefits of the act, I do not see how those now on the pension-roll for disabilities incurred in the service, and which diminish their earning capacity, can be denied the pension provided in this bill.

Of course none will apply who are now receiving $12 or more per month. But on the 30th day of June, 1886, there were on the pension-rolls 202,621 persons who were receiving fifty-eight different rates of pension from $1 to $11.75 per month. Of these, 28,142 were receiving $2 per month; 63,116, $4 per month; 37,254, $6 per month; and 50,274, whose disabilities were rated as total, $8 per month.

As to the meaning of the section of the bill under consideration there appears to have been quite a difference of opinion among its advocates in the Congress. The chairman of the Committee on Pensions in the House of Representatives, who reported the bill, declared that there was in it no provision for pensioning any one who has a less disability than a total inability to labor, and that it was a charity measure. The chairman of the Committee on Pensions in the Senate, having charge of the bill in that body, dissented from the construction of the bill announced in the House of Representatives, and declared that it not only embraced all soldiers totally disabled, but in his judgment all who are disabled to any considerable extent; and such a construction was substantially given to the bill by another distinguished Senator who, as a former Secretary of the Interior, had imposed upon him the duty of executing pension laws and determining their intent and meaning.

Another condition required of claimants under this act is that they shall be "dependent upon their daily labor for support."

This language, which may be said to assume that there exists within the reach of the persons mentioned "labor," or the ability in some degree to work, is more aptly used in a statute describing those not wholly deprived of this ability, than in one which deals with those utterly unable to work.

I am of the opinion that it may fairly be contended that under the provisions of this section any soldier, whose faculties of mind or body have become impaired by accident, disease, or age, irrespective of his service in the army as a cause, and who by his labor only is left incapable of gaining the fair support he might with unimpaired powers have provided for himself, and who is not so well endowed with this world's goods as to live without work, may claim to participate in its bounty; that it is not required that he should be without property, but only that labor should be necessary to his support in some degree; nor is it required that he should be now receiving support from others.

Believing this to be the proper interpretation of the bill, I can not but remember that the soldiers of our civil war, in their pay and bounty, received such compensation for military service as has never been received by soldiers before, since mankind first went to war; that never before, on behalf of any soldiery, have so many and such generous laws been passed to relieve against the incidents of war; that statutes have been passed giving them a preference in all public employments; that the really needy and homeless Union soldiers of the rebellion have been, to a large extent, provided for at soldiers' homes, instituted and supported by the Government, where they are maintained together, free from the sense of degradation which attaches to the usual support of charity; and that never before in the history of the country has it been proposed to render Government aid toward the support of any of its soldiers based alone upon a military service so recent, and where age and circumstances appeared so little to demand such aid.

Hitherto such relief has been granted to surviving soldiers few in number, venerable in age, after a long lapse of time since their military service, and as a parting benefaction tendered by a grateful people.

I can n ot believe that the vast peaceful army of Union soldiers, who have contentedly resumed their places in the ordinary avocations of life cherish as sacred the memory of patriotic service, or who having been disabled by the casualties of war justly regard the present pension-roll, on which appear their names, as a roll of honor, desire at this time and in the present exigency, to be confounded with those who through such a bill, as this are willing to be objects of simple charity and to gain a place upon the pension-roll through alleged dependence.

Recent personal observation and experience constrain me to refer to another result which will inevitably follow the passage of this bill. It is sad but nevertheless true, that already in the matter of procuring pensions there exists a widespread disregard of truth and good faith, stimulated by those who as agents undertake to establish claims for pensions, heedlessly entered upon by the expectant beneficiary, and encouraged or at least not condemned by those unwilling to obstruct a neighbor's plans.

In the execution of this proposed law under any interpretation, a wide field of inquiry would be opened for the establishment of facts largely within the knowledge of the claimants alone; and there can be no doubt that the race after the pensions offered by this bill, would not only stimulate weakness and pretended incapacity for labor, but put a further premium on dishonesty and mendacity.

The effect of new invitations to apply for pensions, or of new advantages added to causes for pensions already existing, is sometimes startling.

Thus in March, 1879, large arrearages of pensions were allowed to be added to all claims filed prior to July 1, 1880. For the year from July 1, 1879, to July 1, 1880, there were filed 110,673 claims, though in the year immediately previous there were but 36,832 filed, and in the year following but 18,455.

While cost should not be set against a patriotic duty or the recognition of a right, still, when a measure proposed is based upon generosity or motives of charity, it is not amiss to meditate somewhat upon the expense which it involves. Experience has demonstrated, I believe, that all estimates concerning the probable future cost of a pension list are uncertain and unreliable, and always fall far below actual realization.

The chairman of the House Committee on Pensions calculates that the number of pensioners under this bill would be 33,105, and the increased cost $4,767,120; this is upon the theory that only those who are entirely unable to work would be its beneficiaries. Such was the principle of the Revolutionary pension law of 1818, much more clearly stated, it seems to me, than in this bill. When the law of 1818 was upon its passage in Congress the number of pensioners to be benefited thereby was thought to be 374; but the number of applicants under the act was 22,297, and the number of pensions actually allowed 20,485, costing, it is reported, for the first year, $1,847,900, instead of $40,000, the estimated expense for that period.

A law was passed in 1853 for the benefit of the surviving widows of Revolutionary soldiers who were married after January 1, 1800. It was estimated that they numbered 300 at the time of the passage of the act; but the number of pensions allowed was 3,742, and the amount paid for such pensions during the first year of the operation of the act was $180,000 instead of $24,000 as had been estimated.

I have made no search for other illustrations, and the above being at hand, are given as tending to show that estimates can not be relied upon in such cases.

If none should be pensioned under this bill except those utterly unable to work, I am satisfied that the cost stated in the estimate referred to would be many times multiplied, and with a constant increase from year to year; and if those partially unable to earn their support should be admitted to the privileges of this bill, the probable increase of expense would be almost appalling.

I think it may be said that at the close of the war of the rebellion every Northern State and a great majority of Northern counties and cities, were burdened with taxation on account of the large bounties paid our soldiers; and the bonded debt thereby created still constitutes a large item in the account of the tax-gatherer against the people. Federal taxation, no less borne by the people than that directly levied upon their property, is still maintained at the rate made necessary by the exigencies of war. If this bill should become a law, with its tremendous addition to our pension obligation, I am thoroughly convinced that further efforts to reduce the Federal revenue and restore some part of it to our people, will and perhaps should be seriously questioned.

It has constantly been a cause of pride and congratulation to the American citizen that his country is not put to the charge of maintaining a large standing army in time of peace. Yet we are now living under a war tax which has been tolerated in peaceful times to meet the obligations incurred in war. But for years past, in all parts of the country, the demand for the reduction of the burdens of taxation upon our labor and production has increased in volume and urgency.

I am not willing to approve a measure presenting the objections to which this bill is subject, and which moreover will have the effect of disappointing the expectation of the people and their desire and hope for relief from war taxation in time of peace.

In my last annual message the following language was used:

"Every patriotic heart responds to a tender consideration for those who, having served their country long and well, are reduced to destitution and dependence, not as an incident of their service, but with advancing age or through sickness or misfortune. We are all tempted by the contemplation of such a condition to supply relief, and are often impatient of the limitations of public duty. Yielding to no one in the desire to indulge this feeling of consideration, I cannot rid myself of the conviction that if these ex-soldiers are to be relieved, they and their cause are entitled to the benefit of an enactment under which relief may be claimed as a right, and that such relief should be granted under the sanction of law, not in evasion of it; nor should such worthy objects of care, all equally entitled, be remitted to the unequal operation of sympathy, or the tender mercies of social and political influence with their unjust discriminations."

I do not think that the objects, the conditions, and the limitations thus suggested, are contained in the bill under consideration.

I adhere to the sentiments thus heretofore expressed. But the evil threatened by this bill is in my opinion such, that, charged with a great responsibility in behalf of the people, I can not do otherwise than to bring to the consideration of this measure my best efforts of thought and judgment, and perform my constitutional duty in relation thereto, regardless of all consequences, except such as appear to me to be related to the best and highest interests of the country.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION,
Washington, February 11, 1887.

Mr. MATSON. Mr. Speaker, I move to refer the bill and the accompanying message to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and in making that motion I think I can promise the House that within the coming week the bill and message will be reported back. I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The question was taken on the motion to refer the bill and the accompanying message to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and there were—ayes 137, noes 27.

So the motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. SPRINGER. I move that the House take a recess until half past 7 o'clock this evening for the purpose of considering bills under the special order.

Mr. STEELE. Mr. Speaker, when I moved to adjourn awhile ago, the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. TAULBEE] asked me a question which I answered under a misapprehension. He asked me if my purpose was to cut off the pension session, and, not understanding him correctly, I answered "yes." My object really was to have the House adjourn so that the message which has just been read might reach here after adjournment, and the bill thereby become a law.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. NEECE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found duly enrolled a bill (H. R. 7508) granting a right of way to the Annapolis and Baltimore Short-Line Railway Company across the Government farm connected with the Naval Academy at Annapolis, Md.; when the Speaker signed the same.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. SPRINGER. I now renew my motion that the House take a recess until half past 7 o'clock.

The motion was agreed to—ayes 88, noes 37; and the House according (at 4 o'clock and 18 minutes) took a recess until 7.30 o'clock p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

The recess having expired, the House reassembled at 7.30 p. m., Mr. MCMILLIN in the chair as Speaker pro tempore.

The Clerk read the following:

SPEAKER'S ROOM, HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
February 11, 1887.

I hereby designate Hon. BENTON MCMILLIN to preside at this evening's session of the House of Representatives as Speaker pro tempore.

J. G. CARLISLE.

J. B. CLARK,
Clerk of House of Representatives.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read the special order under which this session is held.

The order was read, as follows:

Resolved, That on each Friday the House shall take a recess from 5 o'clock p. m. until 7.30 p. m., at which evening sessions private bills granting pensions reported from the Committee on Invalid Pensions and the Committee on Pensions, and bills reported from the Judiciary Committee to remove political disabilities only, be considered.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of bills upon the Private Calendar, under the special order for Friday evening sessions.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, Mr. HATCH in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole for the consideration of bills upon the Private Calendar under the special order which has been read.

Mr. DOCKERY. I ask unanimous consent that members present be allowed to call up for consideration such bills upon the Calendar under the special order as they may choose to designate, unless in any case there be one objection.

Mr. BRADY. I think, Mr. Chairman, we had better proceed with the regular order for a little while this evening.

The CHAIRMAN. The regular order is demanded. The Clerk will report the first bill upon the Calendar.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 4712) to place the name of Jacob S. Biddle on the pension-roll.

Mr. SWOPE. I ask unanimous consent that that bill be passed over informally without losing its place on the Calendar.

There was no objection.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The Committee rose informally, and Mr. MCMILLIN having taken the Chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed bills and joint resolutions of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

A bill (S. 2819) relating to the manufacture and sale of gas in the city of Washington, in the District of Columbia, and amendatory of an act entitled "An act regulating gas-works," approved June 23, 1874;

A bill (S. 3234) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the purchase of a site and the erection of a suitable building for a post-office and other Government offices in the city of Scranton, Pa.," approved July 27, 1882;

A bill (H. R. 3254) for the improvement and enlargement of the court-house and post-office at Omaha, Nebr.; and

A joint resolution (S. R. 105) for the preservation of the official correspondence, documents, and other historical material on file in the various legations and consulates of the United States.

The Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar resumed its session.

LOUISA KEARNEY.

The first business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 5927) for the relief of Louisa Kearney.

Mr. BRADY. I ask for the present consideration of this bill.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to increase the pension of Louisa Kearney, widow of James Kearney, late lieutenant-colonel of Topographical Engineers, United States Army, from $30 per month, as now received, to $50 per month, and to place her name upon the pension-roll at the latter rate, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, from and after the passage of this act.

Mr. BRADY. I ask for the reading of the report.

The report (by Mr. THOMPSON) was read, as follows:

For the long and faithful service of her late husband, Lieut. Col. James Kearney, of the Topographical Engineers, United States Army, a service covering a period of almost fifty years, and because of her great age, and the fact that she is dependent upon her pension for support, we believe the pension of the beneficiary of this bill, Louisa Kearney, should be increased to $40 per month. We recommend, therefore, that the bill be amended by striking out the word "fifty," where it occurs in the seventh line, and by inserting in lieu thereof the word "forty;" and that, when so amended, the bill do pass.

The amendment reported by the Committee on Pensions was read, as follows:

In line 7, strike out "50" and insert "40," so as to make the pension $40 per month.

Mr. BRADY. I ask that this bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Did the gentleman from Virginia make this report?

Mr. BRADY. No, sir, I did not; it was made by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. THOMPSON]. I am, however, prepared to answer any questions which the gentleman from Tennessee may desire to put.

Mr. MCMILLIN. What I wished was a statement of the specific ground on which this relief is proposed to be given.

Mr. BRADY. The husband of this lady was a lieutenant-colonel in the Army, and was fifty years in the service, having served in the war of 1812, the Mexican war, and also at the beginning of the late war. His widow is now eighty years of age, a poor, decrepit woman, who is entirely dependent upon her pension for support. In consideration of her destitute condition, and of the services of her late husband, the committee considered it proper to recommend an increase of her pension to $40 per month.

Mr. MCMILLIN. In view of the great age of this lady, and the prospect that the pension will not be long paid, I shall make no captious objection in this case, though I doubt the propriety of this species of legislation.

Mr. BRADY. The fact that the old lady is not expected to live long was one circumstance which the committee took into view in making the report.

The amendment of the committee was agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with a recommendation that it do pass.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. GALLINGER. I renew the request that unanimous consent be given to members present to call up for consideration pension bills on the Calendar.

Mr. HOLMES. I object.

MISS MARGARET STAFFORD WORTH.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 2030) granting a pension to Miss Margaret Stafford Worth.

Mr. BUCHANAN. If we are to proceed regularly on the Calendar, I ask unanimous consent that when a bill is reached, if no member calls for its consideration, it be passed over informally, and we proceed to the next bill

Mr. WHITE, of Pennsylvania. I desire that the bill just reached be taken up and passed.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Miss Margaret Stafford Worth, dependent daughter of Maj. Gen. William J. Worth, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. If no one calls for the consideration of this bill, I move that it be passed over informally.

Mr. WHITE, of Pennsylvania. I reported the bill, and have called it up. I desire to have it passed on.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the report.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2030) granting a pension to Miss Margaret Stafford Worth, have examined the same, and report: That they concur in the report of the Senate Committee on Pensions, in which House the bill originated, and for the reasons set forth in said report recommend the passage of the bill.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Can we not have read the Senate report which is referred to. The House report, as just read, sheds no light on the case.

Mr. WHITE, of Pennsylvania. If there be any objection whatever to the bill, I ask that the Senate report, with the communications appended, be read.

Mr. FARQUHAR. That may take an hour.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I think the report ought to be read. The pension proposed to be given is extraordinary.

Mr. WHITE, of Pennsylvania. It is not very extraordinary, but it is a little out of the usual course. Nevertheless, the case is as meritorious a one as was ever presented here.

Mr. MCMILLIN. The report will show that, I suppose.

Mr. WHITE, of Pennsylvania. I believe it will.

The Clerk read as follows:

[Senate Report No. 922, Forty-ninth Congress, first session.]

The claimant, Miss Margaret Stafford Worth, is the only surviving unmarried daughter of the distinguished Maj. Gen. William J. Worth. She is now living in the city of Washington, with seven of her father's grandchildren to support, in great poverty and without adequate means of subsistence. She had until now managed to support herself and these children with some assistance, but is now confined to her bed and dangerously ill, so that she will henceforth be dependent on charity. It is a shame that the daughter of one of the most distinguished generals who ever served this Government, and who gave his life to her support, should be reduced to such an extremity in her old age. Congress has granted such relief in many cases of far less merit than this, and your committee think that it would be a fitting tribute to the memory of one of our bravest soldiers.

The following papers show the principal facts of this case, and your committee report back the bill and recommend that it do pass.

The CHAIRMAN. Does any gentleman ask for the reading of the papers which accompany the Senate report?

Mr. MCMILLIN. What has been read sheds no light whatever on the merits of the case.

Mr. WHITE, of Pennsylvania. I ask that the papers accompanying the Senate report be read.

The Clerk proceeded to read the remainder of the report, which is as follows:

[Petition of Margaret S. Worth to the United States Senate and House of Representatives for a pension.]

William Worth, great-grandfather of Maj. Gen. W. J. Worth, United States Army, left Devonshire, England, on account of religious persecution, landed on the New England coast in 1640. Having protected and sheltered a Quaker, he, with two others, took refuge in a small boat, put to sea without chart or compass, and drifted to the island of Nantucket. There they soon became land-owners, and resorted to the sea as a profession. Thomas Worth, his grandson, in time became an owner of ships, and moved to Hudson, N. Y., where he married, and there William J. Worth was born.

At an early age William J. Worth placed himself in the large mercantile house of Starr & Sheldon, in Albany, N. Y., where he served as clerk until, the war of 1812 breaking out, he was offered and accepted the position of private secretary to General Morgan Lewis.

Desiring more active service, he sought and received a commission as lieutenant in the United States Army, serving in every grade and always receiving the commendation of his superior officers and of his countrymen.

At the battle of Lundy's Lane he received a wound from which he never entirely recovered, and twice within your petitioner's memory the opened wound, after exposure in the field, produced inflammation and danger to life.

At the close of the war of 1812, with the brevet rank of major, he was ordered to West Point, where, for nine years, he bent all his energies to raising the standard of the institution to a point never before attained. While at West Point Major Worth married the daughter of Mr. John Stafford, whose ancestors came to America in 1605, a descendant of the family of Stafford of Warwick, England.

Col. Joab Stafford, Mrs. Worth's grandfather, was severely wounded in the Revolutionary war, and his son was in the battles of Crown Point and Bennington.

Major Worth's next post was Fortress Monroe, where he was instructor in artillery. While there he was sent with the Black Hawk expedition to quell the Indian troubles in the Northwest.

From Fortress Monroe he was transferred to the Ordnance Corps, and made inspector, which duty gave him an annual ride over the Alleghanies, at a period when such a journey was attended with peril. He was then ordered to arrange for the transfer of the Cherokee Nation to its new home on the Arkansas River.

In 1837 he was made colonel of the new regiment, the Eighth Infantry.

The Patriot war breaking out on the Canada border, he was instrumental in effecting an amicable settlement of the disturbance.

He was then ordered to Florida, placed in command, conducted the campaigns against the hostile Seminoles, and after many perils, from the climate as well as the military operations, in which he had five engagements with the Indians, he effected a peace, which had until that time been fruitlessly sought by his predecessors, and removed the Indians from the Territory to their new home west of the Arkansas.

While on this duty the little fortune which he had hoped to leave for the support of his family had, by the dishonesty of his attorney, been swept away. After the peace he desired to return to the North and endeavor to reclaim something out of the wreck, but being ordered to Mexico he was prevented from executing his intention, and his family never recovered a cent.

In Mexico he led his division in the battles of Montery, Vera Cruz, Cerro Gordo, the advance on Puebla, Molino del Rey, Chapultepec, Churubusco, the Garita of San Cosme, and was the only general officer who slept within the city gate on that memorable night.

He was the first to land at Vera Cruz and the last to leave Mexican soil.

After the close of the war he was ordered to Texas, where the cholera was raging, and there he died, at the post of duty.

I, Margaret Stafford Worth, the only unmarried daughter, having seven of my father's grandchildren almost entirely dependent upon me for support, petition the gentlemen of the United States Senate and House of Representatives to grant me a pension of $50 a month.

BATTLES IN WHICH GENERAL WORTH WAS ENGAGED.

Chippewa, Niagara, Fort Erie, Lundy's Lane, five battles in Florida, Monterey, Vera Cruz, Cerro Gordo, Puebla, Cherubusco, Chapultepec, Molino del Rey, battles of the City of Mexico, San Antonio, Garita of San Cosme.

Received the thanks of Congress, State of New York, State of Louisiana, State of Texas, State of Florida.

He received a sword from Congress, from the State of New York, the State of Louisiana, city of Hudson.

A monument worthy of the city of New York was erected to his memory by its citizens.

J. C. KELTON,
Acting Adjutant-General.

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 22, 1886.

The petitioner, Miss Margaret S. Worth, the daughter of Major-General Worth, who for many years was one of the senior officers of our Army, is now advancing in years, is in failing health, and is no longer able to earn sufficient for her support.

Being now thrown upon her own resources she is at present in almost destitute circumstances.

If Congress, in view of the distinguished services of General Worth, should deem it proper to extend the charity for which Miss Worth petitions they could not find a more worthy object.

P. H. SHERIDAN,
Lieutenant-General.

SAINT LOUIS, April 24, 1886.

I commend the foregoing petition to all generous men who love their country and its heroes.

General Worth was one of the most brilliant and conspicuous officers in the war of 1812, Mexican war, and Florida war. He died in the military service on the frontier. I know the petitioner to be his daughter, the only one I believe who never married, who has been toiling for years to support herself and help her sister's children. She is now old and feeble, and it will be a graceful act for Congress to recognize her as the orphan of the nation.

W. T. SHERMAN.

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 20, 1886.

GENTLEMEN: I have learned with pleasure that a bill has been introduced into the Senate conferring a pension on Miss Margaret S. Worth.

The services of her distinguished father are a part of the history of the country. Miss Worth has been my friend and patient for a long time. I know that her means are narrow and that her health is much impaired. She is suffering under profound nervous exhaustion, from which there is little or no probability of her recovery. Therefore she is not likely to ever be able to carry on the clerical work on which she has depended for a livelihood.

Trusting that Miss Worth's case may receive your favorable action,

I remain your obedient servant,

R. M. O'REILLY, M. D., U. S. A.,
Attending Surgeon.

The COMMITTEE ON PENSIONS,
United States Senate.

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 20, 1886.

GENTLEMEN: I desire to state that I have known Miss Margaret Worth, daughter of the late General Worth, United States Army, for some years, and have upon several occasions been called upon to prescribe for her, and know that her present state of health is very precarious; in my opinion, she is physically unfitted to discharge the duties of her office, and that a due regard for her health demands, for some time or permanently, absolution from those duties.

She is of a delicate, nervous organization, and confinement to business has been and must be injurious to her.

In view of the distinguished services of her father and her present enfeebled condition preventing her from earning a proper livelihood, I think the granting of a pension would be most meritorious and deserved.

I am, very respectfully,

D. L. HUNTINGTON,
Surgeon United States Army.

The COMMITTEE ON PENSIONS,
United States Senate.

WAR DEPARTMENT, SURGEON-GENERAL'S OFFICE,
Washington, April 22, 1886.

I take the liberty of addressing you in advocacy of the application for pension made for Miss Margaret Worth, eldest daughter of the late Maj. Gen. W. J. Worth, United States Army.

I have known Miss Worth over thirty years, and know that her life has been devoted to the care and support of dependent descendants of General Worth, her sisters, nieces, and nephews. For some years she has labored as a clerk in a public office. Her health is now very much impaired, and she is almost incapacitated for further work.

I would most respectfully urge that a pension may be granted her.

I have the honor to be, very truly and respectfully,

R. MURRAY,
Surgeon-General United States Army.

The COMMITTEE ON PENSIONS,
United States Senate.

It seems like presumption in me to bear testimony to the services of Major-General Worth, to whom the Congress of the United States and the Legislatures of four States have voted their thanks and presented swords of honor, and to whose memory the great city of New York has erected a stately monument inscribed with the principal events in his distinguished career; his wounds, his battles, his commands, from the War of 1812, as a mere lad, to his death nearly forty years after from cholera, at his post, as much a martyr to duty as if he had been shot on the field of battle.

His successful termination of the Florida war, as a general-in-chief, his brilliant services, as a general of division, in Mexico, are matters of history; but there were incidents with which history does not deal and which are known to me. He was habitually at the point of danger. This characteristic enabled him to snatch victory from three times his force at Molino del Rey, when a disastrous defeat seemed imminent, from mere force of numbers. He was the first general and one of the first persons in the City of Mexico when the gates of that town were carried by assault, and he was not only the last general, but the last person, in the Army to leave it at the end of the war. There were signs of serious disturbance and riot amongst the "leperos," the lowest order of the inhabitants, and he saw every soldier, woman, and child safely out of the gates before he himself left the city.

If it is possible for any man to establish such a claim on the gratitude of his country as to entitle a daughter to aid in her distress, then General Worth has established such a claim.

HENRY J. HUNT,
Brevet Major-General United States Army.

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 7, 1886.

It was not my privilege to know General Worth personally, as he died in the year in which I entered the Army. He died at his post of duty from a disease to the fatal effects of which the requirements of the public service compelled him to expose himself. Every officer who entered the Army about my own time can testify to the marks of high tone and elevated soldierly ideas which were impressed upon our small army by his instruction and his bearing as commandant of cadets, and by his distinguished conduct on many fields of battle in the interest of our country. He was the type of a soldier on which the heroes of the Mexican war, and those of our later struggle, on either side, tried to model themselves. If we were asked to grant a pension to the daughter of Andrew Jackson I do not think there would be a dissenting voice in the nation, and I do not think there ought to be one to granting to the daughter of General Worth, who is in need of a slight tribute, in recognition of the distinguished services of her father.

A. BAIRD,
Brevet Major-General.

WASHINGTON, D. C., March 31, 1886.

The honorable COMMITTEE OF PENSIONS, United States Senate:

I do not know well enough the pension laws to know whether Miss Worth is under them entitled to any pension arising out of her father's (General Worth) very distinguished and well-known services. I presume it can be granted only by a special law.

When I went to West Point, fifty years ago, as a cadet, no name except General Scott's was more often spoken of by officers of the Army. I grew up in admiration of his eminent qualities and high deeds as a soldier in the war of 1812 on the Niagara frontier, when he excited the admiration of his comrades, many of whom I learned to know.

He served with equal distinction through the war with Mexico, and died full of honors, and left little, I think, to his family except name and reputation. I shall be glad to learn that if Miss Worth, his daughter, needs it, she succeeds in obtaining a pension from the country he served so well in its and in his youth and manhood.

I am, respectfully, your obedient servant,

M. C. MEIGS,
Quartermaster-General, retired, Brevet Major-General U. S. Army.

The late General William Worth was a very distinguished officer in the Army of the United States, as his record will show. His eldest daughter, Miss Margaret Worth, now of this city, who is in feeble health, is applying for a pension, which I sincerely hope may be granted her.

D. H. RUCKER,
Brigadier-General U. S. Army, retired.

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 22, 1886.

Mr. CUTCHEON (before the reading was concluded). I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the remainder of the report be dispensed with. We have now got down to the present generation. [Laughter.]

Mr. McMILLIN. It is the present generation we are most interested in.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to dispensing with the further reading of the report?

Mr. McMILLIN. Reserving my right to insist on the reading of the entire report, I suggest that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WHITE] allow this bill to be passed over until another meeting. The report is very long.

Mr. WHITE, of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, this bill ought to be acted on by this Congress in some way or other. It has come here from the Senate with the report which has been in part read. The Committee on Pensions, to which the bill was referred, concurred in that report, and reported the bill back to the House with a recommendation that it pass. Of course some part of this report is family history, but notwithstanding that fact it is not to be sneered at by members or anybody else. There is no man in this land who need be ashamed of the family history of a man like General Worth. Though members here have no personal recollection of his services in the war of 1812, many of us can undoubtedly remember the fame that he achieved by his gallantry in Mexico; and if members of the House have not read this report of the Senate committee, it would be just as interesting reading and give them as much information as anything that they could peruse, because if they do not know anything about General Worth and the services which he rendered to his country, it is time that they did know.

Mr. Chairman, this bill has been passed over time and again. It ought to be acted on. I want to know whether the Congress of the United States is going to say to a daughter, and I believe the only remaining daughter, of a man who rendered services like those General Worth did, who gave his life and everything he had for his country, I want to know whether when pensions have been granted to others it is to be denied in this special case?

It has been alleged that this is a special case. It is a special case, and necessarily so. This American Congress has given pensions heretofore to daughters of generals. I know they gave it in no more worthy or meritorious case than this of the daughter of General Worth, who is now supporting her sister's children, the grandchildren of General Worth. She is in penury almost; in fact, is the subject of charity in the city of Washington, the capital of our great nation, and I think this is a special case. It is like all others which come here, as no case comes before Congress unless it is a special case not provided for by general law. If there were a general law to cover it it would not be here.

Mr. McMILLIN. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. WHITE, of Pennsylvania. Certainly.

Mr. McMILLIN. The reason urged by the gentleman from Pennsylvania why the pension should be granted in this case is upon the ground that she is the daughter of General Worth.

Mr. WHITE, of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. McMILLIN. Then does the gentleman propose to grant pensions to all daughters of generals under similar circumstances?

Mr. WHITE, of Pennsylvania. Yes; I would be willing to grant pensions to the daughters of any of our generals under similar circumstances to those of this daughter of General Worth, who is poor and has these grandchildren dependent upon her.

Mr. McMILLIN. I will put a stronger case, the case of a volunteer soldier who gave his life to his country—killed in battle.

Mr. WHITE, of Pennsylvania. I say whenever a volunteer private soldier comes to this Congress, a soldier who entered the war of 1812, served all through that war, remained in the service, fought through the Mexican war, who was in the service of the country until he died; I am here, and hope that Congress will stand by me, to grant a pension to his daughter. I am ready to do it for the daughter of any private soldier who served during all the years that he lived in defense of his country. We have already done it in similar cases, and I say it should be done in this case.

Mr. PERKINS. Will the gentleman please state what precedents he has on the subject.

Mr. WHITE, of Pennsylvania. One case, I believe, was that of the daughter of General Bennett. There have been many such cases, but I do not recall them at this moment.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. Was it in the case of a widow of a general?

Mr. WHITE, of Pennsylvania. No; the cases were those of daughters.

Mr. HAYNES. There are such instances as the gentleman from Pennsylvania has referred to. There were two in my State, the daughters of revolutionary generals. One was the daughter of General McNeil, and the other the daughter of General Miller. My recollection is, however, that they were not placed on the pension-roll at $50 a month, but at $20 a month.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. I should like to know the ages of these grandchildren.

Mr. WHITE, of Pennsylvania. I really do not know; they live in the city here with Margaret Stafford Worth, who has supported them as long as she could, and who is now herself upon a sick-bed.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. Perhaps they may be old enough to support themselves.

Mr. WHITE, of Pennsylvania. I do not know as to that.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Has the gentleman any information about Miss Worth's age?

Mr. WHITE, of Pennsylvania. No; no certain information on that subject, but she must be quite old.

Mr. DOCKERY. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. WHITE, of Pennsylvania. Certainly.

Mr. DOCKERY. The only basis upon which this claim stands is the fact that this lady is the daughter of General Worth.

Mr. WHITE, of Pennsylvania. There is no other claim; she is the daughter of General Worth, and supports his grandchildren. She has done as long as she is able, and now in extreme distress she asks for this pension. I think it should be gracefully and honorably granted to her.

Mr. DOCKERY. If we have any such precedents of that kind I believe we ought not to make any more of them.

Mr. PERKINS. It seems to me this bill is understood, and I ask we now vote on it.

Mr. WHITE, of Pennsylvania. I move that the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation it do pass.

Mr. PERKINS. Let us have a vote on it.

Mr. WISE. I will call a quorum.

Mr. WHITE, of Pennsylvania. I have moved that the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there an amendment?

Mr. WHITE, of Pennsylvania. No; there is no amendment.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. I move to strike out "$50 a month," and insert "$12 a month," the same as that of a soldier's widow.

Mr. WISE. I wish to say in regard to this bill that I do not mean to be understood I may not eventually support it, but I will not support it until an opportunity is given for investigation. I think it is a departure from precedent, and I am unwilling to enter upon this course without thorough investigation. Who knows investigation will not show this is a case which ought not to pass.

Mr. PERKINS. Let us have a vote on it.

The question recurred on the amendment of Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana.

Mr. BRADY. I ask by unanimous consent that the bill be passed over to retain its place upon the Calendar. [Cries "That is right!"]

Mr. McMILLIN. I hope that will be done.

Mr. WISE. To retain its place.

The CHAIRMAN. That follows as a matter of course.

Mr. WHITE, of Pennsylvania. If members will agree to investigate the matter and that it shall be taken up the first bill the next evening session for pension bills, I will not object.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee to-night can not bind the committee next Friday night.

Mr. WHITE, of Pennsylvania. Well, that understanding can be made here to-night, at all events.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

Mr. ZACH. TAYLOR. I ask unanimous consent to have the entire report printed in the RECORD.

There was no objection.

(The report is printed above.)

JAMES MONOHAN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4678) restoring to the pension-roll the name of James Monohan, &c.

Mr. SWOPE. I ask unanimous consent that this bill be informally passed over.

There was no objection.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Mr. Chairman, there are a very few gentlemen who come here week after week on Friday nights to attend these sessions, and I again renew the request that those gentlemen now present be permitted to call up such bills as they are interested in, by unanimous consent.

Mr. WISE. I call for the regular order.

Mr. TAULBEE. I will ask that gentlemen be recognized for unanimous consent to call up bills.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that this is identically the request which has already been made and objected to by the gentleman from Virginia, who demands the regular order.

Mr. WISE. I withdraw the demand for the regular order.

Mr. DOCKERY. Then I again renew my request that gentlemen present be permitted to call up such bills upon the Calendar as come within the rule, one objection to pass them over.

Mr. PERKINS. Is that to follow the list prepared on a former evening?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair can not state anything about the list at a former evening.

Mr. HOLMES. I do not make objection now; but I think there is objection to this manner of doing business. One night we come and follow the regular order and another night we allow gentlemen to call up bills at their pleasure. We can never rely upon the order in which the business is going to be conducted. I have been here for two weeks upon the old list, and some gentlemen who have come in since that time have had recognition.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that debate is not in order on this proposition.

Is there objection to the request that gentlemen be permitted to call up bills upon the Calendar, one objection being sufficient to prevent the consideration of a bill?

Mr. WISE. I have no objection to that.

Mr. TAULBEE. Subject to one objection?

The CHAIRMAN. That follows, of course.

Mr. McMILLIN. I suggest that the bills, and if necessary the reports be first read, as we can not understand what the proposition is until it is read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will again ask for objections to the request.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

BENJAMIN F. HILLIKER.

The bill (H. R. 11111) granting an increase of pension to Benjamin F. Hilliker, called up by Mr. MORRILL, was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, directed to increase the pension of Benjamin F. Hilliker, late a private in Company A, Eighth Wisconsin Volunteers, and pay him a pension of $45 per month.

The report (by Mr. MORRILL) was read, as follows:

The petitioner was a private in Company A, Eighth Wisconsin Volunteers. In action at Mechanicsburg, Miss., June 4, 1863, he received a gunshot wound of the head, the ball entering at the base of the mastoid process on the right side, passing through the superior maxillary and passing out at the left nostril, producing anchylosis of the inferior maxillary. The examining surgeon describes the case as follows:

"Ball entering about two inches behind the lobe of the right ear, passing forward and inward, and destroying a section of the jaw (lower) at the angle, and taking the upper portion of the jaw and all the double teeth, and passing out of the left nostril, destroying the septum of the nostril, knocking out several of his teeth, above and below, on the left side; the incisor teeth of lower jaw extending in front of the upper ones, the points of the lower ones being even with the lower part of the nose, and firmly locked there; the right corner of the mouth drawn downward and outward about an inch; the lids of the right eye paralyzed, the eye standing wide open, he being unable to close it, the whole producing the most horrible disfigurement—the whole face being crooked. The nose is flat, in consequence of the destruction of the septum. The sight of the right eye about half destroyed. * * * He has partial paralysis of the right shoulder and arm; about half the time he says it is entirely powerless. The muscles of the shoulder relaxed and powerless."

The wound produced anchylosis of the jaw, and the soldier has during all the years that have since intervened never been able to use his jaws or to take solid food of any kind or in any form. This has produced dyspepsia and piles of a most distressing character. The claimant, in his petition, says:

"The surgeon left me on the field for dead, but I recovered consciousness, and was taken to the hospital, only to live a miserable existence since, being in constant pain from either dyspepsia, neuralgia of right shoulder, or piles; dyspepsia caused from the total loss of use of jaws, for I have never opened them one-sixteenth of an inch since 1863. I have to take my food by sucking it into my mouth by the aid of forcing it with the fingers. Can not partake of any solid food at all; and soup! how I hate the thought of it."

Your committee most heartily recommend the passage of the accompanying bill

Mr. McMILLIN. What is the increase proposed here?

Mr. MORRILL. It increases the pension from thirty to forty-five dollars. This is one of the most distressing cases we have ever had before our committee. For sixteen years this man has not opened his mouth at all.

Mr. McMILLIN. This is a pension for the soldier himself?

Mr. MORRILL. Yes, sir.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. TAULBEE. Will it be in order at this time to withdraw an objection I interposed to a bill called up by the gentleman from New Hampshire last Friday, and let it be considered?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will entertain that later on.

MRS. SARAH HAMILTON.

The next business on the Calendar, called up by Mr. HALL, was the bill (S. 2045) granting a pension to Mrs. Sarah Hamilton.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Mrs. Sarah Hamilton, widow of Thomas Hamilton, deceased, late a private in Company G, Thirty-seventh Regiment of Iowa Infantry Volunteers.

The report (by Mr. CONGER) is as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2045) granting a pension to Sarah Hamilton, have examined the same, and, as embodying the substantial facts, copy herein the report of the Senate Committee on Pensions, namely:

"The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2045) granting a pension to Sarah Hamilton, have examined the same, and report that the records in this case show claimant is the widow of Thomas Hamilton, late a private in Company G, Thirty-seventh Regiment Iowa Volunteers, who enlisted September 2, 1862, and was discharged May 24, 1865.

"The soldier was severely injured in February, 1863, but continued in the service until the close of the war. By reason of the injury the soldier was pensioned from May 25, 1865, which pension he continued to draw until the time of his death, although his disabilities continued to increase, and some years before his death, which occurred April 22, 1882, he became totally blind. The pension was not increased, however, although it is shown by certificates that his disabilities continued to increase steadily, and were all certified to, including the blindness, by the examining surgeons of the Pension Office, who describe the blindness and rate him accordingly.

"The widow is now sixty-three years of age, and so poor that she is helped from time to time from the poor fund of the town where she lives.

"Taking into consideration all the evidence on file in this case, the committee believe it to be their duty to report in favor of this bill and recommend its passage."

This soldier's disability, for which he was pensioned, was varicose veins, and Dr. D. W. Robinson, late surgeon of Fortieth Iowa Infantry, who attended soldier in his last illness, makes the following affidavit:

* * * "That I was employed as his family physician most of the time since 1873; that said soldier from this time to his death was disabled with varicose veins; that during this period, say from about 1875 to April, 1882, he was subject to frequent attacks of pain in the head, attended with vertigo; that in 1880 a disease of the eyes presented itself, which proved to be cataract, from which he became totally blind; that from this time his attacks of pain and vertigo became more frequent and severe, with attendant symptoms of cerebral apoplexy; that his death occurred about April 22, 1882, in one of these paroxysms; that, in my judgment, the varicosed condition of the veinous system was primarily and immediately the cause of his disabilities and death." * * *

Evidently the Pension Office did not accept this pathological relation between the disability for which he was pensioned and death; but these facts remain: This husband of this aged widow was a faithful soldier for three years. He incurred a disability in the service, which disabled him for life and disqualified him from earning a competency for his family. He died of disease which might have been the result of his pensioned disability. His widow is old, helpless, and dependent upon the charity of friends and the public. The Government which her husband served, and for which he gave his health and risked his life, can well afford to solve the doubt in favor of this claimant.

Therefore your committee recommend the passage of the bill.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

ALPHEUS R. FRENCH.

The next business on the Calendar, called up by Mr. WHITE, of Minnesota, was the bill (S. 1582) for the relief of Alpheus R. French.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to increase pension numbered 193391, of Alpheus Robert French, from $17 per month to $50 per month, from and after the passage of this act; it appearing that said pensioner is now seventy-eight years of age and totally disabled for manual labor of any kind by reason thereof, and eight wounds and other disabilities incurred during a long and honorable service in the Army of the United States in the Black Hawk war of 1832, the Florida or Seminole war of 1837, the Mexican war, and the late war.

The report (by Mr. THOMPSON) is as follows:

The Committee on Pensions adopt and make part hereof the report of the Senate Committee on Pensions, being Report No. 767, first session Forty-ninth Congress, and recommend the passage of the bill.

That the records in this case show that claimant joined the First United States Infantry on May 1, 1830, and served an enlistment of five years in Company E, under Captain Gales and Col. Zachary Taylor, and was in the battle of Bad Axe, 1832.

That he re-enlisted May 2, 1835, for three years in the same company and regiment, and was transferred to Capt. Thomas Barker's company (D), and was ordered to Florida during the Seminole war. He was with Col. Zachary Taylor at the battle of Okeechobee.

That he re-enlisted on August 15, 1842, in Lieut. R. Granger's company (H), same regiment, for a period of five years, and during this service arrived at Vera Cruz, Mexico, before the siege or landing of the troops.

That he assisted in organizing the First Minnesota Volunteers in the spring of 1861, and that he also assisted materially in organizing and recruiting the Fourth Minnesota Volunteers the same year, and in December, 1861, was appointed first lieutenant and adjutant of the Fifth Minnesota.

In May, 1862, the brigade to which he was attached was at Pittsburg Landing, also at the siege of Corinth, and in September and October, 1862, was under General Rosecrans at the battles of Iuka and Corinth, Mississippi, October 3 and 4, 1862.

Becoming disabled for service he tendered his resignation, to date March 29, 1863, and upon his health becoming partially restored again accepted a lieutenancy in Company F, of the United States Veteran Reserve Corps, on October 24, 1864, in which he served until mustered out, June 29, 1866.

The affidavits in this case show that the disabilities have continued to increase from time to time until the present, and that now, at the age of seventy-eight years, claimant is confined to his room and bed, requiring the care and attention of another person a large share of the time.

The board of examining surgeons of the Pension Office, in a certificate dated January 10, 1885, describe his disabilities as chronic rheumatism, with enlarged joints and disease of the heart, and rate his disability total.

In view of the facts set forth in this case, the committee believe it to be their duty to report favorably a bill for the relief of this man, who has given the best years of his life to the continued service of his country, and who ought to be taken care of, as he is now no longer able to care for himself.

Taking into consideration all the evidence on file in this case, your committee report in favor of this bill as amended, to wit, by striking out the words "one hundred," in line 7, and inserting in lieu thereof the word "fifty," and, as amended, they recommend the passage of the bill.

Mr. WISE. I must object to that bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is shall the bill be laid aside——

Mr. WISE. I understood one objection was to be good under the unanimous consent given to-night.

Mr. TAULBEE. I think that was the understanding.
Mr. WHITE, of Pennsylvania. That was clearly the agreement.
Mr. HOLMES. I think the objection comes too late.
Mr. WISE. I made it as soon as I had an opportunity.
Mr. LONG. I think the gentleman's objection is in time, under the agreement.
Mr. GROUT. That was clearly the understanding.
Mr. HOLMES. I do not see why our time should be taken up by reading these reports, if objection is to be made.
Mr. WISE. How am I to know whether to object or not until I hear the report?
Mr. HOLMES. I make the point of order, at all events. I would like to have the question settled.
Mr. WHITE, of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, this man served in four wars and received eight wounds. This report shows that he was seventy-eight years old at the time of filing his application, which was two years ago, so that he is now eighty. He has no other means of support for himself and family than the little meager pension of $17. I would like to see a vote upon the bill.
Mr. WISE. I listened to the reading of the report and it is not stated anywhere in that report that the soldier received a solitary wound in the service of the country.
Mr. SPRINGER. The Mexican bill will cover the case if it be as the gentleman from Minnesota stated it.
The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the bill again.
The bill was again read.
Mr. PETTIBONE. That is enough. The bill states that this soldier received eight wounds.
Mr. WISE. It was not so stated in the report. I had not heard the reading of the bill. I withdraw my objection.
The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the bill will be laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.
Mr. McMILLIN. If not too late, I wish to make a statement with reference to this bill.
The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman.
Mr. McMILLIN. This seems to me a very large pension to be given under the circumstances. Do you give $50 a month to every soldier that gets to be eighty years old? That is the point involved here.
Mr. WHITE, of Minnesota. He served for seventeen years.
Mr. McMILLIN. Quite a number of men have served longer than that.
Mr. BRADY. And he was wounded eight times.
Mr. McMILLIN. And I suppose there are men in this House who have been wounded eight times who do not receive that pension. And if the wounds he received many years ago were the cause of the disability now upon him, is there any man who can believe he would live to be eighty years of age? It is well to be practical in these things as in the ordinary affairs of life. I yield to no man in my reverence for the patriotism of our citizens, and I think no man can accuse the country or the Congress of the United States of parsimony in dealing with this matter of pensions. But here is an old gentleman who has attained the great age of eighty years, or as the bill says seventy-eight; the gentleman in charge of it says eighty, and I undertake to say that Congress can not afford to pension every man who has served the Government in its armies at the rate of $50 a month. We might as well begin here and now and act sensibly about these things. I think, Mr. Chairman, that an amendment making the amount $25 a month would be proper.
Mr. O'HARA. Make it $30.
Mr. McMILLIN. I think $25 a month would cover the case.
Mr. PERKINS. I move to amend the amendment by making it $30.
Mr. McMILLIN. I will accept the gentleman's amendment rather than be captious about it.
The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee offers an amendment, modified at the suggestion of the gentleman from Kansas, to make the rate of pension $30 a month.
Mr. WHITE, of Minnesota. I accept the amendment.
The amendment was adopted; and the bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

MRS. ELLEN M. BOGGS.

Mr. CURTIN. I call up for consideration the bill (S. 722) for increase of pension to Mrs. Ellen M. Boggs.
The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the limitations and provisions of the pension laws, the name of Ellen M. Boggs, widow of William Brenton Boggs, deceased, late a pay director in the United States Navy, at the rate of $50 per month, in lieu of the amount now received by law.

Mr. CURTIN. Let the report be read.
The report (by Mr. HUTTON) was read as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 722) for increase of pension to Mrs. Ellen M. Boggs, have had the same under consideration, and concur in the Senate report, hereto attached, and recommend the passage of the bill.

William Brenton Boggs, deceased, was a pay director in the Navy for many years, his entire period of service covering a quarter of a century. His record as an officer was without a flaw, while his gallantry was conspicuous.

The committee present, and make a part of their report, the following communication from Admiral Porter relating to this case:

OFFICE OF THE ADMIRAL,
Washington, D. C., December 13, 1880.

MY DEAR MADAM: I regret to hear that the letter I wrote you in regard to your late husband's services has been lost, either in the Naval Committee rooms or in the Pension Office. It will, however, make little difference, as I can tell you pretty much what I embodied in my former communication.

During the period I commanded the Mississippi squadron we had a large "wharfboat," some 600 feet long, as a storehouse for the squadron. This was set on fire one night in the year 1864, by means of a torpedo, and the flames spread so rapidly that it was with the utmost difficulty those on board escaped to the shore. The different pay officers of the station had all their accounts and the public money on board this vessel.

At the time of the fire your late husband, William B. Boggs, occupied the position of fleet paymaster of the Mississippi squadron, and slept on board the vessel to guard the public papers and money. He was the only one during the conflagration who did not leave his post, but forcing his way through the flames he succeeded in securing his books and papers, and then worked his way to the roof of the wharf, whence he jumped overboard and succeeded in saving his most valuable papers.

This was not done until his clothing was burned off and he was nearly scorched to a cinder. I saw him an hour after the accident, and a more dreadful burning I never witnessed.

For many months his life was despaired of, and when he was able to move about he was so marked that his most intimate friends would scarcely know him.

No doubt his death was greatly hastened by the terrible shock his constitution underwent at that time. I am satisfied that the stern bravery shown by Paymaster Boggs on the occasion entitles his widow to a pension as much as if the action had been performed in battle.

It was not the excitement of battle that sustained him, but a heroic effort to preserve the Government accounts, the loss of which would have compelled the payment of large sums of money by the Department to persons who had no real claim for compensation. I look upon this action of Mr. Boggs as one of the most heroic which came under my observation during the war. It was a case where a man battled with the flames with almost a certainty of losing his life. With all due respect for our legislators, I am of the opinion that the widow of Paymaster Boggs is as much entitled to a pension as the widow of any other officer who was disabled during the war.

I remain, very respectfully and truly, yours,

DAVID D. PORTER, Admiral.

Mrs. WILLIAM B. BOGGS,
Georgetown, D. C.

I omitted to state in the body of this communication what I said in my former one, that I think that Congress should give you an increase of pension to the amount of $50 a month. Thirty dollars per month is what any officer's widow can obtain whose husband has performed ordinary service. That you can claim without going to Congress, and $50 per month should be given for heroic conduct. I think if Congress can be made to understand all the bearings of this matter they will not fail to do justice in the premises.

DAVID D. PORTER.

The death of Pay Director Boggs left the claimant, his widow, in very straitened circumstances, and the committee, believing her condition to be such as to warrant the proposed increase, recommend the passage of the bill as amended, to wit:

Strike out on line 8, after the word "month," the rest of the section, with the proviso, and insert the following: "in lieu of the amount now received by law."

Mr. CURTIN. I ask that the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.
Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. What is the rate of pension now?
Mr. CURTIN. Thirty dollars a month.
Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. Has it been stated how much pension is given in this case at present?
Mr. TARSNEY. Yes; $30 a month.
Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. And it is proposed to increase it to $50? I object.
Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I ask the gentleman to be satisfied with voting against it. Do not object.
Mr. MORRILL. There are plenty of similar cases in which this pension has been given.
Mr. CURTIN. There could not be a more meritorious case.
The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. JOHNSTON] objects.
Mr. CURTIN. I would like to say a word anyhow about this case.
The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Indiana insist on his objection?
Mr. CURTIN. No, he does not. [Laughter.]
The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection the question is, Shall the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass?
The question being taken, it was decided in the affirmative; and the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

MRS. LYDIA BURDICK.

Mr. WAIT. I call up for consideration the bill (H. R. 9664) placing the name of Mrs. Lydia Burbdick on the pension-roll.
The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions of the pension laws, the name of Mrs. Lydia Burdick, widow of Samuel Burdick, late a private in Company A, Eighteenth Regiment Connecticut Volunteers.

The report (by Mr. LOVERING) was read, as follows:

Claimant is the widow of Samuel Burdick, who served as private in Company A, Eighteenth Regiment Connecticut Volunteers, from July 25, 1862, to January 4, 1864, when discharged upon surgeon's certificate of disability setting forth that the soldier was suffering from general debility with incipient tuberculosis contracted since enlistment. He died January 13, 1881, at which time he was a pensioner, for disease of lungs and kidneys, at the rate of $10 per month. The widow's claim for pension has been rejected upon the ground that the fatal disease, cancer of the stomach, did not result from diseases for which the soldier was pensioned.

Dr. W. S. C. Perkins, who attended the soldier in his last illness, testifies:

"About a year before his death soldier came under affiant's treatment. Was then suffering from consumption and chronic inflammation of the kidneys, and failing rapidly from both causes. A short time before his death a cancer of the stomach appeared which tended to hasten his death. But for the cancer he might have lived a few days longer. Death from bronchitis was sure to come in a short time. There was no post-mortem examination held. The certificate of death gave gastric cancer as the cause of death, as the symptoms pertaining to that disease were more prominent at that time."

Dr. H. M. Bishop testified in the invalid claim, under date of December 27, 1878, as follows:

"The disease for which I have treated Samuel Burdick is phthisis pulmonalis. There are areas of consolidation in both lungs, with small vomicæ, and his strength has gradually failed. Whenever active inflammation has supervened around the deposits I have been able thus far to control it in the course of a week or two, but each new attack reduces him more and more. * * * The kidneys and liver have sympathized more or less in the general decay of his system." * * *

It is evident from all the evidence in the case that soldier's health became so much reduced from disease contracted in the service that he was unable to resist the attack of the fatal disease, if cancer of the stomach must be admitted as the efficient factor in the death cause. Whether this is true or not must necessarily remain in doubt, as well as its origin.

The claimant is perfectly helpless, and since the soldier's death has been supported by the Grand Army post at Norwich, Conn., and other private charity. She is now sixty-seven years of age.

Your committee are fully satisfied of the merits of the case, and therefore report favorably on the accompanying bill, and ask that it do pass.

There being no objection the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

ALICE KELLEY.

Mr. SWOPE. I call up the bill (S. 2382) granting a pension to Alice Kelley.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Alice Kelley, a volunteer nurse during the late war, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The report (by Mr. SWOPE) is as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2382) granting a pension to Alice Kelley, submit the following report;

The report of the Senate Committee on Pensions, which is hereto attached, sets forth fully the facts in this case. In addition, your committee annex a complete statement of the case by Mrs. H. A. B. Corts, secretary Army Nurses' Association, and recommend the passage of the bill, amended so as to read "and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month."

The claimant, Alice Kelley, was for nearly four years engaged as a nurse in the field hospitals of the Army of the Potomac. During the last year of her service she attended the sick seamen at the navy-yard. For all of this time she never received any compensation whatever from the Government. She was associated with Miss Harriet Fanning Read, a well known army nurse, who says of her:

"Without her companionship I could not have been in the field; she was unfailing in zeal, sympathy, and industry."

She also states:

"She was with me as my personal attendant for three years of the war, receiving no pay from the Government; serving at Harrison's Landing in the summer of 1862; at Sharpsburg, Md., after the battle of Antietam, at Fredericksburg, at Chancellorsville, at second Fredericksburg, and in the campaign of the Peninsula in 1864, rendering also, when in this city, continual services to soldiers and to the sailors of the Washington navy-yard."

The evidence in the papers before your committee shows that this lady was a well-known hospital worker, for a long time attached to the Fifth Corps hospital, nursing the sick and wounded at the front, and remained a constant attendant until the abandonment of the general hospital, or about that time. The severe and arduous labors performed by her have seriously affected her health, and your committee are of the opinion that she is entitled to the same pension which has been accorded to many others who have rendered the same class of service. Since Miss Read's death, who was her firm friend, this poor nurse has been living in this city, an object of charity and supported by persons who are of no kin to her and under no obligation to assist her beyond the common impulse to help a poor, broken down, and helpless woman. She is unable to work, and must continue to subsist on charity, unless the Government, whose brave soldiers she tended so carefully, shall help her. We append the following letter from the kind lady, well known in this city, who has sheltered this deserving old lady for many years from motives of simple charity and humanity:

1235 PENNSYLVANIA AVENUE,
Washington, D. C., May 17, 1886.

To the honorable Pension Committee:

I would most earnestly recommend to your kind consideration the case of Mrs. Alice Kelley, whom I have known most favorably for the last eighteen or twenty years. To my personal knowledge she served as a volunteer nurse in the Union Army throughout the war, rendering most valuable service in camp and hospital as aid to Miss Harriet Fanning Read, who also was a volunteer nurse, and who was well known for her great devotion and able services to the United States Army, of which she formed, as it were, a part, being the niece and adopted daughter of an officer of note, Captain Fanning.

It was through Miss Read that I became acquainted with her worthy aid, Alice Kelley. That estimable lady, Miss Read, was occupying a room in my house at the time of her death, which occurred in the year 1875, since which time Alice Kelley has been suffered to remain in that same room solely out of consideration for her worthiness, lonely, destitute condition, and feeble health, for exposure on the battle-field had deprived her of the strength and ability necessary to the earning of even a subsistence. She had been so devoted in her services to the sick soldiers in the camp as even to take exclusive charge of some of the most malignant cases of small-pox, and all, be it remembered, without even the thought of any compensation. This noble woman is now growing aged, her feebleness is increasing daily; she could not long be a pensioner on the bounty of her country; but if her few remaining years could be made more comfortable by a feeling of independence and the knowledge that at last her services had been recognized by those whom she had served so faithfully and so well in their time of need, then would both justice and charity have been satisfied.

Most respectfully,

MARGUERITE M. DELARUE.

Your committee, after a careful consideration of all the facts, report back the bill with a recommendation that it do pass.

An amendment recommended by the Committee on Invalid Pensions striking out "twenty-five" before the word "dollars," and inserting "twelve" was agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

MARY ANN VARS.

Mr. SPOONER. I call up the bill (S. 1570) granting a pension to Mary Ann Vars.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Mary Ann Vars, widow of Frank A. Vars, late master's mate on the United States steamer Reliance.

The report (by Mr. LOVERING) is as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred Senate bill 1570, respectfully report that they have had the same under consideration, and, adopting the accompanying Senate report as their own, report back the bill and recommend its passage.

[Senate Report No. 640, Forty-ninth Congress, first session.]

It appears that Frank A. Vars, husband of the claimant, was appointed by Herman Biggs, assistant quartermaster, U. S. A., as first mate of the propeller Reliance, December 2, 1861. He was afterwards appointed by General Burnside master's mate of the same steamer. He served from December, 1861, until some time about June, 1862, when he was taken sick and was obliged to leave the service, having taken part, in the meantime, in the battles of Roanoke Island and New-Berne.

The evidence seems to be conclusive that Mr. Vars died from the effects of disease contracted in the service of the United States. The claim was rejected by the Pension Office on the technical ground that he was not actually mustered into the Navy of the United States; but as the fact of the service, and of death as the result therefrom, are clearly proven, they seem to furnish good grounds for granting the relief sought, and your committee therefore recommend the passage of the bill.

The following official documents are hereto appended as clearly setting forth the service of Mr. Vars:

QUARTERMASTER'S OFFICE, COAST DIVISION,
New York City, December 2, 1861.

Mr. F. A. Vars is appointed first mate of the propeller Reliance, and will report for duty to Captain Fenner.

HERMAN BIGGS,
Assistant Quartermaster. United States Army.

Reported December 9, 1861. Pay due from said date.

JOHN SHELD, Clerk.

HEADQUARTERS COAST DIVISION,
New York, December 5, 1861.

F. A. VARS:

You are hereby informed that you are appointed master's mate of the United States transport vidette Reliance, attached to this division, the appointment to take effect from December 9, 1861, on your taking the inclosed oath before the assistant adjutant-general of this division.

By command of General Burnside.

LEWIS RICHMOND,
Assistant Adjutant-General.

Oath taken before me.

LEWIS RICHMOND,
Assistant Adjutant-General.

STATE OF ——,
County of New York, ss:

George R. Hull, being sworn, says:

I well knew Frank A. Vars, who was a master's mate on United States vidette Reliance; I knew him while in the service, and of his sickness, which originated about June 1, 1862, and was the cause of his leaving the service of the United States. At the time I was master of the United States transport Ocean Bird, and I brought him to New York in that vessel; I was stationed on the North Carolina station; I am every way a disinterested witness; I reside in New York.

GEO. R. HULL,
Late Captain United States Transport Ocean Bird.

Subscribed and sworn to this 12th day of February, A. D. 1870, before me, and I certify that the affiant is respectable, entitled to full credit, and that I am every way disinterested.

[SEAL.]

MICHAEL PHILLIPS,
Notary Public, New York City and County.

STATE OF NEW YORK,
City and County of New York, ss:

I, Charles E. Loew, clerk of the city and county of New York, and also clerk of the supreme court for the said city and county, being a court of record, do hereby certify that Michael Phillips, before whom the annexed deposition was taken, was at the time of taking the same a notary public of New York, dwelling in said city and county, duly appointed and sworn and authorized to administer oaths to be used in any court in said State and for general purposes, and that his signature thereto is genuine, as I verily believe.

In testimony whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the seal of the said court and county, the 14th day of February, 1870.

[SEAL.]

CHAS. E. LOEW, Clerk.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Mr. Chairman, I wish to ask the gentleman having this bill in charge what was the nature of the service of the mates, as I am not sufficiently familiar with the naval service to be certain about it; could they leave the service at any time they desired?

Mr. SPOONER. I do not so understand it. This man had a regular appointment, which appears among the documents appended to the report.

Mr. MCMILLIN. If he were a mere civil employé——

Mr. SPOONER. He was not.

Mr. MCMILLIN. If he were a mere civil employé, with the right to leave the service at any time he chose, I should very seriously doubt the propriety of this pension, because when men prefer to remain out of that form of service which binds them for a specific term and to take their chances, they have no claim to be treated as if they had been bound.

Mr. LONG. He was regularly enlisted in the naval service.

Mr. McMILLIN. But for what length of time? That is what I am trying to get at. Was there a specified time during which he could not leave the service?

Mr. LONG. Oh, yes. He was in the service regularly.

Mr. McMILLIN. Then why is he not entitled to a pension under the general law?

Mr. SPOONER. He was just as much enlisted in the service as a soldier in the army.

Mr. McMILLIN. Then why, I ask, is he not entitled to a pension under the general law?

Mr. SPOONER. The only reason stated in the report is that it was because, owing to an error, he was not mustered in. The documents bring out that fact very clearly.

Mr. McMILLIN. I should like to have some document read throwing light upon that.

Mr. SPOONER. I will ask the Clerk to read the letter of appointment.

The Clerk read as follows:

HEADQUARTERS COAST DIVISION,
New York, December 5, 1861.

F. A. VARS:

You are hereby informed that you are appointed master's mate of the United States transport vidette Reliance, attached to this division, the appointment to take effect from December 9, 1861, on your taking the inclosed oath before the assistant adjutant-general of this division.

By command of General Burnside.

LEWIS RICHMOND,
Assistant Adjutant-General.

Oath taken before me.

LEWIS RICHMOND,
Assistant Adjutant-General.

Mr. McMILLIN. My attention was diverted from the reading of the report for a moment, and hence I may not have caught it all; but if the report shows the reason why this man was not mustered into the service, I failed to hear it. It may have been his choice not to be mustered. The report, I think, does not negative the idea that he declined to be mustered in. If he did so decline, then he would not be entitled to a pension.

Mr. SPOONER. The whole tenor of the report shows that the fact he was not mustered in was simply owing to a technical accident.

Mr. McMILLIN. But there is nothing to show that that technicality was not his preference. That is the difficulty.

Mr. SPOONER. He acted in this capacity and incurred a fatal disease in the service. The appointment is set out here in full, and, as is shown in the report, it was only on the technical ground of the absence of mustering in that his claim to a pension was rejected.

Mr. McMILLIN. And he was discharged for the disability, was he?

Mr. SPOONER. I so understand it.

Mr. LONG. It appears by the affidavit of the adjutant-general that this man was appointed December 9, 1861. Then comes the affidavit of the captain, who says that he knew him while in the service; knew of his sickness, which originated about June 1, 1862 (nine months after his appointment), and which was the cause of his leaving the service. Then the report says that the claim was rejected by the Pension Office on the technical ground that the man was not actually mustered in; but as the facts are clearly established that he was in the service, that he incurred sickness in the service, and that his death was the result of the sickness so incurred, there seems to be pretty good grounds for a pension.

Mr. McMILLIN. It seems to be established that a letter of appointment was sent and was received by him, and that he did serve, but he never was mustered in, and except one affidavit there is nothing showing that the disability was incurred in the line of duty.

Mr. LONG. The captain swears that he knew him while in the service, and knew of his sickness, which was the cause of his leaving the service.

Mr. McMILLIN. I had not noticed that.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

LAWRENCE O'CONNER.

Mr. MURPHY. I call up for consideration the bill (H. R. 10262) granting a pension to Lawrence O'Conner.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Lawrence O'Conner, father of Richard O'Conner, late of Company I, Twenth-sixth Iowa Volunteers.

The report (by Mr. CONGER) was read, as follows:

Lawrence O'Conner is the father of Richard O'Conner, who was a private in Company I, Twenty-sixth Regiment Iowa Volunteers, enlisting August 12, 1862, and dying in Andersonville prison, Georgia, while a prisoner of war, February 28, 1865. The mother of the soldier died March 9, 1861. The claim of the father for pension was rejected by the Pension Office because he "was physically and financially able to support himself and family at date of soldier's death." But the proof is conclusive that he is now very poor, seventy-seven years old, and physically helpless.

Your committee, therefore, follow their uniform custom in such cases, and recommend that the bill do pass.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with a recommendation that it do pass.

ANNA WRIGHT.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I call up the bill (S. 2210) granting a pension to Anna Wright.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place the name of Anna Wright, dependent mother of Silas Wright, late a private in Company A, Twenty-third New Jersey Volunteers, on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws.

The report (by Mr. PIDCOCK) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2210) granting a pension to Anna Wright, adopt the report of Mr. SEWELL, from the Senate Committee on Pensions, which is as follows, and recommend the passage of the bill:

Silas Wright was a private in Company A, Twenty-third New Jersey Volunteers, and died in hospital at Washington, D. C., on May 24, 1863, from wounds received in action at Salem Heights, Virginia, on May 3, 1863.

The papers in the case show that during his term of service this soldier sent his pay to Anna Wright, his dependent mother and the claimant herein. Mr. George Rigg, for many years the collector of taxes in Burlington, makes return that Mrs. Wright was possessed of no real or personal property.

Margaret Giberson and Rebecca Cooper, neighbors and friends, testify that the household effects of the claimant do not exceed in value $35; also, that of their own personal knowledge the son, Silas Wright, sent money to his mother during the term of his service, until his death. John C. Reed, a comrade in the same company with the said Silas Wright, testifies that he personally knew of the claimant's son sending his pay, when received, to her.

Samuel Minnick, an employer at different times of the claimant's son, makes affidavit that of his own knowledge the son took his wages, when he received them, to his parents or spent them for their benefit. The same witness further testifies that the husband of the claimant was not able to furnish her a comfortable support from 1860 to 1864, inclusive, and still less able since that time to the present, owing to increasing years and infirmities. Charles S. King, an employer of the husband, George Wright, states that for some time the said George Wright was employed by him, receiving about a dollar a day when he was working, but for many years has been incapacitated for work.

Your committee are of the opinion that this claim is a valid one, and that the claimaint, now over seventy-eight years of age, is entitled to a pension. They therefore recommend the passage of the bill.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with a recommendation that it do pass.

ELIZABETH FORGEY.

Mr. DOCKERY. I ask the consideration of the bill (S. 1825) granting a pension to Elizabeth Forgey.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Elizabeth Forgey, widow of James A. Forgey, late of Company H, Twenty-ninth Regiment of Iowa Volunteers, who was pensioned by special act of Congress approved March 3, 1875.

The report (by Mr. MORRILL) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1825) granting a pension to Elizabeth Forgey, submit the following report:

The claimant in this case is the widow of James A. Forgey, late of Company H, Twenty-ninth Regiment of Iowa Volunteers. By a special act approved March 3, 1875, this soldier was granted a pension for disease contracted in the service. It is clearly shown that the soldier died from the effects of the disease for which he was pensioned. There is no reason why the widow should not be granted the same relief which her husband received.

Your committee therefore recommend that the bill do pass.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with a recommendation that it do pass.

JAMES SMITHPETER.

Mr. FUNSTON. I call up for present consideration the bill (H. R. 752) granting a pension to James Smithpeter.

The bill was read, as follows:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of James Smithpeter, late of the East Tennessee Union service.

The Clerk proceeded to read the report. Before the reading was concluded——

Mr. FUNSTON said: I ask that the certificates embodied in the report be omitted, and only the conclusion read.

Mr. WISE. To save further consumption of time, I will say I object to this bill. This is the case of a man who was always going to get into the service, but never did get there.

Mr. PERKINS. I wish the gentleman from Virginia, before objecting, would permit a moment's explanation of the bill.

Mr. WISE. Certainly; if the right to object be reserved.

Mr. TAULBEE. Will the gentleman in charge of the bill [Mr. FUNSTON] allow me one question, which may obviate some trouble? Is he convinced of this man's loyalty?

Mr. FUNSTON. Certainly; for there is every evidence of it that can be necessary to convince any one.

Mr. TAULBEE. I asked the question because I did not hear the whole of the report read.

Mr. PERKINS. I hope the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WISE], who has made the objection, will give attention to one moment's explanation. I am personally acquainted with this man. I know him to be crippled and disabled, as represented in the report. He was engaged in organizing a company to be mustered into the Thirteenth Tennessee Regiment when he received these wounds or injuries, in consequence of which he could not be mustered into the service. Hence, under the general law, he can not be pensioned; and the only relief there is for him is by special legislation. Yet he was engaged in organizing a company, in recruiting men for the military service of the United States; and while so engaged he received these injuries from enemies of the Government. Under these circumstances, many of us think he should be pensioned, as others have been pensioned in similar cases.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I hope the rest of the report will be read, so that we may know whether there is any evidence of the facts besides the man's own statement.

Mr. PERKINS. There are a number of affidavits.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. We have had thus far only his own affidavit that he was going to do so and so.

The Clerk continued the reading of the report.

Mr. PERKINS (interrupting the reading). The affidavit which the Clerk is now reading is substantially the same as the first affidavit which was read, and there are printed in the record the affidavits of two more persons. In addition to this, I suggested to the parties interested in prosecuting this claim that they had better send to Tennessee and obtain the evidence of the family in which this man was nursed and cared for during the period following the receipt of his injuries. Those affidavits did not come to the committee until after this report was made, but they were received and were delivered to my colleague [Mr. MORRILL], who is on that committee. I think the case is certainly a meritorious one, and there can be no question about the reception of these injuries.

Mr. WISE. As this case stands I shall have to object to it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WISE] objects to the further consideration of the bill. It will be passed over informally, retaining its place.

ELIZABETH RICE.

Mr. ELDREDGE. I call up for present consideration the bill (H. R. 2216) for the relief of Mrs. Elizabeth Rice.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Mrs. Elizabeth Rice, of Canandaigua, Mich.

The report (by Mr. ELDREDGE) was read, as follows:

The bill is to grant a pension to Mrs. Elizabeth Rice, as the dependent mother of Horace F. Rice, late her son, who died in the military service of the United States.

The military service of her son was as follows: In August, 1861, he enlisted in the Seventh Michigan Infantry, a regiment that performed more fighting than any regiment that ever left the State, and served out his time of enlistment, and then re-enlisted as a veteran volunteer, February 19, 1864; was transferred to Veteran Reserve Corps in January, 1865, from which he was discharged on surgeon's certificate of disability June 24, 1865. August 14, 1866, he re-enlisted in Battery B, Fourth United States Artillery, and died July 15, 1867.

His mother made application for a pension August 14, 1877, which claim was rejected upon the grounds that her son was not in the line of duty when he received the injury that caused his death.

The records of the War Department show that he died from compression of brain, the consequence of a fall from his horse, and that he never spoke after the accident occurred, and that he died in the post hospital eight or ten days after the fall.

The proofs show that on the morning of the accident he came off duty as guard; that he had a pass to go to Ogden, and permission from competent military authority to ride a Government horse to Ogden and back, and that while returning to his command the horse became frightened at a drove of steers which he met and threw him off, by which the fatal injury was received.

Your committee are fully of the opinion that this soldier was completely and absolutely in the line of duty when the accident occurred which resulted in his death.

It has been repeatedly decided by the House that a soldier absent from his command upon proper authority and returning to his command within terms and life of his pass, receiving pensionable injuries, was within the line of his duty.

Supposing in this instance, the pass having been for a given time, which relieves a soldier from duty during the period for which it is given, he had returned to his command, and the injury which caused his death had occured in camp, and before the expiration of his pass, would it be claimed by the Pension Department that the injury which caused the death was received while not in the line of duty? The proofs show that the claimant, Mrs. Rice, is quite indigent, and was dependent upon this son for support.

Your committee recommend the passage of the bill.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with a recommendation that it do pass.

LIEUT. JAMES MORTON.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I ask the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 942) granting a pension to Lieut. James Morton.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Lieut. James Morton, of Greenup County, Kentucky, a soldier of the war of 1861.

The amendment reported by the committee was read, as follows:

Strike out, at the end of the bill, the words "Lieut. James Morton, of Greenup County, Kentucky, a soldier of the war of 1861," and insert "James Morton, late lieutenant Company F, Twenty-second Regiment Kentucky Volunteers."

Mr. WADSWORTH. Since this report was made, Lieutenant Morton has died. I therefore move to amend the amendment of the committee so as to make it read, "Penelope Morton, widow of James Morton, late lieutenant, Company F, Twenty-second Regiment Kentucky Volunteers."

Mr. MCMILLIN. The report has not been read; let us hear it.

The report (by Mr. TAULBEE) was read, as follows:

James Morton was mustered into Company F, Twenty-second Kentucky Volunteers, January 10, 1862, and resigned February 18, 1863.

The claim was rejected by the Pension Office on the ground of no record, and that the disability did not make its appearance until after his resignation.

The claimant states: December, 1862, he was detailed for picket duty; that it rained all night, and he became thoroughly wet and chilled, and was forced to march next morning without breakfast, and that night slept on some palings taken from a fence to keep out of the water, and the following morning was chilled through and stiff, and caught a severe cold, which lasted until he arrived home. The alleged rheumatism did not make its appearance until a few days after his arrival home, which was in March, 1863.

Dr. Charles W. Secrest states that he became acquainted with claimant in 1857, and saw him up to his enlistment, and knows that he was an able-bodied man in every respect.

J. W. Fulton states that he was a physician in early life, and knows claimant was a sound man and free from rheumatism at enlistment.

W. J. Worthington, colonel of claimant's regiment, states that he knew claimant well prior to and at enlistment, and there was not a more robust man in the command until claimant contracted rheumatism near Vicksburg by exposure to almost continuous rain and having to lie on the damp ground without shelter, and adds that this claim is certainly a meritorious one.

F. C. Robb, adjutant of claimant's regiment, states that he has known claimant for about twenty-five years, and knows that he was a sound, stout, and healthy man when he entered the service, and believes his (claimant's) rheumatism was the result of exposure to bad weather while in the service.

Thomas Bush, comrade of claimant, states that—

"Claimant was very sick after the charge on Chickasaw Bluffs, and vomited a great deal. They were out in the swamps of Mississippi River without tents, and exposed to bad weather, and believes claimant's rheumatism resulted from said exposure."

John L. Goodman testifies that—

"When the claimant went into service he was uncommonly strong and healthy, and free from any disease; that in the latter part of December, 1862, the men had to lie on the wet ground while the army was moving from the mouth of the Yazoo River to Chickasaw Bayou, and on the day the charge was made claimant complained of sickness and looked sick; that he gave out during the charge and was compelled to lie down on the battlefield, and from that time on complained of being sick, claiming it to have been brought on by exposure and lying on the wet ground."

John Pratt, claimant's comrade, testifies that—

"At the charge on Chickasaw Bluffs claimant was taken sick, and affiant knows that it was in consequence of claimant being exposed to the weather."

A. S. Davis, another of claimant's comrades, testifies substantially as above.

Lieutenant Colonel Worthington states that claimant has never recovered from the rheumatism contracted during service, and is now hopelessly and permanently crippled.

Adjutant Robb states that since claimant came out of service he has been disabled by rheumatism.

J. W. Fulton, who in early life was a physician, states that he has seen the claimant off and on since his discharge, and that he has suffered continuously from rheumatism, first of an inflammatory character, and then chronic.

Dr. Secrest states that he saw the claimant in 1867, and he was then not able to help himself on account of rheumatism. Up to 1881 claimant was one-half disabled, and since that time he has been totally disabled until about six months ago, when claimant was able to go on crutches.

John Moran states that in June or July, 1863, he was working with the claimant, and claimant was then complaining of rheumatism in one of his legs, and had to quit work on account of said disease, and knows claimant has had it every year since.

Matthew P. Stewart states that he was at claimant's house in 1863 and claimant was then complaining of rheumatism, and was suffering from that disease. Affiant boarded with the claimant from 1864 to 1866 and knows claimant suffered from rheumatism more or less during the time he staid with him.

Voluminous testimony from the most influential and upright citizens in Greenup County, Kentucky, and Scioto County, Ohio, testify to claimant being a man of honor, standing high in the estimation of all to whom he is known; that claimant at one time possessed a large property, but has consumed it all on account of his disease, and while it lasted would not appeal to the Government for help, and a consideration of his claim would not only be appreciated by the claimant but by all the old soldiers in his community.

The claimant is well known to the Hon. W. H. WADSWORTH, member of the Forth-ninth Congress, who can say that the claimant is a deserving and reputable citizen.

Your committee, after an examination of the case, find the claim to be a meritorious one. They therefore recommend the passage of the bill, amended by striking out lines 6 and 7 and inserting in lieu thereof the words "of James Morton, late lieutenant Company F, Twenty-second Regiment Kentucky Volunteers.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Here is the affidavit of the attending physician showing the man is dead, which I ask to insert in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hears no objection.

The affidavit is as follows:

STATE OF KENTUCKY,
County of Greenup, ss:

In the pension claim No. 463248, of James Morton, late first lieutenant of Company F, Twenty-second Kentucky Infantry Volunteers.

Personally came before me, a justice of the peace in and for the aforesaid county and State, William Fergusson, a citizen of Hood's Run, in the county of Greenup and State of Kentucky, well known to me to be reputable and entitled to credit, and who, being duly sworn, declares in relation to the aforesaid case as follows:

That he is a practicing physican, and that he has been acquainted with said soldier for about four years, and that I did not know James Morton before enlistment. Have known him for four years; have been his family physician for three years, and have lived within 4 miles of him for five years; I know of soldier before enlistment; did not know him while in service; I treated claimant over two years; do not remember the date of first visit. When I first formed the acquaintance of claimant his physical condition was very bad, and remained so until death, with the exception of a few days at a time he would feel a little easier. Chronic rheumatism was my diagnosis in his case, and treated him for same, and from this disease he died September the 16th, 1886.

I conversed with other physicians in regard to his trouble, their diagnosis was the same. Since my first acquaintance with claimant he was never able to perform manual labor of any kind, he was totally disabled. Those that knew him tell me that he was unable to labor for years before.

He further declares that he has been a practioner of medicine for ten years, and that he has no interest, either direct or indirect, in the prosecution of this claim.

WM. FERGUSSON, M. D.

Sworn to and subscribed before me this 18th day of December, A. D. 188–, and I hereby certify that the affiant is a practicing physician in good professional standing; that the contents of the above declaration, &c., were fully made known to him before swearing, including the words erased, and the words added; and that I have no interest, direct or indirect, in the prosecution of this claim.

MARSHAL BAKER,
A Justice of the Peace for Greenup County, Kentucky.

I certify that Marshal Baker, esq., who hath signed his name to the foregoing affidavit, was at the time of so doing justice of the peace in and for said county and State, duly commissioned and sworn; that all his official acts are entitled to full faith and credit, and that his signature thereunto is genuine.

Witness my hand and seal of office, this 18th day of December, 1886.

[SEAL.] GEO. A. CERUM,
Clerk of the Greenup County Court.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I would like to ask the gentleman from Kentucky a question, whether at the time of his discharge he had contracted this disease in the service?

Mr. WADSWORTH. There is evidence that he had contracted this disease in the service, and that because of it he was unable to remain in the service.

Mr. MCMILLIN. It seems the affliction did not occur until after he reached home.

Mr. WADSWORTH. He suffered from rheumatism, which was the result of his exposure, lying in the swamps, which disabled him before he left the Army.

Mr. MCMILLIN. No surgeon of the Army testifies he was sick.

Mr. TAULBEE. His adjutant and captain do so testify.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Colonel Worthington testifies to it. I knew this man for many years as a large and healthy man.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I have no doubt of his healthy condition when he entered the Army.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I am advised it is best to drop out the words "and John, minor child."

Mr. LONG. That provides for leaving the pension to the widow.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes.

Mr. MCMILLIN. What is the rate?

Mr. WADSWORTH. It is a widow's pension.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I move that the bill as amended be laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

Mr. TAULBEE. I move to amend the title to agree with the amendment to the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. That will be done in the House after the bill has passed.

MRS. M. E. WOODS.

On motion of Mr. FREDERICK, by unanimous consent, a bill (S. 2997) granting a pension to Mrs. M. E. Woods was taken up and read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the name of Mrs. M. E. Woods, of Fairfield, Iowa, who served as a hospital nurse and sanitary agent from 1862 to the close of the war of the rebellion, and pay her a pension at the rate of $25 a month.

The report (by Mr. CONGER) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2997), having given the same due consideration, report that they find the facts very fully set forth in the report of the Senate Committee on Pensions, which they herewith adopt as their own, make part of this report, and recommend the passage of the bill, with the following amendments:

Strike out the word "twenty-five," in the last line, and insert "twelve."

That Mrs. M. E. Woods is shown by the proofs submitted to the committee to have been the agent of the Women's Soldiers' Aid Society of Fairfield, Iowa, an organization devoted to the relief of soldiers of the Union Army, and devoted her entire time to the duties of her position from about the beginning of 1862 until the close of the war of the rebellion; that she acted as nurse in hospitals and in the field, and as sanitary agent in the distribution of stores collected for the use of the soldiers in hospitals and in the field; that it appears from the proofs that she was an exceptionally faithful, efficient, and self-sacrificing worker in the service to which she devoted her time; that this was recognized by the Government by granting to her, in February, 1863, when the order of General Grant practically excluded all persons not in the military service from the lines of the Army, a pass, including transportation, over all railroad and steamboat lines in the Department of the Southwest, in order that she might pursue the work to which she devoted her entire time; that she did all of the service rendered by her without fee or compensation, refusing all pay, and expending of her own personal means whatsoever was necessary to provide for her expenses; that by her unremitting service, her exposure and overtaxing exertions, her health became permanently injured, and for years and is now in a very precarious condition; that she never was the possessor of any considerable estate, and what she had has been greatly reduced within the past few months; that she is now more than seventy-two years of age, in very feeble health, and can at most enjoy such recognition of her patriotic services as this bill proposes but a few years, nor to the extent of her own voluntary contributions of time and money to the service of the country. Hers is a case which in every respect deserves recognition by the Government whose defenders she so devotedly and unselfishly served.

Your committee therefore report the bill with a recommendation that it be passed.

The amendment of the committee was agreed to; and the bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

JESSE H. STRICKLAND.

On motion of Mr. JAMES, a bill (S. 1493) for the relief of Jesse H. Strickland was taken up and read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Jesse H. Strickland, formerly acting colonel of the Eighth Regiment of Tennessee Cavalry, United States Volunteers, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The amendment of the committee was read, as follows:

Strike out all after word "volunteers," in the seventh line, and insert "and for the purpose of prosecuting a claim for pension, and for no other purpose, said Jesse H. Strickland shall be considered as having been duly commissioned and mustered as colonel of said regiment to date from the 30th day of January, A. D. 1863."

Mr. WISE. Let the report be read.

The report (by Mr. HAYNES) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1493) for the relief of Jesse H. Strickland, submit the following report:

The papers filed in this case may be considered as establishing the following facts:

That in January, 1863, Strickland received authority from the Government to recruit and organize a regiment of cavalry of loyal Tennesseeans. That he entered upon that duty and raised the Eighth Tennessee Cavalry (so named), but for some reason, which appears only in his own statement, was not mustered as colonel, although he performed the duties for months, and was recognized as such.

That in September, 1863, he was sick with intermittent fever, and was certified from time to time, from September 4 to September 19, as being unfit for duty, surgeon on last date expressing opinion that he would not be able for duty for several weeks. It is most reasonable to accept the statement that to his sickness and his inability to perform active service his failure to be commissioned was attributable.

Since 1868, as is established by competent medical evidence, he has been more or less disabled by lung trouble, rheumatism, typhoid pneumonia, hemorrhages, and nervous prostration. One other witness places these troubles as far back as 1865, and there is evidence that he was physically sound before entering upon his military duties.

The evidence filed is not such, in the judgment of this committee, as to warrant them in recommending a pension at any arbitrary or fixed rating. We are of opinion, however, that justice would be conserved by giving this claimant a legal standing to prosecute his claim in the Pension Office, and accordingly recommend that the Senate bill pass with the following amendment: Strike out all after word "volunteers," in the seventh line, and insert, "and for the purpose of prosecuting a claim for pension, and for no other purpose, said Jesse H. Strickland shall be considered as having been duly commissioned and mustered as colonel of said regiment, to date from the 30th day of January, A. D. 1863."

Brief of claim for invalid pension of Jesse H. Strickland.

This bill is to authorize the name of Col. Jesse H. Strickland to be placed on the pension-rolls of the Government.

The reason for asking a special act instead of proceeding by claim in the Pension Bureau is this:

During the civil war Mr. Strickland was a resident of the State of Tennessee, and was authorized by President Lincoln, through the War Office, to enlist a regiment of Tennessee troops for the United States service. Under this authority he did so proceed, and enlisted citizens and refugees of his State, in numbers finally aggregating seven or eight hundred men. Many months of time and much money was spent in this work. It was performed under promise of being commissioned as colonel, and the regiment was first designated as the Fifth, but afterward as the Eighth Tennessee Cavalry.

As men were mustered in, companies were formed and officers appointed, captains, majors, and finally a lieutenant-colonel. During all this time Mr. Strickland was regarded as a colonel, so designated in official orders, so obeyed when he was in command. As colonel he was in command of Convalescent Camp, at Camp Nelson, Kentucky, and as such his name was signed and respected in the Quartermaster's and Medical Departments. But, unfortunately for him, before the work was complete and he mustered into service, he was taken sick, and for months was under medical treatment, and from the diseases thus contracted in the line of his duty in the service of the United States he has never recovered.

While thus sick and under medical care, in the fall and winter of 1863, the presence of troops at the front was urgent, so that Andrew Johnson, then military governor of Tennessee, feeling that the public interests must override private rights, consolidated with the Eighth Tennessee Cavalry some two hundred recruits, obtained by S. V. K. Patten, appointed Patten to be colonel, thus completing the regiment, sending it to the field, and depriving the claimant of his right to be mustered as colonel.

Under these circumstances the Pension Office can not have jurisdiction of his pension claim, and he therefore asks pension by a special act of Congress. He herewith submits testimony to show his sickness in the service and continuously ever since. He is also asking of Congress a legal recognition of his right as colonel, and evidence of his service as such has been filed with the proper committee of the House of Representatives.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA,
County of Washington, ss:

In the matter of pension by special act, Jesse H. Strickland, late colonel Eighth Tennessee Cavalry, United States volunteers.

On the 30th day of January, 1863, authority was granted me by President Lincoln to recruit and organize a regiment of cavalry of loyal Tennesseeans for service in the Federal Army, and while recruiting and command of the said organization, and in the line of his duty at Camp Nelson, Kentucky, on or about the 1st of September, 1863, he contracted intermittent fever, and while convalescent went to Murfreesborough, Tenn., and thence to Nashville, Tenn., where he had a relapse of his disease, which terminated in typhoid fever and rheumatism, the former having resulted in lung complaint, hemorrhages, and general debility, and which, with rheumatism, have continually existed from time to time since leaving the service.

The applicant has resided in Tennessee, and is now a resident of Brooklyn, Kings County, New York, where he has resided for the past twenty years. That prior to his entry into the United States service he was a man of good sound physical health, his weight at that time being 175 pounds, and his present weight being 141 pounds. That he is now disabled from obtaining his subsistence by manual labor, by reason of his injuries above described, received in the service of the United States, and he therefore makes this declaration for the purpose of being placed on the pension-rolls of the United States.

Personally came before me Francis W. Strickland, a citizen of the town of Brooklyn, county of Kings, State of New York, well known to me to be reputable and entitled to credit, and who, being duly sworn, declares in relation to aforesaid case as follows:

I, Francis W. Strickland, late first lieutenant and commissary of subsistence Eighth Tennessee Cavalry, United States Volunteers, was with the said command at Camp Nelson, Kentucky, on or about May 12, 1863.

On or about November, 1863, on my return through Lexington, Ky., to Cincinnati, on furlough, I met the claimant, and he was suffering from the effects of an attack of typhoid fever and rheumatism and an injury sustained by his horse falling.

Previous to his entering the service he was a robust and healthy man, and ever since his discharge he has been in feeble health, and more or less disabled from the effects of the above diseases.

I have seen the claimant from time to time since his discharge from the military service, and the disability of rheumatism and the results of fever have continued from that time until the present, and he has been unable to perform manual labor.

That I have known claimant almost continuously for twenty-one years, from 1865 to the present time, 1885; I knew him to be by both report and official military documents that I have seen in his possession, colonel of the Eighth Regiment Tennessee Cavalry, United States Volunteers; I have seen him many times during the above period, in Nashville and Murfreesborough, Tenn., New York city, and Brooklyn, N. Y., and I have never known him to be a well or sound, healthy man; I know of his having typhoid fever, rheumatism, and lung trouble when I first became acquainted with him.

It has always been my conviction and belief that his broken-down health was caused by exposure and hardships incurred during his military service to the United States.

WALTER R. GILLETTE,

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. I wish to state to the committee, Mr. Chairman, that I do not stand as an obstruction, but on the contrary wish to see every soldier entitled to a pension for services rendered obtain it. I wish the committee to understand this, and then if it is disposed to grant this man a pension I am not going to call a quorum. I was a member of the same regiment he claims to be a colonel of. I helped to organize that regiment. I helped to enlist one hundred and fifty who went into the regiment. I went to the regiment at Camp Nelson, in Kentucky, the last of August, 1863. We were there mustered. I went with that regiment through Kentucky and Tennessee. It was the first regiment which ever entered the city of Knoxville. We were in the first Tennessee campaign. We went up to the siege of Knoxville. I staid with the regiment—about seven hundred men in it—until it was finally consolidated with the Tenth Regiment, making one regiment, and I never saw that man until I saw him in this city lobbying me to assist him. He never was with the regiment, never performed any service with the regiment.

Mr. WISE. Let me interrupt the gentleman a moment. I object to this bill. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The bill will be passed over.

THOMAS J. HAYS.

On motion of Mr. MCCREARY, by unanimous consent, the bill (H. R. 8798) granting a pension to Thomas J. Hays was taken up and read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the limitations and provisions of the pension laws, the name of Thomas J. Hays, of Rock Castle County, Kentucky, late a private in Company —, —— Regiment ——, and whose application in the Pension Office is numbered 352426.

Mr. WISE. Read the report.

The report (by Mr. TAULBEE) was read, as follows:

The applicant enlisted July 30, 1861, was discharged October 13, 1864, and filed his claim for pension March 9, 1880, alleging disease of lungs, resulting from a fever which he contracted about December 30, 1861, at Columbia, Ky.

The claim was rejected on the ground that there was no record of the alleged disease of lungs, and the claimant had stated his inability to furnish any medical testimony showing the existence of the same while he was in the service or at the date of his discharge.

The testimony filed in the claim is as follows:

N. B. Price, a comrade, testifies that the claimant was taken sick about December 30, 1861; was sent to a hospital, where he was furloughed and went home; that when he returned, in April, 1862, he complained of "a hurting in his breast, and was never able to do much duty afterward, and has been a weakly man ever since."

James C. Cummins, George W. and Chesley Payne testify substantially to the same.

B. H. and John G. Cummins and Jerome Price testify that the claimant was taken sick in December, 1861, and has been a weakly man since.

Eliza Prewitt and Josiah Cummins testify that the claimant had fever in 1861; afterward complained of his breast, and was treated by Drs. Owens and Turk; that since his discharge he has complained of his back and loins and weakness of nerves.

Dr. S. K. Rhover, assistant surgeon of the claimant's regiment, testifies that he (claimant) had a fever in December, 1861, for which he assisted in treating him until he partially recovered, when he was sent home on furlough; that he also treated him several times subsequently while in the service.

John Sorder testifies that the claimant came home in the spring of 1862; was very weakly; complaining of his back and loins and weakness of nerves, from which he has complained continuously since his discharge.

W. H. Cummins, A. J. Payne, Nehemiah Bloome, and W. L. Payne, neighbors, state that the claimant was at home on furlough in January, 1862, with fever; he complained of his breast, back, and loins, and was treated by Dr. Joplin, who is now dead; that he has continued to complain of these disabilities ever since his discharge.

The examining surgeon who examined the claimant November 14, 1883, states that "he has chronic bronchitis; that he complains of no pain, yet says he has a sense of uneasiness beneath the sternum; some cough exists; the expectoration is of a muco-purulent character; auscultation shows subcrepitant rales to be abundant over most of the left lung; rated at one-half total.

Your committee are of the opinion that the evidence in this case shows clearly that the claimant contracted a fever in 1861; that he had some affection of the chest following his convalescence, and that he has suffered therefrom since the date of his discharge. In view of the honorable term of service rendered by him, and the testimony on file, they believe this to be a meritorious case, and recommend that the bill do pass.

Mr. McCREARY. I move to insert in the blank the words "Company I, Third Regiment Kentucky Volunteers."

The amendment was agreed to; and the bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

STEPHEN D. SMITH.

Mr. GALLINGER called up the bill (S. 1494) granting an increase of pension to Stephen D. Smith.

The bill is as follows:

The report (by Mr. HAYNES) was read, as follows:

In addition to the Senate report, this committee has before it the affidavits of Doctors Valentine, Manahan, and Asa Wheat; also a statement by claimant. These indicate a diseased condition of stump, with great nervous troubles resulting therefrom. He suffers badly from spasms of what little stump there is, and has severe neuralgic attacks, which the physicians ascribe to his wound. It is clear that he is suffering disabilities far greater than the one for which he was pensioned, namely, loss of leg at hip. His condition very nearly, if not quite, approaches that for which the general law allows $50, and we recommend that the Senate bill be amended to fix his pension at that sum, and that as so amended it do pass.

The claimant, Stephen D. Smith, late private of Company C, Seventh New Hampshire Volunteers, was pensioned June 4, 1872, at the rate of $24 per month, which was increased August 5, 1882, to $37.50. He now asks that this be increased to $72.

This soldier suffered amputation at the hip-joint, which is continually sore, and subjects him to great pain. He also suffers from disease contracted in the service. From the joint effect of these results of his Army life he is unable to perform any labor, and has become a complete physical wreck. A part of the time he is able to move about, but generally is unable to sit up. Much of the time he is obliged to have an attendant besides his wife, who is in attendance upon him continuously.

He is also obliged to employ medical attendance many times a year, and has been compelled to do so ever since his discharge. The disability is practically the same as that for which the general law gives $72 per month. Your committee are not, however, willing to go quite to that extent, but think that an increase to $60 per month would be no more than justice requires.

Your committee therefore report back the bill and recommend that it do pass, with the following amendment: Strike out the words "seventy-two," in the seventh and eighth lines, and insert in lieu thereof the word "sixty."

Mr. WISE. Is it in order to move an amendment to the bill?

The CHAIRMAN. It is.

Mr. WISE. I am willing to vote to give this pensioner what we gave another under similar circumstances to-night.

Mr. LONG. How much?

Mr. WISE. Forty-five dollars. The name I have forgotten; but the statement was that it was an identically similar case with this, as far as helplessness is concerned. I make the motion, therefore, that this pension be fixed at $45 a month.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. Chairman, I trust the amendment will not be adopted. This man is now pensioned at the rate of $40 a month, which the general law allows. We have the testimony of the physicians and the neighbors of this man, all of which show that he is completely helpless, and that he is suffering the tortures of the inquisition with a stump which has never healed properly, and from which he suffers the most intense pains, so great indeed that he has been completely wrecked, broken down in health. He comes here requesting a pension of $72 a month. The Senate recommended $60 a month, and our committee, for the purpose of being very conservative, cut down the Senate pension to $50 a month, increasing his present pension only $10. I trust the gentleman from Virginia will allow the bill to go through as the committee recommend.

Mr. WISE. I want to make just one statement in regard to another claimant this evening. We were then told that the applicant was totally disabled; that he could not swallow, and the committee determined that $45 a month was all he should receive.

Mr. GALLINGER. But under the law that claimant was receiving much less than this man is.

Mr. WISE. It seems to me that, their disabilities being exactly the same, they should receive the same amount of pension.

Mr. GALLINGER. But this man suffers the most intense pain from his wound, and he has to employ medical attendance nearly all the time.

Mr. WISE. I will withdraw the amendment.

The amendment reported by the committee was agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

MOSES WILLIAMS.

The next pension business on the Private Calendar, called up by Mr. TAULBEE, was the bill (H. R. 9928) granting a pension to Moses Williams.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Moses Williams, late a private of the United States Marine Corps.

The report (by Mr. PIDCOCK) was read, as follows:

Williams enlisted in the United States Marine Corps June 24, 1873, and was discharged therefrom May 21, 1874, because of hernia of right side, incurred on the United States steamship St. Lawrence in September, 1873. The records of the Navy Department corroborate fully claimant's allegations as to the incurrence of the disability in line of duty, but the claim for pension has been rejected, because claimant, prior to his service aforesaid, served an enlistment in the confederate forces during the late war.

This action is in accordance with the provisions of section 4716, Revised Statutes, which forbids the payment of pension to any person who aided or abetted the late rebellion against the authority of the United States. On March 3, 1877, Congress, however, passed an act amending such section, so as to remove the disabilities of those referred to in said section who since the termination of the rebellion enlisted in the Army of the United States, and while in such service incurred disability in line of duty.

Under the construction given this act by the Pension Office subsequent service in the Navy, which includes the Marine Corps, and consequent incurrence of disability, do not remove the disability imposed upon those who participated in the rebellion by aforesaid section. This discrimination was evidently not intended by Congress, and until a remedy is applied no relief can be afforded in the case under consideration.

Claimant's disability is serious. A truss, however well adjusted, fails to keep the bowels intact, thus preventing him from performing manual labor to any extent.

Your committee are of opinion that the relief asked for should be granted, and therefore report favorably on the bill and ask that it do pass, amended, however, by striking out the words "in company," in line 6.

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. TAULBEE. Mr. Chairman, on last Friday night the gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. HAYNES], a member of the committee, came here and remained during the evening session in order that he might call up a bill which he had been managing at that time. I objected. To-night I find that his name is about the foot of the list, and as he will not probably be reached, I ask unanimous consent for him, as well as for myself, in order that justice may be done, that I may be allowed to withdraw my objection and he be recognized to take up that bill. I did not understand the case, when I objected, as fully as I do now.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. I suppose we ought to do that, since time enough has been spent by some of us in getting bills through.

Mr. TAULBEE. No time has been lost.

Mr. LONG. We are all waiting patiently to get bills through.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I object, and call for the regular order.

CHARLES G. PARIS.

The next business on the Calendar, called up by Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas, was the bill (S. 1673) granting a pension to Charles G. Paris.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Charles G. Paris, late of Company H, Seventy-ninth Regiment Ohio Infantry Volunteers.

The report (by Mr. MORRILL) is as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1673) granting a pension to Charles G. Paris, submit the following report:

The report of the Senate Committee on Pensions sets forth the facts in this case, and is hereby adopted, with the recommendation that the bill do pass.

[Senate Report No. 785, Forty-ninth Congress, first session.]

It appears from the records in this case that claimant enlisted and was mustered into the United States service on the 14th day of August, 1862, and was discharged March 24, 1863. Declaration for pension filed June 4, 1880, alleging injuries to eyes. Claim rejected March 2, 1885, on the ground that disability existed prior to enlistment.

Claimant's statement is substantiated by affidavits of commanding officers and his comrades, and the hospital records also show his statement to be correct.

Claimant's statements are further corroborated by the testimony of neighbors that he was free from disease of the eyes when he enlisted, and the fact that he was accepted and mustered into the service further substantiates his statement. Affidavits of neighbors are presented confirming the statement that his eyes were diseased when he returned from the army, and the reports of the special examiners and examining boards are to the effect that claimant now has disease of the eyes.

Taking into consideration all the evidence on file in this case, the committee believe it to be their duty to report in favor of this bill and recommend its passage.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

LEWIS M. STRONG.

The next pension business on the Private Calendar called up by Mr. ANDERSON, of Ohio, was the bill (H. R. 6918) to increase the pension of Lewis M. Strong.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Lewis M. Strong, late of Company K, Third Regiment Vermont Volunteers, now a pensioner, at the rate of $40 per month.

The report (by Mr. HAYNES) was read, as follows:

Strong was a private in Company K, Third Vermont Regiment. At the battle of the Wilderness, May 5, 1864, he received a gunshot wound in the right knee, producing a comminuted fracture. He was in hospital for ten or eleven months, when, rather than join the Invalid Corps, he returned to his regiment, arriving in time to join in the final assault upon the enemy's works in front of Petersburg, and in a charge made on the 2d day of April, 1865, his left leg was shot away below the knee.

He is pensioned at the rate of $30 a month for loss of left leg, but as his combined disabilities are not sufficient to entitle him to the fifty-dollar grade, the department can not allow his claim for increase.

Dr. Erastus P. Fairbanks expresses the opinion that Strong's wooden leg is decidedly his best leg. The right leg is left with false anchylosis of the joint and a very large bony protuberance upon the external condyle, and tuberosity, causing him great pain, swelling, and suffering whenever he uses it even for an hour or two. Dr. Fairbanks does not believe Strong could walk 2 miles if his life was to pay the forfeit in case of failure.

There is no intermediate grade between his present and the fifty-dollar rating to which the Pension Office has any authority to raise his pension; but your committee think the rating provided in the bill is not more than he is fairly and equitably entitled to, and accordingly recommend its passage.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

MRS. S. C. GOODIN.

The next business on the Private Calendar (called up by Mr. CONGER) was the bill (H. R. 10470) granting a pension to Mrs. S. C. Goodin.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the limitations and provisions of the pension laws, the name of Mrs. S. C. Goodin, and pay her a pension as the dependent mother of William W. Goodin, Company F, Eighth Regiment Iowa Cavalry; the pension to date from and after the passage of this act.

The report (by Mr. CONGER) is as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred House bill 10470, having considered the same, report:

Mrs. S. C. Goodin is the dependent mother of William M. Goodin, late a private of Company F, Eighth Regiment Iowa Cavalry Volunteers, who was killed in battle at Powder Springs, June 20, 1864. Mrs. Goodin's claim for pension was rejected by the Pension Office because of non-dependence at time of soldier's death. But the proof is clear and positive that she is in poverty now, and clearly comes within the former recommendations of this committee, and within the provisions of the general bill recently passed by the House of Representatives.

Your committee therefore return the bill, with the recommendation that it do pass.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

DR. SABIN STOCKING.

The next business on the Private Calendar (called up by Mr. SEYMOUR) was the bill (H. R. 9143) granting a pension to Dr. Sabin Stocking.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Dr. Sabin Stocking, who was formerly surgeon of the Seventeenth Regiment Connecticut Volunteers, in the late war, from and after the passage of this act.

Amend the title so as to read: "A bill granting a pension to Sabin Stocking."

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that the report in this case is a very lengthy one and will occupy much time to read.

Mr. SEYMOUR. If the Clerk will read from about the middle of the fourth page, and then the conclusions of the committee, I believe the statements embodied will be satisfactory to the Committee and will obviate the reading of the report.

Mr. LONG. Can not the gentleman state the case briefly?

Mr. SEYMOUR. It is stated there in a very concise way.

The Clerk read as follows.

There are twelve or more affidavits of persons who were acquainted with Surgeon Stocking and who testified to the same general effect, but it is unnecessary to repeat their testimony in this report. They show conclusively that before the war he was sound and well, that during the war he incurred disabilities, and that since the war he has been a physical wreck.

After the testimony, a part of which has been given in this report, had been presented, the Pension Office sent out a special examiner, who cross-examined most of the persons who had given testimony in the case touching their evidence.

When he had substantially concluded his labors he made a report to the Commissioner of Pensions dated June 30, 1883, of which the following is a copy of the closing statement:

"So certain does it appear to me that his claim is meritorious that I submit the case for admission, deeming further inquiry at Bridgeport, Conn., and vicinity, needless."

The same examiner, after additional inquiry in regard to the case, under date of September 24, 1883, made another report on this case, of which the following is an extract:

"I see no reason to change my opinion expressed in my former report to the effect that the claim be allowed. The witnesses described are reliable generally. Claimant was a patriot and did valiant service as surgeon. He has been a total wreck for years from divers afflictions, such as very weak eyesight, rheumatism, malaria, and general unsoundness. It does seem to me he is entitled to something for some of these ills on the ground that they originated in service."

The Pension Office caused Surgeon Stocking to be examined before the board of examining surgeons of the United States on November 15, 1882.

The concluding portion of their report is as follows:

"From the condition and history of the claimant it is our opinion the disability was incurred in the service, as claimed, and that it is not aggravated or protracted by vicious habits. We find the disability as above described to entitle him to seven-ninths total third rating.

"GEORGE C. PARVIS, M. D.,
"H. S. FULLER, M. D.,
"C. W. CHAMBERLAIN, M. D.,
"Examining Surgeons."

After some further testimony in the case he was again ordered before the said board on June 29, 1883. The concluding part of the report of this examination was as follows:

"He has no useful vision left; he can not read. As far as earning a living is concerned he is totally blind. The defective vision is the result of disease; it would result from overheat. It is not necessarily any of it due to old age. Disability five-ninths total third grade. Were he younger he would be rated higher on the whole disability. From the condition and history of the claimant it is our opinion the disability was incurred in the service, as claimed, and that it is not aggravated by vicious habits. We find the disability as above described to entitle him to total third grade."

He was again ordered before said board. In their report of this examination they arrived at precisely the same conclusion as before, and after describing in technical language his eyes, they say that—

"This condition of the eyes is the result of disease rather than old age; it might be caused by sunstroke or overheat."

In this examination they find him entitled to a total third-grade rating. On March 10, 1886, Surgeon Stocking was ordered before a new board of medical examiners. The concluding portion of the report of this examination was as follows:

"He is, in our opinion, entitled to a second-grade rating (for he is unable to perform any manual labor) for the disability caused by nearly complete loss of sight, and no rating for that caused by rheumatism, and no rating caused by paralysis of the right leg, and malarial poisoning.

"EVELYN L. BISSELL, Secretary.
"E. T. BRADSTREET, Treasurer."

These reports of special examiners and Government surgeons are all favorable to the claim of Surgeon Stocking. This patriotic man and faithful surgeon has lost his health, and consequently his ability to earn a living, in the service of his country. The evidence adduced in the case justified the special examiners and surgeons appointed by the Government in the conclusions they have reached. It is but just that a man who at fifty-five years of age, and at the height of his success as a physician of extensive practice, gave his services to the Government, and who lost his health, becoming crippled and almost blind in that service, should be compensated for what he has lost, and in his old age made good for the sacrifices he made for his country.

Your committee add their opinion to the opinion of the examiners and surgeons of the Government in favor of this claim, and recommend the passage of the accompanying bill with the following amendments:

Strike out the word "doctor," in the sixth line of the bill; also in the title the word "doctor."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

MRS. ALMIRA AMBLER.

Mr. BUCK. I call up for consideration the bill (S. 2159) granting a pension to Mrs. Almira Ambler.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to place the name of Mrs. Almira Ambler, a volunteer nurse in the late war, on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, and pay her the sum of $25 per month from and after the passage of this act.

The Committee on Invalid Pensions recommended the following amendment:

In line 7, strike out "$25" and insert "$12."

The report (by Mr. LOVERING) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2159) granting a pension to Almira Ambler, have had the same under consideration, and adopting the Senate report as its own, report the bill back to the House with the following amendment, and recommend its passage:

Strike out the words "twenty-five" in the fifth line of the bill and substitute therefor the word "twelve;" so that it will read as amended, "and pay her the sum of $12 per month," &c.

The Senate report is as follows:

Almira Ambler is the wife of Rev. Edward C. Ambler, who was chaplain of the Sixty-seventh Pennsylvania Volunteers. Both husband and wife are now old, in feeble health, and poor.

Mrs. Ambler, visiting her husband at the camp of the Sixty-seventh Pennsylvania Regiment, in the city of Philadelphia, in the year 1861, found thirteen very sick soldiers; her sympathies being enlisted, she, at the solicitation of the surgeon, undertook to care for them. Quarters were assigned to her, and during that whole fall and winter she spent her whole time in caring for the sick of the regiment, sometimes numbering as many as thirty. In the spring the regiment was ordered to Annapolis, whither she went with it, and there, for the space of nearly three years, spent her whole time in the hospital, nursing the sick and caring for them in every way.

She received no compensation. She expended in her work of love and mercy as much as $500 of her own money. She visited Washington six times and obtained comforts for the sick and wounded, and in every way in which her sympathetic nature could suggest became the benefactor of sick and wounded soldiers.

Her labors were performed under the direction of Dr. Vanderleift, in charge of the hospitals at Annapolis.

Probably no more touching instance of self-denial and sacrifice is to be found among the whole list of noble women who did so much to alleviate the sufferings and preserve the lives of soldiers in hospitals. All this is shown by the unsolicited letters written her by officers and privates to whom she administered.

In view of the precedents which have been established, paying pensions to volunteer nurses, the committee recommend the passage of the bill.

The amendment was adopted.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

MRS. JULIA DE QUINDRE.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I call up for consideration the bill (S. 2451) for the relief of Mrs. Julia De Quindre.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, at $25 per month, the name of Julia De Quindre, for services as nurse during the war of the rebellion, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws.

The Committee on Invalid Pensions recommended the following amendment:

In line 4, strike out "$25" and insert "$12."

The report (by Mr. LOVERING) was read, as follows:

The Senate, at the first session of this Congress, passed a bill granting a pension to claimant for $25 per month.

From an examination of the papers now on file in this case and the nature of the services rendered as a nurse your committee concur in the Senate report, with the following amendment: Strike out the word "twenty-five" and insert the word "twelve" in lieu thereof, and recommend that the bill as so amended do pass.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Are there any facts stated in the Senate report as to the services of this nurse?

The CHAIRMAN. There is a long statement appended to the Senate report.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I will make a brief statement as to this case Mrs. De Quindre is a Detroit lady, now resident in this city. She entered the service of the army in the summer of 1862 as a volunteer nurse, and served from that time till the end of the war, at Chester hospital, Pennsylvania, and at Baltimore, and was for a long time in charge of one of the wards in the Armory Square hospital in this city. She served without pay. When she came here she had a small competence of her own, the whole of which she expended for the benefit of the Union soldiers in the hospital in this city. She is now alone in the world, is without means, and without any relatives on whom she can depend for assistance. The Senate passed the bill allowing a pension of $25. The House committee have cut that down to $12.

The amendment was adopted.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

GEORGE W. DE MOTTE.

Mr. PETERS. I call up for consideration the bill (S. 791) granting a pension to George W. De Motte.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c. That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of George W. De Motte, late of Company K, Fifty-third Illinois Volunteers.

The report (by Mr. LOVERING) was read, as follows:

The committee, after an examination of the papers submitted in this claim, adopt the following Senate report, and recommend the passage of the bill:

[Senate Report No. 599, Forty-ninth Congress, first session.]

The committee, in their investigation of this case, find that the claimant enlisted in Company K, Fifty-third Regiment Illinois Volunteers, March 21, 1864, and that he was discharged July 22, 1865. That he made application for pension August 3, 1877, alleging "disease of lungs and chronic diarrhea, from measles, at Camp Butler, Illinois, in April, 1864."

The claim was rejected by the Commissioner of Pensions, on the ground of there being no record of chronic diarrhea or disease of lungs in service, and no medical or other satisfactory evidence in service or at discharge. The papers in the case, however, exhibit statements and affidavits which collectively tend to weaken the conclusion reached by the Commissioner.

Ira Young and F. M. Young testify to claimant's soundness prior to enlistment.

The claimant testifies—

"That he cannot find any of his commissioned officers; that the regimental surgeon was reported killed in one of Sherman's marches; that he has had no family physician treat him since discharged; they all told him they could do him no good."

J. W. Bollinger testifies—

"That he has known claimant since 1865; has lived near him, and labored with him nearly all the time that the claimant was able to labor. He has been disabled by lung disease and chronic diarrhea more than one-fourth of the time. Has been totally disabled during last year."

C. W. Bollinger corroborates the above fully.

J. K. Tyler testifies—

"That he has known claimant intimately since 1878; that the claimant has been in his employ. He has suffered continually from lung disease and of bowels during that time; has been unable to perform manual labor during that period, frequently confined to house and bed for days at a time."

In response to call for additional testimony, claimant says:

"He was traveling all the time trying to regain his health; that he was treated for his diseases at Camp Butler, Illinois, April and May, 1864, but not by any regimental surgeon; that he has been unable to furnish testimony of his commissioned officers, for the reason that he did not report to them for fear of being sent from his command for treatment; that his physicians assured him that only time and a change of climate could benefit him, and for this reason never employed a physician."

Mr. Hibben, examining surgeon, in his report of examination made January 28, 1880, says disability probably permanent. Finds upon careful physical examination no abnormal condition of the lungs, but for second disability, chronic diarrhea, some little emaciation, tongue healthy, abdomen enlarged, and recommends a rating of three-eighths total, equal to $3 per month. The board of examining surgeons, under date of June 7, 1882, increases rating to one-half total, equal to $4 per month, and the board, under date of September 9, 1885, makes rating at three-fourths total. The medical examinations show clearly the existence of the disability at the present time, and the continuance since discharge is also clearly established, as well as his prior soundness. There is no suggestion of fraud, nor anything to justify the suggestion if it were made.

Your committee are of the opinion that the claimant is entitled to a pension, and recommend the passage of the bill.

Mr. WISE. I must object to the consideration of that bill.

Mr. PETERS. I hope the gentleman from Virginia will listen to a brief statement.

Mr. WISE. I will listen to a statement by the gentleman from Kansas, with the understanding that I do not thereby lose my right to object.

Mr. PETERS. I desire to recapitulate the facts in this case. First, there is the evidence of prior soundness given by witnesses well acquainted with this soldier. In addition to that there is the medical examination which admitted him to the service in March, 1864. Then there is the evidence of comrades showing he contracted this disease; that he had measles in the second month after his enlistment, and that from this disease he contracted lung disease and chronic diarrhea. Then there is the additional evidence of comrades to the date of his discharge in 1865 and down to 1878, showing he was incapacitated by reason of the chronic diarrhea which resulted from the attack of measles, and that he was unable to perform labor half the time.

Then this is re-enforced by the statement of another party who knew him from 1879, and who corroborates the statements of prior witnesses in relation to the disability. This is still further re-enforced by the statement of the examining surgeon who examined him in 1880 and found he had chronic diarrhea, and that he was entitled to a certain rating. This is still further re-enforced by the board of examining surgeons in 1882, who corroborate the results of the examination by the examining surgeon in 1880 and allowed an increased disability. This was further re-enforced by the board of examining surgeons in 1885, who corroborated the reports of 1880 and 1882, and gave him a still increased rating for disability.

Mr. CROXTON. May I ask the gentleman why did he not get his claim through the Pension Office?

Mr. PETERS. Because there was no official record of his having been under medical treatment during the war.

Mr. WISE. The report states this soldier entered the service when the war was nearly over.

Mr. PETERS. Oh, no; he entered the service in March, 1864.

Mr. WISE. And he left in——

Mr. PETERS. In July, 1865, after the war was over.

Mr. WISE. The war was practically ended in April, 1865.

Mr. PETERS. But he entered the service in March, 1864.

Mr. WISE. The report also shows that there is not a particle of medical testimony that he was treated during the time he was in service, and all the medical treatment to which the gentleman refers was at a period of from ten to fifteen years after the termination of the war. There is not a particle of testimony to show any disability during the time of service.

Mr. PETERS. I would like to call the gentleman's attention——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Virginia withdraw his objection?

Mr. WISE. No, sir; I do not.

ANNA M. MARSHALL.

Mr. NEECE. I call up the bill (S. 2393) granting a pension to Anna M. Marshall.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to place the name of Anna M. Marshall, widow of Capt. Patterson S. Marshall, on the pension-roll as a pensioner, at the rate of $12 a month, subject to the provision and limitations of the pension laws.

The report (by Mr. NEECE) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2393) granting a pension to Anna M. Marshall, having considered the same, and the same having passed the Senate, your committee adopt the Senate report, a copy of which is hereunto attached, and recommend the passage of the bill.

"That the claimant in this case is the widow of Capt. Patterson S. Marshall, who was a citizen of Ohio. It appears from the evidence before the committee that the claimant made application for a pension to the Commissioner of Pensions, who rejected her claim because there was no law authorizing its allowance.

"Patterson S. Marshall was a steamboat captain commanding the steamer Aurora, which was chartered by the Government and used in transporting troops up the Tennessee River, under the direction and command of Major-General Washburn.

"While thus employed in the service of the Government, on or about October 11, 1864, Captain Marshall was ordered by the military commander in charge to land at Eastport, Miss., to disembark troops.

Immediately after landing the boat was fired on by a battery under command of the confederate general, Forrest. During this attack the boat was struck by several shells, one of which struck the steam-pipe, and the vessel was enveloped with hot steam. While standing heroically at his post and obeying military orders, another shell exploded a caisson on board the Aurora, by means of which Captain Marshall was pinned fast to the deck, and in this position was burned to death by the resulting fire.

These facts are proven by the affidavits of the clerk of the boat and by the military officer, both of whom were present.

It is also proven by the affidavits of a captain and assistant quartermaster, to whom Captain Marshall had, until a short time before, been chief clerk, that Captain Marshall was a man of fine business ability, and that his widow was left in straitened circumstances, with the care of a family of small children on her hands.

In view of the fact that Captain Marshall met his death while practically engaged in the military service and while obliged to implicitly obey orders which he may have known to be hazardous in the extreme, the committee recommend that the bill do pass.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

ROBERT BAXTER.

Mr. LYMAN. I call up the bill (S. 2935) granting a pension to Robert Baxter.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Robert Baxter, late a private in Company D, Seventy-seventh Regiment Enrolled Missouri Militia.

Mr. MORRILL. The report in this case is not printed, but I can state the facts. This man was a member of the Missouri enrolled militia, and, under the law, would have been entitled to a pension if he had perfected his case before the 4th of July, 1874. This he failed to do. The proof before the Pension Office is sufficient to have the case allowed if it had been presented in time. The circumstances were that while in the service and under the command of a United States officer, he was taken with typhoid fever and remained unconscious for some time, and when consciousness was restored his eyesight was gone, so that he has been totally blind ever since. There seems to be no objection to the bill. The committee were unanimous in reporting it favorably, and, as I have said, the claim would have been allowed without doubt in the Pension Office if the case had been perfected in time.

Mr. WARNER, of Missouri. I will add that I personally know of this case and the condition of the claimant. He lives in my county.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

JACOB TEITS.

Mr. PIDCOCK. I call up the bill (H. R. 8829) granting a pension to Jacob Teits.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Jacob Teits, late of Company B, Sixth Regiment New Jersey Volunteers.

The report (by Mr. PIDCOCK) was read, as follows:

The claimant was a member of Company A, One hundred and forty-fourth Regiment Illinois Infantry. He alleges that he and others were detailed to guard prisoners from Alton, Ill., to Richmond, Va., in March, 1865, and while at Cumberland City, Va., he fell from a box-car and thereby ruptured himself on the left side.

The claim was submitted for admission by the examiner in the Pension Office, but rejected by the reviewer on the ground that there is no record, and claimant's inability to furnish satisfactory evidence showing the incurrence of alleged hernia in service.

Claimant's physician and two of his neighbors testify that prior to enlistment he was a sound man and free from any rupture.

James M. Finley, the orderly sergeant of same company, testifies that claimant was detailed by him about the middle of March, 1865, to go to Richmond with prisoners, and while en route was injured as alleged. On the day following his return to his regiment Finley took him to the doctor, who, upon examination, pronounced him ruptured. The surgeon who treated claimant in service is dead. Other comrades of claimant's company testify to the receipt of the injury as alleged.

Dr. J. S. Lindaberry testifies that in August, 1865, he treated claimant for malaria and a rupture.

The testimony of neighbors shows that claimant returned home from service ruptured, and that he has been largely incapacitated for work on account of it. The examiner rated his disability one-half to 1884, and total from that time.

The examining surgeon reports that claimant has scrotal hernia of left side; it is reducible, but comes down on the least exertion. He rates the disability three-fourths.

Your committee deem this a meritorious case, and recommend that the bill pass, striking out in line 6, after word "company," the words "B, Sixth Regiment New Jersey Volunteers," and inserting in place thereof "A, One hundred and forty-fourth Regiment Illinois Infantry."

The Committee on Invalid Pensions recommended amendments, as follows:

In lines 6 and 7 of the printed bill, after the word "company," strike out "B Sixth" and insert "A, One hundred and forty-fourth;" also, strike out "New Jersey Volunteers" and insert "Illinois Infantry."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

MARY M. THOMPSON.

Mr. LEHLBACH. I call up the bill (H. R. 8826) granting a pension to Mary M. Thompson.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to place the name of Mary M. Thompson, mother of Charles W. Thompson, late of Company A, Third Regiment of Pennsylvania Volunteers, on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Let us have the report read.

Mr. LEHLBACH. The report is quite long and I can save time by making a statement of the case. The claimant is the mother of a soldier who died in the service. The evidence shows that he contributed to her support while he was in the service, and she is now without any means of support.

Mr. MCMILLIN. How comes it, then, that she does not get a pension under the general law?

Mr. LEHLBACH. I do not know. The Pension Office has rejected the case, but the evidence is as I have stated.

Mr. MCMILLIN. What was the ground of rejection?

Mr. LEHLBACH. The ground was the non-dependence of the mother, but the evidence is that she was dependent on the soldier, and that she is now without means. I move that the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

HENRY CANODE.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I call up the bill (H. R. 1903) granting a pension to Henry Canode.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the limitations and provisions of the pension laws, the name of Henry Canode, late a private in Company K, Seventeenth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry.

The report (by Mr. ELLSBERRY) was read, as follows:

The claimant, Henry Canode, made application for invalid pension, No. 324305, on the ground that on or about the 21st day of July, 1865, he was badly injured in both feet and ankles, by reason of a railroad accident, while on his way home from the United States service. All the testimony on file shows claimant to have been regularly enlisted; served faithfully until discharged on July 20, 1865; and while on his way home, after said discharge, he received the above-described injury. There is no doubt, from the evidence submitted and from all the papers now on file, that claimant did suffer such injury, and is now partially unable to support himself. The claim was rejected by the Department for the reason that the injury was not received strictly while in the service and in the line of duty.

In view of the premises, the committee recommend that House bill 1903 do pass.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Mr. Chairman, that report is very brief, and does not clearly show all that it ought to show. It states that this injury was received after the discharge of the soldier. It is true that the injury was received after he was discharged, but the facts are these: He was discharged while in one of the Southern States, and he was being conveyed to his home in the State of Ohio with other soldiers when he received this injury. The other men who were with him, and who also were injured, have nearly all been pensioned by special act, and his case was rejected merely upon the technical ground that the injury was received after the date of his discharge. In fact, however, although discharged, he had not been returned to his home by the Government as he ought to have been.

Mr. WISE. Do you say that the other men who were returning home with him at the same time and who also were injured have been pensioned?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. The other soldiers who were traveling with him have been pensioned by special acts, and this bill passed at the last session of the House, but too late to be acted upon by the Senate.

Mr. WISE. How was the injury received; by a railroad accident?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Yes, sir; by a railroad accident, which occurred to the train on which the soldiers were being conveyed.

Mr. WISE. I think pensions ought not to have been granted to any of these men after their discharge; but as others have received pensions I will not make objection in this case of my friend from Ohio.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I am obliged to the gentleman.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with a recommendation that it do pass.

WILLIAM H. HEISTER.

Mr. PERKINS. I ask for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 731) granting a pension to William H. Heister.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of William H. Heister, late of Company M, Nineteenth Kansas Cavalry.

The amendments reported by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 6, strike out "Heister" and insert "Hester."

Amend the title so as to read: "A bill granting a pension to William H. Hester."

Mr. PERKINS. As the report in this case is voluminous, I have marked, in a copy which I have, the more important features. I ask the Clerk to read those portions, which I think will give members all the information they require; and then let the whole report be printed in the RECORD.

The Clerk proceeded to read from the report (by Mr. STRUBLE) which is as follows:

William H. Heister (not Heisler) first enlisted in the Union Army under the name of William Hester on August 10, 1862, for three years, in Company C, Sixty-ninth Indiana Volunteers, when, from the evidence in the case bearing upon his age, he was seventeen years old.

A report from the office of the Assistant Adjutant-General, under date of February 13, 1884, shows that he was on the muster-rolls to October 31, 1862; was wounded in battle near Richmond, Ky., August 30, 1862, at which place and date, as shown by said report, his company was in action. On September 2, 1862, same report shows him home on furlough, having been paroled.

Rolls for November and December, 1862, show him to have been discharged by writ of habeas corpus November 20, 1862, at Indianapolis, Ind. Prisoner-of-war records shows him paroled at Richmond, Ky., 1862, date of capture not given. From an examination of claimant held by Special Examiner M. H. Parks, at Eureka Springs, Ark., December 18, 1882, it appears from his evidence that claimant enlisted in the Sixty-ninth Indiana Volunteers some time in August or September, 1862; was wounded and taken prisoner at Richmond, Ky., and having enlisted under age, his father instituted habeas corpus proceedings, which resulted in his discharge.

He enlisted on March 25, 1864, in Company H, One hundredth Indiana Volunteers, as appears from the Assistant Adjutant-General of date April 10, 1882, which report represents him present as to May and June, 1864, same report as to April 30, 1865 (the last role on file). He was transferred (date not given) to Company G, Forty-eighth Indiana Volunteers, and was discharged with his company July 25, 1865.

On October 30, 1868, at Topeka, Kans., he enlisted in Company M, Nineteenth Kansas Cavalry, to serve for six months. The same report from the Assistant Adjutant-General last above named shows him present October 31, 1868, name not borne on returns for December, 1868, or January, 1869; mustered out with company April 18, 1869, at Fort Hays, Kans., as a private.

On August 29, 1881, claimant filed his application for a pension, alleging that at Fort Dodge, Kans., on January 1, 1869, he contracted sore eyes, from which he never recovered, and which continued to grow worse, causing total blindness. On February 7, 1882, he was examined by the medical examining board in this city (Washington), who, to quote the exact language, reported him "practically totally blind," and that he required the constant aid and assistance of another person.

In an affidavit filed July 14, 1882, claimant alleges that on the 15th day of January, 1869, while in the service and line of duty and while on guard at night (guarding the horses) at Fort Dodge, Kans., there prevailed a very strong bleak wind, which carried with it dust and sand; that he took a severe cold, and the next morning his eyes were badly inflamed; that it was nearly a month before he was able to perform any duty again, and then only on company guard for two hours, but was never thereafter able to go on picket or regimental guard; that his eyes continued to grow worse from that date; that the captain of the company frequently requested affiant to go to the hospital, but he preferred to and was permitted to remain with his company, but was relieved from duty; and that at the expiration of his service he was discharged with the company. From the claimant's evidence, which is satisfactorily corroborated, he became blind in the fall of 1880.

The claimant employed one H. F. Hill, of Eureka Springs, Ark., as his agent to prepare his original application and prosecute his claim; another agent at same place, named Charles H. Miller, also one William F. Burch, a brother-in-law of the claimant, became interested in the prosecution of the claim.

The whole three were a set of scoundrels, and, in 1882, Hill and Miller were both in the penitentiary, having been convicted by the United States district court at Fort Smith, Ark., for fraudulent practices in connection with certain pension cases. It does not clearly appear that Burch, who, in 1882, was a fugitive from justice, was operating with Hill and Miller generally, but he took a hand with them in efforts to supply certain affidavits deemed by them essential to success, and among them, by joint action, as it seems, the affidavits of the captain of the company in which claimant last served (who was at the time dead) and those of two comrades were forged and filed in the cause.

In the course of the progress of the claim suspicion was aroused at the Pension Office that fraud was being attempted, and the case was referred to special examiners in the field, who were directed to make thorough examination, which was done, and the frauds clearly shown. From a careful consideration of all the evidence your committee are confident that the claimant was not a party to the frauds of Hill, Miller, and Burch. The claimant at the time was totally blind, and in very dependent circumstances, with a wife and three children to be supported by friends and charity.

Miller (acting, no doubt, for himself and Hill) procured of claimant a promise to pay him one-third of the amount of pension recovered, and then proceeded to do the business according to methods then in practice by him. That these men kept their villainous schemes to themselves, and did not acquaint claimant with them is evident from a number of points in the evidence, to recite all of which would require much time and space. They procured of claimant the names and last-known addresses of the captain of the company and two comrades, proceeded to draught the necessary affidavits, not disclosing the post-office addresses of the respective witnesses, and, after a time, informed claimant that they had procured them, and handed them to him, and he turned them over to Miller, who finally brought claimant to Washington to have the business completed by an examination, &c.

Later, upon calling upon claimant, who had returned home, for the post-office addresses of the parties whose affidavits had been forged, he replied with frankness, giving the addresses surmised when Hill, Miller, and Burch applied to him, and as to which they later confirmed his impressions. This led at once to the special examinations, not only of such of the three witnesses as were alive, but of a large number of others, and while there are some points as to which conflicts of evidence exist, yet a review and careful analysis of all the evidence has satisfied your committee that when claimant enlisted in the Nineteenth Kansas Cavalry he was free from disease of the eyes; that he incurred disease of the eyes in the service; had sore eyes at discharge, which continued to gradually grow worse, until, in the fall of 1880, he became totally blind.

The claimant enlisted three times as a soldier between the years 1862 and 1869, and while nothing affirmatively appears as to medical examinations upon enlistment the presumption is he was each time carefully examined by competent surgeons. The reports from the Adjutant-General's Office, while exhibiting considerable in his favor, show not the least suspicion of disease to eyes at either enlistment. Men for whom he worked on farms, both immediately before enlistment and after discharge, give clear evidence as to prior soundness and subsequent diseased condition, and in most cases these witnesses are vouched for by the respective special examiners who took evidence in the cause as being of good reputation, while of the claimant himself Special Examiner M. H. Parks declared in his report as follows:

"The claimant is a clear-headed, intelligent man, and the manner in which he told his story and the satisfactory answers he gave to the questions I put to him left the impression that he was telling the truth."

The examination of claimant by Parks was lengthy and thorough and skillfully conducted, and in the opinion of your committee the result justified the impressions of claimant on the part of the examiner as expressed in the above quotation from his report. The claimant in an affidavit filed with the papers declares that he had no knowledge of the attempt of Miller, Hill, and Burch to commit a fraud on the Pension Office.

In conclusion, while the attempt to commit an infamous fraud upon the Pension Office was well calculated to arouse a strong prejudice against claimant, and while some features of the evidence taken in examinations, if credited and not carefully analyzed and compared with other well-sustained proof, may have justified the Pension Department in rejecting the claim and adhering thereto, your committee, notwithstanding an original sense of prejudice, have concluded that the claimant is not chargeable with the attempted frauds, that he is innocent of any complicity therein, and that the evidence as a whole sustains his right to a pension at the hands of Congress.

With the bill amended in its title and the body thereof, changing the name Heister to Hester, the committee recommend that it do pass.

The question being taken on the amendments reported by the committee, they were agreed to.

There being no objection, the bill as amended was laid aside, to be reported to the House with a recommendation that it do pass.

MARIA L. STRONG.

Mr. STAHLNECKER. I ask the consideration of the bill (S. 2708) for the relief of Maria L. Strong.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That from and after the passage of this act there be paid, out of the Navy pension fund, to Maria L. Strong, widow of the late Rear-Admiral James H. Strong, of the United States Navy, the sum of $50 per month during her widowhood, the same to be in lieu of her present pension.

The report (by Mr. SWOPE) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2708) for the relief of Maria L. Strong, have had the same under consideration, and, concurring in the views expressed in the report of the Committee on Pensions, United States Senate, which this committee adopts as its own, return the same with the recommendation that it do pass.

The applicant, Maria L. Strong, is the widow of James H. Strong, who served in the United States Navy from February 2, 1829, to November 28, 1882, when he died. The widow originally filed her claim for a pension in the Pension Office May 19, 1883, basing it upon death from disease which originated in the line of duty during 1875, when he held the rank of rear-admiral. It was allowed at $30, the amount given for that rank, from May 19, 1883.

She now asks to have this increased to $50. It has been usual to allow this amount, and we report back the bill with a recommendation that it do pass.

To the honorable Senate of the United States in Congress assembled:

The petition of Maria L. Strong respectfully shows unto your honorable body that she is the widow of James H. Strong, late rear-admiral in the United States Navy.

That her late husband departed this life on the 28th day of November, 1882, from a disease contracted in the line of duty, and therefore as his widow your petitioner receives now a pension of $30 per month.

Your petitioner finding that this small allowance is insufficient to procure her the comforts of life, respectfully appeals to your honorable body to grant her an increase such as in similar cases has been granted to the widows of other officers whose lives have been shortened by the wear and tear of long and arduous and faithful service to the Government.

Your petitioner respectfully shows to your honorable body that her late husband entered the Navy, as a midshipman, in the month of February, 1829, and that during a career of active service of nearly half a century he performed all his duties well and with distinction.

That his last duty on the active list was in command of the South Atlantic squadron, and the duties upon the coast of Brazil were such as originated the disease from which he soon after died, his constitution being wrecked thereby and his life considerably shortened.

And your petitioner, in view of the premises, considering the long, faithful, and valuable services of her late husband, can only believe that his country will gladly, in the slight manner herein prayed for, give some testimony to its appreciation of his services, and that your honorable body will grant an increase of pension to $50 per month in lieu of that now received by her.

Petitioner files, in support of her request, the record of her late husband, taken from the files of the Navy Department and certified to as correct.

OFFICE OF THE ADMIRAL, Washington, April 9, 1884.

SIR: I have the honor to state to you that I have known the late Rear-Admiral Strong ever since boyhood, and have served with him on many occasions.

I beg leave to state that he performed all the duties with which he has been credited by the Navy Department with zeal and fidelity. No officer in the Navy can show a better record of loyalty than Admiral Strong.

I earnestly recommend that his widow may receive all the benefits of the pension law to the highest amount paid—$50 a month.

Her husband lost his health in the performance of his naval duties during the war, and was for seven or eight years a total cripple.

Very respectfully,

DAVID D. PORTER, Admiral.

The CHAIRMAN OF THE NAVAL COMMITTEE, Senate.

By direction of the Secretary of the Navy:

JNO. W. HOGG, Chief Clerk.

April 3, 1884.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, this is a very ingenious report. Without giving any reasons why this increased pension should be granted the committee content themselves with stating the fact that it has become usual to grant pensions of $50 in these cases. In other words, we are to accept it as an established precedent that when any widow of an officer is drawing a pension of $30 a month it must, upon application, be increased to $50.

I think it is well understood I am opposed to granting these increases. I would not in a case of this kind vote against allowing any woman her $30 a month; but I do think it is time for us to stop and consider what we are doing. This House passes a bill pensioning at $12 a month the dependent fathers or mothers of deceased soldiers, and pensioning at the same rate soldiers of the country who are to-day in poor-houses; and we are notified by the President that the Government is not able to pay those pensions. And while we are denying pensions at the rate of $12 a month to mothers who gave their sons to be sacrificed in the cause of the country, and while we say to those soldiers who are to-day being supported in poor-houses that this Government is not able to pension them, I think it is time that the women of this country who are drawing pensions of $30 a month should be told by Congress that they must be content with this sum so long as the dependent mother of a dead soldier, or so long as a soldier himself, who is in a poor-house, is unable to get relief from the Government.

Now, I am not going to raise the question of a quorum on this bill; I have not done that at any session of this House, but I expect to vote against this bill and others like it, because it is an injustice and a crime to say to men who are entitled to pensions that we are not able to pension them, and then turn round and pension at $50 a month a woman who is now drawing $30 monthly, and whose husband was in the Army a lifetime at big wages, serving during many years of peace, and, if he had lived economically, could have left to his widow a competency.

Mr. STAHLNECKER. May I ask the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. JOHNSTON] whether he voted on the Boggs case which was passed here this evening.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. I did.

Mr. STAHLNECKER. May I ask the gentleman which way he voted?

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. I voted "no." And I made objection to the bill, which objection I never withdrew, though I am not going to raise any controversy with the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CURTIN], who stepped out there and said that I withdrew the objection.

Mr. TAULBEE. Mr. Chairman, at what stage in the consideration of this bill are objections in order?

The CHAIRMAN. At any stage.

Mr. TAULBEE. Then I shall object to the further consideration of this bill.

Mr. STAHLNECKER. Is objection in order at any stage?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes; at any stage.

Mr. ELDREDGE. I move that the committee rise.

Mr. FUNSTON. I hope the gentleman will allow me to make a statement before that motion is put to the committee.

Mr. PERKINS. Before voting on that I think the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WISE] will withdraw the objection he made to the bill of my colleague [Mr. FUNSTON].

Mr. FUNSTON. Yes; I hope objection will be withdrawn to the bill (H. R. 752) granting a pension to J. Smithpeter.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman withdraw his motion that the committee rise?

Mr. ELDREDGE. I do.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection being withdrawn, the Chair will recognize the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BROWN].

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. I move to take up the bill (H. R. 10050) to increase the pension of Frank Bell.

The bill and amendment of the committee were read.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. I am well acquainted with the facts in this case and will make a brief statement. I know this man who was in my own regiment. He lost a leg in the army and was also shot through the lungs. He receives a pension of $30 a month for the loss of his leg. The laws do not permit him, however, to draw any pension for his other wounds. The other wounds have broken down his health, and destroyed his constitution and left him a wreck. He was one of the bravest men I ever knew. There is nothing but the strict construction of the pension laws standing between him and the amount in this bill. I ask for $10 a month for the worst wound of them all.

Mr. STAHLNECKER. I object.

Mr. WISE. I move the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. MCMILLIN having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. HATCH reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar had, according to order, had under consideration the special business set apart for this evening, and had directed him to report back to the House sundry bills with various recommendations.

The bill (S. 722) for an increase of pension to Mrs. Ellen M. Boggs, reported from the Committee of the Whole with amendment, was considered, the amendment agreed to, and the bill as amended ordered to a third reading.

The question recurred upon the passage of the bill.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. On that I demand a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 15, noes 2.

So the bill was passed.

JAMES SMITHPETER.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent, the gentleman from Virginia having suggested that he will withdraw his objection, that the bill (H. R. 752) granting a pension to James Smithpeter be now put upon its passage.

I ask unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole be discharged from its further consideration, and that the bill be passed.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of James Smithpeter, late of the East Tennessee Union service.

Mr. ELDREDGE. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 3, noes 18.

So the House refused to adjourn.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas?

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

RECONSIDERATION.

Mr. MORRILL moved to reconsider the several votes taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. ELDREDGE. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The question being taken, on a division there were—ayes 3, noes 17.

So the House refused to adjourn.

Mr. STAHLNECKER. I ask unanimous consent to discharge the Committee of the Whole from the further consideration of Senate bill 2708 and put it upon its passage. This is the bill for the relief of Mrs. Maria L. Strong.

Mr. WISE. I rise to say to the gentleman from New York that I certainly shall object to that bill, for the present at least. I want time to look into the question more fully.

Mr. STAHLNECKER. I withdraw the bill.

CAPT. FRANK BELL.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to discharge the Committee of the Whole from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 10050) to increase the pension of Capt. Frank Bell, and put it upon its passage with the amendment recommended by the committee.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to increase the pension of Frank Bell, late captain of Company I, Forty-second Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, to $50 per month, in lieu of the pension now received by him.

The committee recommend to strike out "fifty" and insert "forty," in the sixth line of the bill.

Mr. TAULBEE. Mr. Speaker, this is the kind of bill to which I have been accustomed to object, but having had some personal acquaintance with this claimant, he having been before our committee, and having exhibited the degree of his disability, in view of all of the facts and the laws touching his case I shall not object.

There being no objection, the bill was considered, the amendment agreed to, and the bill as amended ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. MORRILL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MARIA L. STRONG.

Mr. STAHLNECKER. I ask unanimous consent to discharge the Committee of the Whole House from the further consideration of the bill (S. 2708) for the relief of Maria L. Strong, and that it be considered in the House.

Mr. WISE. I withdraw my objection to the consideration of that bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. STAHLNECKER]?

There was no objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That from and after the passage of this act, there be paid, out of the Navy pension fund, to Maria L. Strong, widow of the late Rear-Admiral James H. Strong, of the United States Navy, the sum of $50 per month, during her widowhood, the same to be in lieu of her present pension.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on ordering the bill to a third reading.

Mr. WISE. Would it be in order for me to make one remark? I have withdrawn my objection to the consideration of the bill; but for the reason stated by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. JOHNSTON], after having heard the veto of the President to-day denying an increase of pensions to those who are paupers, now in the poor-houses, soldiers who served the Union in the war, I shall unquestionably vote against this bill, and believe that this House ought to reject it. That is all I wish to say.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

Mr. WISE. I call for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 11, noes 5.

So (further count not being called for) the bill was passed.

Mr. STAHLNECKER moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. WISE. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was not agreed to—there being ayes 6, noes 8.

M. LOUISE BUTLER.

Mr. HAYNES. I ask unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole House be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (S. 773) granting a pension to M. Louise Butler, and that the same be considered in the House.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of M. Louise Butler, widow of George Butler, late a major of marines in the service of the United States, and pay her a pension at the rate of $40 per month, said pension to be in lieu of any she may hereafter receive.

Mr. TAULBEE. I desire to state that this is the bill to which I objected last Friday night. I think it proper to state that since I interposed that objection I have examined the case, and believing my objection was wrong, withdraw it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Hampshire?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HAYNES moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MRS. FANNIE CARMAN.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I have an extreme case of a dependent mother which I want to put through to-night. I ask unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole House be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 4585) granting a pension to Mrs. Fannie Carman, and that it be considered in the House.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, directed to place the name of Mrs. Fannie Carman, mother of Daniel Carman, late of Company H, Fifth Regiment New Jersey Volunteers, on the pension-roll, at the rate of $8 per month, subject to the provisions of the general pension laws, the same to take effect from and after the passage of this act.

The Committee on Invalid Pensions recommended the following amendment:

Strike out "$8" and insert "$12."

Mr. BUCHANAN. I know these parties personally, and I know that the mother is dependent. The son died in the Army, and the case is a worthy one.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

The amendment was adopted.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BUCHANAN moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 10 o'clock and 55 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

Mr. DAWES. I present petitions of a large number of my constituents from Vineyard Haven, Dukes County, Massachusetts, the first being in regard to Sunday mails. I think that should be referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair suggests that it should be referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. INGALLS. What is the petition about?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is about Sunday parades.

Mr. INGALLS. Why should that be referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia?

Mr. DAWES. I did not suggest that reference.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair did not know where else Congress had jurisdiction over the subject.

Mr. INGALLS. I suggest that the Committee on Education and Labor would be more appropriate.

Mr. DAWES. I think the Committee on Military Affairs.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the petition will be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. DAWES. I have three other petitions for the same general purpose.

Mr. BLAIR. There is no objection to other committees taking their own appropriate jurisdiction.

The joint resolution (S. R. 109) authorizing the President of the United States to accept in behalf of the United States the sword of Capt. Samuel Chester Reid, tendered as a gift by his son Samuel C. Reid, was read the first time by its title.

Mr. HOAR. Let the Secretary read the joint resolution in full for the information of the Senate. I think there will be no objection to its present consideration.

The joint resolution was read the second time at length, as follows:

Resolved, &c., That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized to accept in behalf of the United States the sword of the late Capt. Samuel Chester Reid, commanding the United States private-armed brig General Armstrong, tendered him by Samuel C. Reid, son of said officer.

Mr. WILLIAMS introduced a bill (S. 3299) to amend the act to provide for the resumption of specie payments; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

AMENDMENT TO A BILL.

Mr. MILLER submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the river and harbor bill; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

WILLIAM WEBSTER.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there are no "concurrent or other resolutions," the Chair, in pursuance of the order of the Senate made yesterday, lays before the Senate as part of the unfinished business of the morning hour the resolution reported by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN], from the Committee on Foreign Relations, on the petition of William Webster relative to a claim for indemnity from Great Britain.

Mr. MORGAN. I ask that by unanimous consent that resolution may go over until Monday, retaining its place.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Alabama asks unanimous consent of the Senate that the resolution be postponed until Monday, retaining it place. If there be no objection, that order will be made.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT LA FAYETTE, IND.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 531) to provide for the erection of a public building at La Fayette, Ind., which were, in lines 11 and 12 strike out "one hundred" and insert "fifty," so as to make the limit of cost $50,000; in line 12 strike out "seventy-five" and insert "fifty," so as to make the amount of appropriation $50,000.

And at the end of the bill to add:

Nor shall any site be purchased until estimates for the erection of a building which will furnish sufficient accommodations for the transaction of the public business, and which shall not exceed in cost the balance of the sum herein limited after the site shall have been purchased and paid for, shall have been approved by the Secretary of the Treasury; and no purchase of site nor plan for said building shall be approved by the Secretary of the Treasury involving an expenditure exceeding the said sum of $50,000 for site and building.

Mr. MAHONE. I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

RAILWAY THROUGH INDIAN TERRITORY.

Mr. PLATT. Yesterday, upon the passage of the bill (H. R. 6393) to authorize the Fort Worth and Denver City Railway Company to construct and operate a railway through the Indian Territory, and for other purposes, I entered a motion to reconsider. The reason why I did so was because I thought there was a passage or two in the bill which might give rise to a belief that Congress thought it could by a bill confer certain rights upon a State government which might hereafter be erected which that government otherwise would not possess. I will read the clause in section 4:

Congress hereby reserves the right to regulate the charges for freight and passengers on said railway, and messages on said telegraph and telephone lines, until a State government or governments shall exist in said Territory within the limits of which said railway, or a part thereof, shall be located; and then such State government or governments shall be authorized to fix and regulate the cost of transportation of persons and freights within their respective limits by said railway.

It seemed to me that the use of such language as that in a bill would be an implication of a belief by Congress that unless authorized by Congress a State when it should be formed would not have that power; but I am informed, and I see, that the object of it was to prevent any claim that any right had become vested in the railroad company to make such charges as they saw fit, by the fact that Congress had simply reserved the right to Congress. In that view of it, although I think the language was not fitly chosen, I will withdraw the motion to reconsider.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion to reconsider is withdrawn, and the bill stands passed.

COMMITTEE ON COMMERCE.

Mr. McMILLAN. I move that the Committee on Commerce have leave to sit during the sessions of the Senate for the remainder of the present session of Congress.

The motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. EVARTS. I ask the Senate to proceed with the consideration of the joint resolution in recognition of the services of Joseph Francis.

Mr. PLUMB. Has the morning business been concluded?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It has been concluded.

Mr. PLUMB. I shall be obliged, then, to ask the Senate to proceed with the consideration of the Post-Office appropriation bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question now is upon the motion of the Senator from New York. After that is acted upon the motion of the Senator from Kansas will be in order. The Senator from New York moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the joint resolution (H. Res. 125) in recognition of the services of Joseph Francis.

Mr. CAMERON. I wish to say in connection with that——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion is not debatable.

Mr. CAMERON. I wish to say that I have a batch of literature which I propose to read to the Senate on that subject.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion is not debatable.

Mr. COCKRELL. That matter will consume the whole day.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion to proceed to the consideration of the joint resolution. [Putting the question.] The noes appear to have it. Does the Senator from New York call for a division?

Mr. EVARTS. I only wanted to say about it that it would be concluded very soon,

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. Pending that motion, I desire to make a motion that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business. I have no idea that the Senate will do it, but I wish to have it understood that the State of Virginia is one of the States in which appointments have not been confirmed, and I am doing my duty in asking that the Senate shall proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Virginia moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was not agreed to.

Mr. PLUMB. I now move that the Senate proceed with the consideration of House bill 10793, being the Post-Office appropriation bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New York [Mr. EVARTS] call for a division on his motion to proceed to the consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. EVARTS. I was only going to say that notwithstanding what is suggested, I think the conclusion of the Joseph Francis resolution will be brief. I supposed the appropriation bill would not be pressed in the morning hour. I should be very glad if my friend from Kansas would allow the joint resolution to be proceeded with.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will then announce that the motion is lost. The Senator from New York can renew the motion at any time.

Mr. PLUMB. I do not feel that I can afford to yield to that measure. It would undoubtedly take up a couple of hours of time right in the middle of the consideration of the Post-Office appropriation bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 10793) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. What has become of my motion?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair put the question, and the Senate voted in the negative.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I did not so understand it. I ask for the yeas and nays on my motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator can renew the motion if he chooses.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I did not understand the Chair to put the motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair did distinctly put the motion.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I have a purpose in making the motion, and I wish to pursue that purpose.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Virginia renews his motion that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business. [Putting the question.] The noes appear to have it.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary called the roll.

Mr. VEST. I am paired upon all questions until Monday morning with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY]. I do not know how he would vote.

The result was announced—yeas 5, nays 39; as follows:

YEAS—5.

George,	Payne,	Riddleberger,	Sawyer.

NAYS—39.

So the Senate refused to proceed to the consideration of executive business.

ILLINOIS JUDICIAL DISTRICTS.

Mr. CULLOM. I ask the Senator from Kansas to yield to me to enable the Senate to take up House bill 367. It is a matter which interests the people of Illinois, and which I called up yesterday, but the bill was not at that time in possession of the Senate. It will take no time. There will be no discussion of it. I ask the Senator from Kansas to yield to me for that purpose.

Mr. PLUMB. In view of the disappointment of the Senator from Illinois yesterday evening I will yield to him, but to no one else.

Mr. CULLOM. I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 367) to amend section 536 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, relating to the division of the State of Illinois into judicial districts, and to provide for holding terms of court of the northern district at the city of Peoria.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with an amendment, to add as an additional section:

SEC. 11. That all crimes and offenses heretofore committed within the said district shall be prosecuted, tried, and determined in the same manner and with the same effect as if this act had not been passed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CULLOM. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendment, and ask for a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 10793) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888.

Mr. BECK. Yesterday, when the bill was laid aside, I had risen to make a remark or two in regard to the bill. What is called the subsidy amendment, I believe, has not yet been reached.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The pending amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. The Committee on Appropriations propose, as an amendment, to insert after line 88:

For the transportation of foreign mails by American built and registered steamships, to secure the greater frequency and regularity in dispatch and a greater speed in the carriage of such mails to Brazil, the Argentine Republic, and the Republics of Uruguay and Paraguay, $500,000; and the Postmaster-General is authorized to make, after due advertisement for proposals, such contract or contracts with such American steamships, for a term of not less than five years, and at a rate of compensation not exceeding for each outward trip $1 per nautical mile of the distance in the most direct and feasible sailing course between the terminal points, as shall be found expedient and desirable to secure the ends above set forth; but every such contract shall be subject to be modified or annulled by act of Congress.

Mr. BECK. Mr. President, I have raised the question of order against this class of subsidy amendments so often and have been so regularly overruled that, if the Chair thinks the pending amendment in order, I shall not make any question about it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair would feel bound to follow the decisions of the Senate.

Mr. BECK. I supposed so, and therefore I did not care to make any question of order.

I rose yesterday before this subsidy amendment was reached, not to say anything regarding it at the time, but to say that the Senator from Kansas, who has charge of the bill—I was on the subcommittee with him—seemed to think that there had been undue economy sought after by the Post-Office Department, and he complained of the inefficiency of the service, or rather not having service enough for the wants of the country. One thing, however, I was glad to hear him admit, that this is a clean bill without any sort of jobbery in it, no star-routes, nothing to bring scandal on the administration of the Post-Office Department. This is the first time, as far as I know, that complaints have been made by gentlemen on the other side that the head of the Post-Office Department is too economical. That the Department has been clean, fair, and honest in its administration nobody disputes. The Senate Committee on Appropriations in looking over the bill as carefully as the Senator from Kansas and myself on the sub-committee could, and as the whole committee did, could not find any fault with what had been done in the other House, or any fault with the estimates as presented by the Department.

The Senator from Kansas, notwithstanding his fault-finding, did not venture to suggest any amendment to change the estimates of the Department, which were adopted in the bill as it came from the other House, and as it came from the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate; that at least was a compliment to the wisdom and integrity of the Department in making the estimates which it submitted, and the action of the House of Representatives and of the Committee on Appropriations indorsed this by passing the bill in accordance with the estimates.

I hardly think the criticism of the Senator from Kansas was fair. I have looked over the RECORD this morning, and some of the petitions that were sent to the Senator from Kansas, and I am satisfied they were based on imperfect information. When you come to look at the amount appropriated for the current year you find it is $54,365,863.25, while the amount in this bill, outside of the subsiby clause, is $55,689,650.15, or an increase over the appropriations for the current year of $1,323,786.90. When you analyze the bill carefully it will be found that the increases are such as necessarily come from the growth of business. For example, for compensation to clerks in post-offices for the current year, $5,150,000. In the bill now under consideration we allow $5,450,000, or an increase of $300,000. For miscellaneous items the increase is $15,000. For the free-delivery service we have increased $100,000 and have added $347,500 because of the additional cities that are embraced in the free-delivery system. Small increases are made in regard to mail-bags because of the increase of the railroad service. For inland transportation we have made an increase on the railroad routes of $300,000, and so all along the line. For railway postal clerks there is an increase of $190,000; for railway postal cars an increase of $130,000. For the manufacture of envelopes and wrappers and things of that sort there is an increase of $200,000. For the transportation of the foreign mails there is an increase of $75,000. For the manufacture of postal cards an increase of $12,000 is allowed, and so on—a natural, fair increase, growing out of the increase of business.

When the Senator from Kansas was criticizing the action of the Department in regard to matters that had not been suggested before the committee, as far as I am aware, and as to which there was no suggestion of amendment, he read, among other things, a letter dated February 5, 1887, from Cedar Vale, Kans., signed by Eli Titus, addressed to the Senator from Kansas:

CEDAR VALE, KANS., February 5, 1887.

MY DEAR SIR: Am glad to see you are stirring the Department up on the inexcusable bad mail service in Kansas. We now have two railroads completed to Cedar Vale, the C. K. and W. from Independence, completed November 1, and the D. M. and A. from Chetopa, completed January 1, and no mail service on either, although have been trying since November 1 last. The mail comes from Grenola by stage, 20 miles north of Cedar Vale. There is certainly no excuse for this. Please call the attention of the Post-Office Department to this.

And oblige, yours, very truly.

At this point I interrupted the Senator for a moment, and I asked him what that was. He reread it. I telegraphed at once to the Post-Office Department from my seat and received this answer in a few minutes:

POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT, February 11, 1887.

Distance circulars, Chetopa to Cedar Vale, were not received from the railroad company until January 27, and on February 3 the Department ordered that service be established on that line on and after February 21. Service from Chautauqua to Cedar Vale not yet authorized, but under consideration.

WM. F. VILAS.

Hon. J. B. BECK.

The Senator's correspondent says that from the 1st day of November, with a completed railroad, application has been made for service and that there is no attention paid to the wants of that people, while the official statement shows that the railroad company did not furnish even the distance circular until the 27th of January, and on the 3d of February the Department proceeded at once to establish service.

Again, I sent a message saying that there were other complaints from Kansas. I could not even state what they were, but asking, "What about Kansas railways?" In less than half an hour the following dispatch was received, signed by the Postmaster-General:

POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT, February 11, 1887.

An examination in Second Assistant's Office shows that since July 1, 1886—

Seven months ago—

new railroad service has been placed on Kansas routes to the number of thirty new routes, aggregating almost 1,000 miles, and that but five short routes properly to be employed remain without service yet ordered because the information in regard to them is not yet complete. There is no just occasion for any criticism or complaint on this score. About 5,800 miles of railroad routes now in Kansas, and total cost of railroad service is now over $600,000 per year.

WM F. VILAS.

Hon. J. B. BECK.

If the Senator from Kansas proposed to find fault with the Postmaster-General, it was his duty to show that there was wrong done. I think it would have been better for him to have laid those communications before the committee and have given the Post-Office Department a chance to answer them, because the Postmaster-General avows and shows, and it is high evidence of the development of the State of Kansas, that she has in the last seven months added a thousand miles of new railroads in that great and growing State; and the Postmaster-General shows that she has proper service on every line except five short ones, about which the Postmaster-General has not received proper information on which to take definite action. The Postmaster-General is supplying service as rapidly as he can. These telegrams, I think, while they are imperfect and only sent on the spur of the moment, answer, I think, satisfactorily many of the complaints that newspaper editors and other gentlemen have made in regard to the service in that State.

I insist that whatever else may be said about Mr. Vilas, the Postmaster-General is devoting his time anxiously, carefully, and earnestly to give the people good postal service and do it with reasonable economy. I have never heard any well-grounded complaint made against the integrity of the management of the business of that Department. Some of us may find fault in regard to political matters; but as to the business management of the Department, it never was managed with more efficiency, with more honesty, and with an eye more single to the good of the service, so far as any fact has been brought before the Committee on Appropriations, and I suppose if there had been any well-grounded complaint we should have heard of it either in the subcommittee or the whole committee.

As I said—and that is all I care to say in regard to these preliminary matters—the estimates were so fair, so reasonable, that the House of Representatives accepted them and passed the bill in accordance with them. The Senate Committee on Appropriations reported the House bill just as it came from the House, again indorsing the estimates, and neither in the subcommittee nor in the whole committee, nor any where, has any person in either House been able to find any fault with the management of the Post-Office Department, or with the estimates as made, except by the Senator from Kansas in laying before the Senate without asking to make any amendment, and without calling the attention of the committee to them, letters of people who looking at the subject from their own narrow point of view, feeling that a young town, one which I think the Senator said had grown up in about six weeks—I know how they grow and am glad to see them growing—but people feeling that they are not pushing ahead if they do not get all the mails they want in a day when the proper machinery has to be provided for a whole country, they no doubt become restless and make complaint. But the result at last is that everything has been done that could be done, and whatever is now lacking the Department is endeavoring earnestly and promptly to supply; what is said of Kansas, is equally true of the rest of the country as far as official information can be obtained.

I venture to assert that whenever any complaint is made about the business of the Department and an inquiry is made at the Department, or when any complaint is made in any form in which the Department can be heard in answer to it, the Post-Office Department will show in every case that everything is being done that can be done to furnish an efficient, honest, and cheap service.

I may as well say in regard to the pending amendment—the subsidy amendment——

Mr. PLUMB. Before the Senator passes to that, let me ask him a question. He said, in commending this bill in the beginning of his remarks, that it had no jobbery in it. He and I have been on the subcommittee of the Appropriations Committee which has had charge of the Post-Office appropriation bill for, I think, five years, and I will ask him if there has been any bill during that period of time which came from that subcommittee or from the committee itself making appropriations for the Post-Office Department about which there has been any odor or suggestion of jobbery or corruption, or anything improper?

Mr. BECK. I will say that whenever the committee could discover anything like jobbery I believe we have always endeavored to correct it; but the Senator will recollect I was on the committee with him at the time when we had General Brady and the star-route matters before us.

Mr. PLUMB. That was before my service on the committee.

Mr. BECK. It was not before mine. I was on it then, and a member of the subcommittee having it in charge.

Mr. PLUMB. I am speaking now of the last five years, covering the period of Arthur's administration, as well as the present one so far. I ask if there has been any suggestion of wrong or any improper expenditure of any of the money we have appropriated in the Post-Office appropriation bill during that time.

Mr. BECK. I think since we got out of the star-route abuses there has been none, but I know the struggle we had about that, and we could not get to the bottom of it. The other House tried it as well as the Senate. We summoned the Postmaster-General, we summoned Mr. Brady, we examined them fully. All appeared fair on the face; they said that they were doing the best they could, and it was only when the Postmaster-General threatened to stop the mails because he did not have money enough to keep the services up that we were enabled to get at the bottom of that trouble and found that they were not doing justice to the general service, but were squandering money in useless "expedition," in "increased rates," where there was no use for them, and in a thousand improper ways, with which the country is now perfectly familiar.

From that day to this the service has been improving, but nowhere and under no Postmaster-General has it been more carefully watched than it is by the present Postmaster-General. I know the former Postmasters-General have furnished the Senator from Kansas and myself every facility to ascertain all the facts within the last five years. That they were men of integrity and ability and desirous of aiding the committee in every way I believe; and the Senator from Kansas will agree with me that the present Postmaster-General is doing his duty as earnestly and faithfully as any man who ever was in that great office.

If it is agreeable to the Senator from Kansas, perhaps the Senate would prefer first to have him state the reasons for the passage of the subsidy amendment rather than to hear the objections to it. I am one of those who object to it. The Senator from Kansas, I know, is in favor of it, and I think after stating what I have upon the general subject it would be better for him to state the reasons why this amendment ought to be agreed to, no point of order being raised against it.

Mr. MORGAN. Before the Senator from Kansas takes the floor I desire to offer an amendment, which I send to the desk.

The CHIEF CLERK. In the amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations, after the word "American," at the end of line 89, it is proposed to strike out the word "built" and insert the words "owned and officered;" so as to read:

For the transportation of foreign mails by American-owned and officered and registered steamships, to secure the greater frequency and regularity in dispatch and a greater speed in the carriage of such mails to Brazil, &c.

And at the close of the committee's amendment add:

Such steamships so owned and officered shall be entitled to be enrolled, registered, and licensed as American ships are while the same are employed in the execution of said contract for the transportation of foreign mails.

Mr. MORGAN. Before the debate arises on that proposition I wish to ask the Senator from Kansas and the Senator from Kentucky also about one feature of the committee's proposition. I premise the question I am going to ask by saying that the only complaint I have heard at all about the mail service is that the clerical force at some of the principal distributing points, particularly in the new parts of the country, is not sufficient to handle the mails. I infer that that grows out of the fact that we have decreased the postage and, thereby, very largely increased the weight and volume of the mail matter. I want to ask whether or not the sum allowed for compensation to clerks in post-offices is enough. It is $5,450,000.

Mr. BECK. We have added $300,000 over the appropriation for the current year.

Mr. MORGAN. Are you still above the estimates?

Mr. BECK. Just up to the estimates.

Mr. MORGAN. Five million three hundred thousand dollars has been estimated for.

Mr. BECK. And that is allowed.

Mr. MORGAN. And is supposed to be enough for that purpose?

Mr. PLUMB. That is what the Postmaster-General says is enough. The Senator from Kentucky says it is an increase of $300,000 over last year. It is exactly what the estimates provided for, and, of course, we assumed that was all that the Postmaster-General could spend if he had the money.

Mr. MORGAN. Is the Senator from Kansas satisfied that that is enough?

Mr. PLUMB. I can not say that I am entirely satisfied on that point; but still that question of what is enough is a compound of two other facts. One is the question from the view of the public as to what is enough; the other is the view of the Postmaster-General of what is enough. My own belief is that if this money were properly distributed it would be ample.

This is the complaint I make against the Department, and I always have—for the abuse exists now probably in no greater degree than it has under preceding administrations—that the clerks in the large post-offices like New York, Buffalo, Cleveland, Pittsburgh, and so on, get from two to three and even four times as much compensation as they do in the second-class offices throughout the country for the rendition of the same services and under the same responsibility. There are a number of employés in the New York post-office as clerks under the postmaster of that city getting four and, I am told, even as high as five thousand dollars a year each, and there are none of the clerks of the lower grades of pay in that office as there are in the second-class offices in the Senator's own State and mine and throughout the country. I think if the services were properly adjusted there is an ample fund provided. In the second-class offices the service is not satisfactory at the present time.

Mr. MORGAN. Is it classified?

Mr. PLUMB. Do you mean under the civil service?

Mr. MORGAN. No; is it classified in respect of the number of clerks of a certain grade that shall be employed in the second-class offices?

Mr. PLUMB. No; it is not classified. The postmasters at different places employ such persons as they see fit out of the lump sum allowed, certifying to the Postmaster-General their list of employés with the salaries, and so on. The Senator from Maine suggests that they seldom pay over $500 for clerks. I think that is pretty low, but the maximum of employés' pay is about $1,200, and it ranges from that down to about $300.

Mr. MORGAN. I was trying to find out, if I could, where the fault is, if there is any fault, in the distribution of these offices and of this labor at the different post-offices. It is apparent, I think, that the trouble is with Congress in not having legislated so as to provide a sufficient number of officers for each second-class office, and having them classified or graded so that each class can receive a certain amount of pay for which we make appropriation. If we leave the matter entirely discretionary with the Postmaster-General, with such a vast multitude of officers as must be employed by the United States, we are to expect, of course, some imperfection in the service. I think therefore that the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads or the Committee on Appropriations, one or the other, ought to take this matter in hand and provide by law how much the post-offices ought to have in the way of service.

Mr. BECK. The difficulty which the Senator will readily comprehend is that in Kansas a thousand miles of additional railroad are to be provided for. Towns grow up almost in a day. Others when they get off the line of railroad fall off. Thirteen thousand miles of new railroad will be finished this year, and every railroad is a post-route as soon as it is finished. So there is a shifting, a changing, and it is very difficult for any committee to lay down any rule to be observed because of the change in the condition of things.

Mr. MORGAN. The committee could certainly rate the post-offices according to the amount of business that had been transacted in each during the past fiscal year so as to designate the number of clerks of certain grades or classes that should be employed and make provision for paying them. The committee can not ascertain this. It must be for the Postmaster-General to do it. I only wonder that he keeps the machinery of this postal system in as good condition as it is with our rapid expansion, the building up of new railways and new towns. In regard to the second class post-offices, it seems to me the trouble we are talking about now is in this very point, that we do not provide by law for the gradation or classification of the employés in second class post-offices and provide that when the income of an office is so many dollars a year it shall be entitled to so many clerks of such and such grades. It is our fault, and not the fault of the Postmaster-General that we do not do this.

I was apprehensive there was not money enough appropriated for this purpose in the bill, but it seems the committee have given $300,000 beyond the appropriation of last year, in accordance with the recommendations of the Postmaster-General, which I hope will be ample.

Mr. BECK. We give him every dollar he asks for everything.

Mr. PLUMB. The Post-Office Department in distributing this money attempts to follow some such rule as the Senator from Alabama has mentioned; that is to say, the proportion between the allowance for clerk-hire and the revenues of the office. Of course it is not arbitrarily fixed. A good deal depends on the equity of the case and the information the Department receives from inspectors and the pressure brought to bear by the postmaster to be affected and his friends. But still there is running through all these allowances more or less of this theory of relation to the receipts of the various post-offices.

Now I ask the attention of the Senator from Kentucky for a moment, in the way of a supplement to what I said yesterday about the condition of the mail service in Kansas, to show that this complaint is not alone from thriving and growing States like Kansas, but to show that the same complaint exists in older communities. I do not mean to say thereby that these States are not also growing, but States in which this charge could not be made for any political purpose. I quote now from the Atlanta Constitution of a recent date:

The Democrats of the South are not, as a general thing, standing around hunting for offices—

Which I am glad to have certified to from high authority—

but if they were, and failed to receive them, they would not on that account desire to destroy the Democratic party. There can be no doubt, however, that some of the Departments, under Mr. Cleveland's administration, call loudly for reform.

It seems to me I have heard that word before in connection with the administration of the Government. There was something about reform during the last election, and a good deal of anticipation was indulged in as to the reform that might be expected to ensue on the election of a Democratic President and the incumbency of a Democratic administration.

There is the Post-Office Department, for instance: such ridiculous management (or mismanagement) of the mails has not been seen in the country for many years. Complaint seems to do no good. The mail delivery appears to be out of gear in every part of the South, particularly in those regions covered by the daily and weekly editions of The Constitution. Whether these irregularities are due to carelessness or inefficiency it is needless to inquire. It is enough to say that they exist and that they ought to be remedied.

In this connection I desire to read the following, from the New York Tribune:

A DEMORALIZED POSTAL SERVICE.

The Boston Globe (Dem.), which did its best to secure a Democratic restoration, now that it has got what it labored for is not happy. It devotes a long leader in its issue of Thursday last to the presentation of facts designed to prove that this reform administration is giving New England a conspicuously wretched postal service. This leader, which is entitled "Important to merchants," begins this way:

"It is hardly possible that the business men of Boston and New England are fully cognizant to the extent to which their interests are jeopardized by the inferior facilities afforded by an important branch of the public service. We refer to the postal Department. A vast proportion of the correspondence between New England and the Southern and Southwestern States is carried on by mail, and thousands of important letters are sent every day between these sections—letters of importance concerning extensive and important trade. It would naturally be supposed that, in the process of transmitting this mail, proper facilities would be provided for carrying it forward in the most expeditious manner. All avoidable delays, it should seem, would be done away with as soon as their habitual occurrence had become known. But such is not the case."

With these salient introductory remarks The Globe proceeds to particularize. And we are bound to say that it makes good its charge. It shows that the mails leave Boston for New York and points in the South and leave New York for Boston and points in New England at hours which preclude the possibility of letters being delivered with anything like reasonable dispatch to New England merchants or the business correspondents of New England merchants. As The Globe figures it the night mails from New York for Boston are delivered just twenty-four hours behind the time when they might be delivered if the postal Department were efficiently conducted. This is certainly a discreditable state of things. Time is money, especially with business men, and yet here we are confronted with the spectacle of an administration which rode into power on the great practical reforms it was going to accomplish, needlessly delaying the mail of Boston merchants twenty-four hours! It is not to be wondered at that The Globe is moved to exclaim, "This is so totally indefensible that it will probably be difficult to convince some of our merchants that the condition of things described exists, but it is all true."

We can scarcely believe that the task of convincing the Boston merchants of the truth of what The Globe alleges will prove "difficult." For they must have learned long ago that the foreign postal service of this reform administration was apparently conducted with a view of affording the greatest inconvenience to the greatest number. Why, then, should they expect a satisfactory domestic service?

I have the best of reasons for saying also that the service in the State of Texas, in the Territory of Montana, in the State of Nebraska, and in other portions of the country is very much in the condition that the State of Kansas was yesterday described to be by me.

Mr. COKE. Will the Senator from Kansas yield to me?

Mr. PLUMB. I yield.

Mr. COKE. The mail service in Texas, especially in the second and third class offices, is very poor. There has never been a time in the history of the State since I have known it when it has been worse, except during the war; and it results from the fact that there is an insufficient force to handle and distribute the mails. There is not a postmaster of the first or second class in the State of Texas, as I believe, who, in his efforts to run his office decently, has not paid from 20 to 30 per cent. of the salary which is allowed to him for his labor for clerk-hire which should be furnished by the Government.

Complaints have been frequently made to the Department, and no relief can be had. There is no relief in this bill, because the increase of $350,000 for clerk-hire was just as stated by the Senator from Kentucky this morning, to be to cover the natural increase of the postal business. If we have not been discriminated against unjustly in Texas—and I do not charge that—if we have received our share of the appropriation of the last fiscal year coming under the head of "clerk-hire," and there is no more appropriated in this bill than is necessary to meet the actual increase of postal business for the next fiscal year, we shall have to suffer under inadequate service for another year.

Mr. PLUMB. I want to say briefly in regard to this matter further that the complaint goes to the misconception which the Department has of the needs of the service and the relation of those needs to the revenues to be derived from a particular portion of the service. Quoting now from the report of the Second Assistant Postmaster-General, who has this matter specially in charge, he says:

During the last fiscal year a careful inspection of the service-and a readjustment thereof on a basis of the postal business transacted at the offices supplied has resulted in a very large reduction in the cost.

The star-route service—

Nothing could be more vicious or unsound than the proposition to base this service upon the postal business transacted at the various offices. For instance, half a dozen offices having the same revenue and all at different distances from a railroad, the first one we will say 5 miles, the second 10 miles, the next 15 miles, the next 25, the next 30, and the next 40 miles. Each one of these offices yields the same revenue, for example, but it requires a different amount of money to give to each one of these offices the same service; and yet upon the theory of the Department, as stated by the Second Assistant Postmaster-General, that community which happens to be the farthest away must have its postal service reduced in proportion to its distance away from the railroad, and not have a service as compared with other offices, nor in proportion to its needs compared with its business. An office 5 miles from a railroad might have a daily service for one quarter, but a similar office situated 40 miles away could only get weekly service, and it is upon this arbitrary, illogical, and entirely at-large-view of the situation that the service is now carried on, and which has resulted in a saving at the expense of those proper facilities to which these communities are entitled.

Mr. President, I accept the suggestion of the Senator from Kentucky, that I should make a statement of the reasons for the proposed amendment giving to the Postmaster-General half a million dollars for the purpose of establishing a certain postal service by sea.

The subject is not a new one in the Senate or in the country. It was discussed at some length at the last session of Congress. At that time the Post-Office Department was, or was supposed to be, against making any special provision for steamship service. This year, however, the Department is in favor of exactly what the amendment under consideration provides for. I could not, if I were to speak all day, add anything to what the Postmaster-General so distinctly, so ably, so exhaustively presents in his annual report. I indorse every word of it, and I will ask the Secretary to read the report.

The Secretary read as follows:

In the appended report of the foreign mails office a particular statement is given of the quantities of mail matter transported by, and of the payments and rates to, each of the various companies which participated in this service, with much other interesting matter.

Petitions, numerously signed by well-known and enterprising merchants and manufacturers of New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, New Orleans, Saint Paul, Minneapolis, and other places, have been presented to the Department for the establishment of direct and regular mail communication with the Argentine Re public, the Republics of Uruguay and Paraguay, and for a semi-monthly service to the Empire of Brazil. These petitions represent that within a few years past the Argentine Republic has increased in population and wealth with greater proportionable rapidity than any other country on the globe; that our manufactures, particularly machinery and coarse cottons, are in demand there, but our trade is limited by the lack of direct mail facilities and direct passenger and freight lines; that our direct monthly mail service to Brazil has increased our exports of manufactures to that empire; and it may be confidently expected further advantageous results would follow the solicited enlargement of mail communication.

No authority of law exists of which the Department can avail itself to meet this request. The statutes now give power to employ only such vessels as may be intending voyages to foreign ports in the course of their trade. It has been a constant study to secure by such means the greatest possible frequency and celerity of dispatch, and every opportunity afforded by the sailing of any vessel promising any such advantage has been promptly seized, so that, at the present time, the Department enjoys the best methods for the transportation of its mails to foreign ports which the existing establishments of lines of ships or the occasional sailings of vessels foreign-bound render possible. No gain in regularity, frequency, security, or speed can be attained unless other ships shall be put upon the seas by private adventure or by foreign powers, or other provision shall be made by the Congress.

The particular application of these petitioners appears to me to be entitled to serious consideration. There is not now direct mail communication between this country and a port south of Rio de Janeiro. To the latter the ships of the United States and Brazil Mail Steamship Company afford but one dispatch a month. To more northern ports of the Brazilian Empire somewhat greater frequency is attained by the occasional use of other vessels; but the sailings of these are not regular, and the gain by their employment is but moderate. It is not to be doubted that the extension of direct service to the southern republics of the continent, and regular semi-monthly service to the Brazilian metropolis, would be valuable and desirable, measured by the principles which should alone govern sound postal administration. The application of the petitioners is entirely distinguishable from the subject which was discussed in the last report, and was thoroughly considered and wisely resolved by the Congress at the last session. The proposal then negatived was to pay all existing American companies for no more and no better service than they now render, and for years had rendered, a compensation much beyond what they had been accustomed to receive, and much beyond the limits of adequate remuneration. It would have secured no additional advantages to the postal service; but, instead, would have multiplied its cost, with no other tendency than to enable existing carriers to intimidate competition, and thereby restrict the increase of facilities available for the service, as well as for commercial intercourse. It would have been not only an unnecessary but a pernicious bestowal of the public money on one class of carriers.

This application suggests the augmentation of existing service and the creation of new with the particular states, in both aspects desirable; the purchase of mail facilities which do not exist, and can not be expected soon to exist in the ordinary manner. The requisite expenditure would be for something worthy of expenditure, and within the general usage and the sound principles of the postal service. It should ever be regarded as wise administration to keep postal facilities rather somewhat in advance than in anything lagging to the rear of all the proper requirements of intercourse excited by the ties of blood or race, popular education and enlightenment, trade and commerce. Upon this footing very many domestic routes are maintained at a cost many times beyond their immediate and direct returns, but undeniably to the great increase of the country's general welfare; and whenever the substantial need of intercourse by the mails arises provision for such communication is promptly made.

These considerations suggest inquiry whether there be the need of such mail communication with the mentioned countries of the southern continent, whether that need be worthy of special effort to meet it, and whether it can be supplied at a cost justifiably adequate to the present and prospective value of the proposed intercourse. The determination of these inquiries rests with the Congress, and the Department is privileged, and by its information able, only to express the general opinion that such service would be highly useful and is fairly demanded by the interests of the country, and its early establishment should be attempted; and I respectfully suggest that you invite the attention of that body to the subject in such terms as shall commend it to careful consideration. Should the recommendation meet with favor in its general aspects, the Department might be authorized to solicit proposals for the performance of such a service as the Congress should deem desirable, with limitations as to cost prescribed by its judgment of the probable resulting value to the country or otherwise.

There is good reason for the expectation that such an invitation, open to fair and general competition, for a service of a sufficient duration to warrant the requisite provision of vessels, would result in proposals that would enable a desirable contract to be made and a system of communication to be established of great and lasting advantage to the United States. The rapid development and growth of the countries in view, their lack of manufacturing establishments of their own, the desirable character of their products for exchange, and the advantages of extending the fields of enterprise of our citizens, as well as of creating firmer ties between the peoples of our continent, invite the extension and enlargement of our postal facilities by every just, reasonable, and economical method in consonance with sound principles.

Mr. PLUMB. In view of the very exhaustive argument in favor of the amendment which has just been read, I should be disposed to overlook his kick at the action last year, which is contained in the same report, which I will read. It will be observed that he confesses all the way through that he obtained his information from the petitioners, whom he mentions; that they have opened his eyes to a condition of things of which he was not before advised, but, like a sensible man, as he is, he is willing to accept information from whatever source it may come, and to act upon it. As I said, he rather ungraciously kicks back at the proposition of last year designed to accomplish the same thing, in these words:

> The application of the petitioners is entirely distinguishable from the subject which was discussed in the last report, and was thoroughly considered and wisely resolved by the Congress at the last session. The proposal then negatived was to pay all existing American companies for no more and no better service than they now render, and for years had rendered, a compensation much beyond what they had been accustomed to receive, and much beyond the limits of adequate remuneration. It would have secured no additional advantages to the postal service; but, instead, would have multiplied its cost, with no other tendency than to enable existing carriers to intimidate competition, and thereby restrict the increase of facilities available for the service, as well as for commercial intercourse. It would have been not only an unnecessary but a pernicious bestowal of the public money on one class of carriers.

The proposed appropriation of last year for a similar purpose left, as this proposition does, the whole question in the hands of the Postmaster-General. His discretion was just as wide as the object of the appropriation. He was not absolutely required to do anything, but he was simply authorized to give the money necessary to carry out a purpose expressed by Congress under such terms and conditions and limitations as he himself should deem wise, and he could even refrain from doing anything if he saw fit so to do. The Senator from Kentucky may remember that the question as to whether he should be directly commanded to do certain things was discussed in the committee, and that no point was made over his refusal to carry out the law passed by Congress upon the same general subject, but that it was designed to put, and in the most friendly spirit, the appropriation in the hands of the Postmaster-General, to be expended according to what his wisdom should dictate, and if there was anything in it that savored of combination or of unjust favor it was only because his discretion would be moved in that direction.

The Postmaster-General states the case this year very strongly. He finds that in certain very important portions of South America there is need of postal connection with the United States, and he finds that there are no vessels plying between the ports of the United States and those of these countries, and that therefore there is no adequate means whereby the Department can send the mails to those countries, and he expresses, what is not a new idea, that there is a relation between the postal facilities of the country and its commercial business which can not be ignored; that one is the handmaid of the other, and he sets forth very graphically the fact that the people in this portion of South America thus shut off from direct communication with the United States are very desirous of buying the products of American manufacturers, and that they would do this to a very large extent if there were means whereby these products could be carried to these waiting countries; and he says that the establishment of postal facilities would not only increase the revenues of the Post-Office Department to a material extent, but that the establishment of these facilities would do what the establishment of such facilities have done elsewhere, add to the business of the communities that are brought together by means of this postal service and thereby bring a great incidental advantage.

This proposition leaves the expenditure of all this sum of money under the control and at the discretion unlimited of the Postmaster-General. He is to use it, if he uses it at all, for the accomplishment of certain purposes, and that service he may begin at any port of the United States—it may be from Galveston, it may be from New Orleans, it may be from Mobile, from Pensacola, from Charleston, from Wilmington, from Norfolk, from Baltimore, from Philadelphia, or from New York. He has his choice. Congress does not interpose to give any direction whatever, but he is to establish, if he establishes at all, with the purpose of securing greater efficiency and regularity and dispatch and a greater speed in the carriage of such mails. He is to be the judge of the coming together of these different conditions; he is to determine absolutely whether the expenditure would be required, and upon his determination alone the whole thing is to proceed.

That is in direct line with another appropriation contained in this bill, and which has been found in such bills for years, "for special facilities on certain lines of railroads, $297,000,000," &c. I recall very well when that appropriation was first made. I know very well the idea in mind at the time. It was not merely to establish a service between New York and Boston and the newer portions of the remote Southern States, which did not supply facilities enough to enable the railroads to carry the mails at a proper speed, but it had for its design further the ultimate connection of this country with Cuba by means of a line of railroad extending from New York to Tampa Bay, on the west coast of Florida, and the establishment of a line of steamers thence to Havana, and the law was so amended that the Postmaster-General might contract for so much of that service as lay between Tampa Bay and Havana, not under the burdens of the existing law in regard to foreign mail service, which limited the amount he must pay, but he might bring it under the liberal and comprehensive provision of the law concerning our coastwise service, which put no limit at all upon the amount which might be paid.

As the result of that is that we now have a service which is completed from New York to Havana in sixty-eight hours, and under the operation of which this country has been drawn into close and is daily being drawn into closer commercial and friendly intercourse with the Island of Cuba, and there is carried on this route thus subsidized nearly all the outer-bound mail from the Island of Cuba, and we are beginning to receive the revenue which we have a right to expect from the quickening of the service and the shortening of the time of transit from New York to Havana, we are adding materially to our intercourse with Cuba, and increasing our trade, which will prove to be one of the most beneficent of our acquisitions in recent years.

Looking back over my service in this body I am glad to be able to fairly claim some of the credit in bringing about this great result, and I believe that a similar wisdom of expenditure in the direction indicated by the Postmaster-General, made of wider application, will in due time bring even greater results in other directions. And what is the amount involved?

We appropriate every day for objects of a less commanding public nature much larger sums of money than that proposed. The objection, therefore, can not be to the amount of money. The amount that we pay to the great railroads of the country is just as much in its nature a subsidy as that which we propose to pay to this steamship line if it shall be established. The Government does not stop to consider whether it can get this service for a less price at the hands of the railroads; but it simply says, under all the circumstances, considering the fact that we want every day a better service, a faster service, a more certain service, that what we give them is a fair compensation for that which we expect in return and which we get. We do not put it up to competition, and we do not higgle about the allowance, but give the service required and the money is forthcoming within the limit of the law.

This amendment is designed simply to apply to the proposed service between this country and South America the same principle which we have applied from the beginning of time with reference to our internal service. Give a handful of Americans in the Argentine Republic, in Uruguay, in Paraguay, and establish communication with their mother country, establish lines of steamers that will carry to them the mails which are necessary to their business and convenience there, and the handful of men will become colonies, and the colonies will become a great people, and there will be a connection, not merely of a commercial character, but a connection by blood, by similarity of institutions, by all that community of interests which binds together remote populations and makes them mutually dependent and mutually helpful.

Mr. President, this is not a new policy. It is a policy which has been adopted by all the great nations of the world; it is a policy which has been applied in the widest possible way and to every portion of the foreign mail service of Great Britain, Germany, and France.

Under this policy applied by those great governments they have taken possession of the world's commerce.

It is useless to say that we can regard all this as of no consequence and as idle. We are competing with these nations for this very trade. It is essential to us that we should have these places brought near to us in order that they may furnish, not only markets for home manufactures directly, but that they may furnish new fields of enterprise for the young and the active of our population, whose horizon is constantly widening, and who are looking now to the tempting fields of South and Central America in the hope of that profit and of that power which is a part of the ambition of every properly constituted American.

We can not either overlook the fact that our neighbor on the south, the Republic of Mexico, is entering into the same field. During the last session of the Mexican Congress a bill was passed making a concession, which has since passed into the hands of an American company, organized under the laws of the State of Connecticut, granting a subsidy of $8,000 a round trip for a steamship line between San Diego in California to a port in Guatemala, both the terminal points being out of the Mexican jurisdiction and off Mexican soil; and this is to continue for twenty years. Other privileges are granted to the steamship line as well. They are not required to carry the Mexican flag nor to use ships with Mexican registers during the first three years. They are permitted to import free of duty during twenty years all articles necessary for the repair or construction of their ships. They are given the preference right to use the Mexican navy-yards for the purposes of repair, construction, and shelter.

Mr. MORGAN. Will the Senator allow me to inquire whether he would like to see that Mexican concession incorporated in our laws?

Mr. PLUMB. If the Senator means to make a play upon the particular terms of it, I might say no.

Mr. MORGAN. No; I make no play.

Mr. PLUMB. But if he means to ask me whether or not there ought to be mails carried on regular lines of American steamships from points on American soil to points in South America and other countries with which we need communication, I answer unhesitatingly yes, no matter what may be necessary to bring it about.

Mr. MORGAN. The statement of the Senator I understood was that the Mexican Government had contracted that for three years the mails might be carried in ships that were not Mexican built. Would the Senator be willing to see that done in regard to American ships?

Mr. PLUMB. No, Mr. President; I would not.

Mr. MORGAN. I would. My amendment is to that effect.

Mr. PLUMB. I understand, and that has been the marvel of my experience with the Senator from Alabama, one of the broadest-gauged members of this body, a man whose horizon embraces the entire world, and one whose State has more of the natural facilities for the manufacture of steamships of modern character and construction than any other State in the Union, and who, if he could only cut himself away from this theory of his about using foreign ships, and give the influence of his vote and his voice to persuade his party to join in the policy which would build up American ship-yards and lead to the construction of American ships by American labor out of American material upon American soil, would make Mobile the great mouth by which the United States should speak to the South American republics and would build up these great manufactories of ships and all other articles whose chief constituent was iron.

Mr. MORGAN. If the Senator will indulge me a moment, I give my thanks for the very high eulogy he has bestowed on me, but I wish to say that I understood him to quote approvingly the statement he made in regard to the progress of Mexico, that she had made contracts giving $8,000 a round trip to a Connecticut company for carrying her mails in ships that were not Mexican, that for three years that company should have the option of carrying in American-built ships. I understood the Senator to quote that approvingly as an evidence of Mexican progress, and I thought I would try to induce the Senator from Kansas to go as far forward as Mexican progress would permit her to go in the direction of neighborhood and good will and right advancement. I commend his own quotation to him as a very wise thing for us to do.

Mr. PLUMB. The circumstances are entirely different. There are not the facilities in Mexico for the immediate manufacturing of ships.

Mr. MORGAN. There is no facility in the United States south of Wilmington, Del., for the manufacture of ships, and I want a chance to buy a few to start the project. If you give us that chance we will commence building our ships right away.

Mr. PLUMB. I do not know what particular argument there is in the fact there is nothing south of Wilmington, Del. I am willing to take in the entire country, that part lying north of Wilmington as well as that south of it, and if the Senator from Alabama will get himself in line with the true American idea there will be manufactories of ships south of Wilmington, and whatever reproach there may be growing out of the fact that the manufacture of ships has heretofore been north of that line will not be permitted longer to exist. Because ships can not be manufactured in Mexico, because Mexico can not wait, or at least she thinks she can not wait longer for the establishment of this line of communication between San Diego and Guatemala, and which takes in all the service of her ports between these two terminal points, she has said to this American company, "You need not carry the American flag for three years; you shall have that time to make the necessary preparations for the acquisition of ships which can carry the Mexican flag." And yet the Senator from Alabama, with all the wise forecast which he has exercised in warning the American people to prepare for the defense of their interests against the aggressiveness of Great Britain, is not willing that adequate means shall be used to that end. He has specially called attention to the British designs upon the commerce of the Pacific Ocean and the preparations therefor made at Vancouver, and deplored the fact that no adequate preparation had been made to meet the new competition which is in the guise of subsidized mail ships, yet is here to say in effect that he is not willing that the American Government shall give compensation to an American ship engaged in carrying American mail, but if anything is to be done it is to be thrown open to the products of foreign workshops, and that only on condition that it shall thus be thrown open is he willing that the American Government shall undertake to provide means of communication between our people and those of South America.

Mr. MORGAN. That is not a fair statement of anything I have ever said in the Senate or any vote I have ever given.

Mr. PLUMB. I do not feel offended at the sight of an American ship. I am not offended at the prospect of our having American ship-yards in which those ships can be made, evidencing the skill of the American people, equal to the best that can be found elsewhere in the world; and I am willing to adopt at least some of the means which have been adopted by other governments so effectively to bring about this most desirable result.

It has been but a few weeks since the British Government had some trouble with steamship lines which before that time had been carrying its own mail from Liverpool to New York. It has resulted in that government adopting as a policy the payment of bounty for the manufacture of ships by private parties, the ships to be subject to the inspection of the admiralty, to be made upon plans to be devised by them, the government reserving to itself as the only consideration for the great bounty that it gives the privilege of using the ships in war times at a peace price, that price to be fixed when the bounty is paid. It is thus that that great people, and with the highways and by-ways of the world studded with their forts, covered with their ships and her commercial and military communities, takes a bond of fate against the perils of the future. It is the policy which does not wait until the danger is upon us before preparation is made. It is the policy which sees in British manufacturers of ships and of all other materials the muniments of British power. It is that policy which formulated and acted upon the idea that when we enter that domain in which states struggle for supremacy there are no morals save interest and no principle except power.

Upon that principle the British Government has always acted. It is the secret to-day of her dominating influence in the commerce of the world, and it is because we, busied with the peopling of a continent, withdrawn from participation in international affairs by reason of the overwhelming preponderance of our domestic concerns, have given no attention to these matters heretofore; and when we turn our attention to outward matters we halt, hesitate, and higgle about the expenditure of a few dollars, display irresolution and indifference, lack of knowledge, and end by doing nothing, and so day by day move in a comparatively more narrow round.

It is not thus that we are to reflect the ambitions of our people. It is not thus that we are to answer the demands which republican institutions stimulating individual ambition require to be met.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. EUSTIS in the chair). The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, it is the duty of the Chair to lay the unfinished business of yesterday before the Senate.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (S. 2288) to incorporate the Atlantic and Pacific Ship-Railway Company, and for other purposes.

Mr. PLUMB. I ask unanimous consent that that be laid aside temporarily or informally, so that the consideration of the Post-Office appropriation bill may go on.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kansas asks that the unfinished business be informally postponed.

Mr. GIBSON. It will be the unfinished business?

Mr. PLUMB. Yes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair hears no objection, and that order will be made. The Post-Office appropriation bill is before the Senate.

Mr. PLUMB. Nothing that can be said at this time can do justice to this great subject. It has been discussed in the Senate before. I had not intended to discuss it at all. I only yielded to the suggestion of the Senator from Kentucky that I should make a statement of that which I believe to be the purpose of the committee, in harmony, as they believed, with the Postmaster-General in regard to this amendment. They were careful to put it in the precise terms which he himself named, and to limit it to the objects which he himself so well expressed, in order that there might not be a shadow of what might be called politics in it, that we might not be seeming to get up an issue with the Administration; but that, throwing aside partisan differences, meeting upon common ground for a common purpose, we should be willing to go hand in hand, even in the limited way which the Postmaster-General has asked and in the narrow pathway which he has marked out, for the accomplishment in some feeble way of the great purpose in view.

I believe if the appropriation is made this year, that next year the Postmaster-General will ask for more. His horizon will widen. He will not only see better the necessities of that Western country whose borders, I think, he never has crossed, but he will know more of the needs of our people in South and Central America, and with increasing knowledge will come a more just appreciation.

When he comes to that, Mr. President, he will not be asked by the Senate whether he be Democrat or whether he be Republican. He will only be asked, What is it you wish to do that will extend the proper postal facilities of the United States to its citizens at home and abroad; and what is it that incidentally you thereby hope or expect to do to build up the commerce, the business interests, and promote the welfare of the American people?

Mr. BECK. Mr. President, the Senator from Kansas began his speech and again at the close of it with still more emphasis announced that this subsidy scheme was in accordance with the views and wishes of the Postmaster-General, and he insisted that the Postmaster-General had advocated it in his last report; therefore he hoped that we would all unite in passing it, because Democrats and Republicans, the Post-Office Department and Congress, were at last in full accord. I insist that his statements and conclusions are wholly unwarranted by the facts.

Mr. President, I do not propose to discuss the merits of this proposition. I argued it elaborately last year. I do not propose to do it again. I know the Senate will vote for the subsidy. Anything in the nature of a subsidy can pass this body, but there is another body, fortunately, differently constituted, which, in my judgment, will never agree to it. I am content to let it pass here and go there.

In committee, out of committee, and everywhere else, I have insisted that a false construction has been placed on the last report of the Postmaster-General. I insist that a fair reading of his report shows that he and the Post-Office Department are as much opposed to this subsidy as they were to that of last year, and as they were to the spending of the subsidy which was forced upon them against their will year before last. The objection has always been because it is not in the interest of the Post-Office Department, but to the injury of the service as a carrier of mails, that this subsidy clause—limited to American-built ships—has been persisted in. We have tried this character of subsidy on the Garrison line; we have tried it on the Brazilian and Roach lines; we have tried it on the Pacific-Mail lines, and it brought neither trade nor business nor anything but scandal to all who were engaged in it. The Postmaster-General, seeking only to exercise his duties in the interest of the people desiring prompt mail facilities, denies emphatically that he intends to give sanction to any such proposition as is again presented.

I said to the committee when this proposition was before us that I opposed it, that the Department opposed it, and if they would call on the Postmaster-General they would find that he was opposed to it. The majority declined to ask him. They saw fit to assume that the language used by him was in accordance with the proposed amendment, which is substantially the same as that of last year, and that assumption is repeated by the Senator from Kansas on this floor. Believing that the assumption was false, for my own information I applied to the Postmaster-General to know whether I was right as to his construction of his report, or whether the gentlemen who desired to insert this subsidy clause were right. This is his answer:

POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE POSTMASTER-GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., February 7, 1887.

MY DEAR SIR: I have the honor to hand you a memorandum of such suggestions in respect to the Senate amendment to the Post-Office appropriation bill as I have been able hurriedly to dictate in the course of the day—

This was the day after the bill was reported—

A fair reading of my two reports, the one for 1885 and the other for 1886, will show, unless I am very greatly mistaken, that the only object or purpose in view, or suggested in the last report, was to obtain the carriage of the mails to the South American republics, with double service to Brazil, at such cheap and economical figures as would be necessary for the purpose; and that no idea of subsidy for the mere creation of a line of trade and travel was proposed. There are companies, nominally or actually of foreign organization, which I believe would compete for this service and furnish it at comparatively cheap figures. I believe, also, that if that competition were admitted—

It is effectually shut off in this amendment:

An American company would secure the service instead of a foreign company; but at fair remuneration, and not as the recipient of a subsidy. I think there is good reason to expect this result, if the opportunity be afforded for it; and that an enlargement of our postal facilities may be secured with no vicious course of subsidy legislation to bring it about. It was in this belief that the suggestion in the last report of 1886 was made.

I can not anticipate what may be said, unfairly perhaps, in criticism of the report, or in support of the assertion that the suggestion for this new service is inconsistent with the position taken in the report of 1885. I think, at least, that I see the distinction; that the distinction itself is clear and substantial, and that the extension of the postal service may be secured usefully and desirably, without the payment of a dollar of subsidy, but only by giving a fair remuneration for a very limited mail carriage at the beginning.

Thanking you, partly in advance, for the interest you have manifested in aid of the Department and for your valuable assistance in representing the Department in the Senate, I have the honor to be,

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

WM. F. VILAS.

Hon. J. B. BECK, United States Senate.

The statements of his object and purpose are so clear and so well put that I propose to read them in order to show that what the Senator from Kansas assumed was a change of front and an abandonment of his former position is not a fair construction of the statements made and of the views presented by the Postmaster-General.

I may as well say now that this subsidy amendment did not originate in the Appropriation Committee, and that it did not come from the Post-Office Committee of this body; it was not even suggested by the Post-Office Department; it came from the Committee on Commerce, and is a legitimate subject, as I said last year, for discussion when we come to consider the commercial relations of the United States with other countries; and only in that aspect is it legitimate, although it has been decided to be in order here. I will now read what the Postmaster-General says his report means. He states it better than I can, and surely he knows what he meant to say better than either the Senator from Kansas or myself. His statement is as follows:

In the Postmaster-General's report for the year 1886, on pages 30 to 32, inclusive, will be found what was said in respect to the establishment of new service to the Argentine Republic and the Republics of Uruguay and Paraguay, and in respect to semi-monthly service to the Empire of Brazil, which were the points mentioned in the petitions referred to in the report. It will be observed that the question of whether there was need of such mail communication sufficient to justify a special effort to secure it, and the question of the cost which might be justifiably authorized, and the present and prospective value of such service were submitted to the Congress.

A general opinion was expressed that such a service would be useful and it is fairly demanded by the interests of the country, and its early establishment should be attempted. It was also indicated that an invitation to provide such service should be "open to fair general competition," and that it should be provided in "a just, reasonable, and economical method, in consonance with sound principles."

The report also carefully distinguishes the proposed service from the controversy of last year—

I may add, of which this is a renewal—and from the proposal then made; showing "the proposal then negotiated was to pay all existing of American companies for no more and no better service than they now render, and for years had rendered, a compensation much beyond what they had been accustomed to receive, and much beyond the limits of adequate remuneration. It would have secured no additional advantages to the postal service; but, instead, would have multiplied its cost, with no other tendency than to enable existing carriers to intimidate competition, and thereby restrict the increase of facilities available for the service, as well as for commercial intercourse. It would have been not only an unnecessary but a pernicious bestowal of the public money on one class of carriers."

Attention was called to the fact that the application in the petitions suggests "the augmentation of existing service and the creation of new with the particular States, in both aspects desirable; the purchase of mail facilities which do not exist, and can not be expected soon to exist in the ordinary manner."

The first point to be observed in the proposed amendment is that it restricts competition to American built and registered steamships. This may be esteemed by the Congress a very desirable object, especially if a bounty is to be given to these ships, instead of merely securing, as the report proposed to do, increased facilities for postal service.

So far as the postal service is concerned, it does not particularly matter in what vessels the mail is transported, provided the regularity, frequency, and celerity desirable be obtained; and it is presumable that if the field of competition were to be enlarged a greater economy could be secured. It was not the object of the report to recommend the payment of any subsidy or bounty for the establishment of a line of ships. The purpose was simply to propose to obtain, at the cheapest practicable cost, the carriage of the mail to the countries mentioned. For the securing of mail carriage primarily and directly the amendment to the bill carries the aspect, at least, of proposing a subsidy to a line of American vessels in which mail carriage would appear to be but one of the objects sought.

This idea of subsidy is carried still further by the proposed amendment in the amount mentioned, of $500,000. It is true there is a limitation imposed besides that the rate shall not exceed $1 per nautical mile for each outward trip. The distance of the Brazilian trip is approximately and roundly 5,000 miles, and to Montevideo and Buenos Ayres but little more than 6,000 miles. The proposed monthly trip to Brazil and Buenos Ayres would therefore be limited by the amendment, in round numbers, to $75,000, and the additional semi-monthly trip to Brazil to $60,000, or the total annual cost to about $135,000, if the service should be such as the report suggested; and the appropriation of $500,000 for the next fiscal year indicates therefore a purpose to provide a sum nearly four times the amount suggested, even at the cost which the amendment limits it to of $1 per nautical mile for each outward trip.

It is the belief of the Department that even that price, of $1 per nautical mile for each outward trip, is at least twice as great as is necessary to secure the service contemplated, provided that competition be left unrestricted. I am strongly of the opinion that the service suggested in the report can be obtained at the annual cost of not exceeding $50,000, if it shall be so limited by the Congress.

The idea of the report was, and my present view is, that because of the distance and the fact that all communication is now lacking with the Argentine Republic and the Republics of Uruguay and Paraguay, sea and inland postage on the mails transported may not be a fair remuneration at present, nor does it appear adequate to secure direct mail carriage. But I do not regard it as requisite, in order to secure this service, that an extravagant bounty should be bestowed on any line of steamships. I think there is reason to believe that with a reasonable and limited mail-pay—strictly that—the service can be obtained.

Unless such service can be obtained for such a price, I do not regard it as desirable to be secured by the payment of a large bounty. Nor was it the purpose of the report to suggest that a subsidy should be provided in any case, under whatever name it might be called. From the standpoint of the postal service, and in my view of the necessity of the case, this amendment appears to be objectionable as indicating a purpose to provide an unnecessary subsidy for the establishment of the new service, both in the amount named and in the limitation upon competition. If the Department were authorized to procure the new service for a moderate cost, proportionable to its value, I believe the service could be obtained and every appearance, as well as the fact, of giving a bounty or subsidy be avoided.

It is true, it may be said, that the sums named in the amendment are outside limitations. But, practically, it is also true, as every one whose observation has been directed to our history must admit, that to name in the act an unnecessary and large sum tends to diminish the ability of the Department to secure the service at the moderate and economical price at which it might otherwise be obtained. If $50,000 a year be sufficient to secure the service, it can not but operate to cripple the power of the Department to obtain it at such a price to fix the appropriation at ten times that sum; because it will be understood by bidders that such is the design of Congress, and they will resort to every means to secure the full amount appropriated, if possible. Besides, such a course of contracting, if once entered upon with any line, will be claimed as a precedent to future Congresses for similar extension to others, however obvious may be the distinction between procuring a new service and paying for one already at the command of the Department.

That is a true exposition of the views of the Postmaster-General. I submit that he is the best judge of what he meant when he wrote the report, which the Senator from Kansas preferred to construe to suit himself, rather than ask the Postmaster-General what he meant by it.

Mr. PLUMB. In that view I admit that, and still I should attach great importance to the view; but the Senator from Kentucky must know, and the Postmaster-General must remember also, that the American people are not in such frequent communication with him that they can get from him always an authoritative exposition of what he meant. Therefore they have got to take what he says according to the ordinary construction of language as they have learned it. I will venture to say that when the Senator from Kentucky himself read that, or when he heard it read, and I think I know just when it was, it did not occur to him just then that it meant what the Postmaster-General says it did, but that he assumed it meant just what I said it did in the remarks I made. I do not believe there is any one who is not in spiritual communication with the Postmaster-General himself who would ever arrive at any other conclusion.

Mr. BECK. I desire to say in justice to myself, as it is assumed by the Senator from Kansas that I gave it the same construction, that in committee and everywhere else I denied that the report of the Postmaster-General was susceptible of any such construction as the Senator seeks to give it. I deny it now, and I insist that the American people will not give that report the construction given to it by the Senator from Kansas; they will give it the construction given it by the Postmaster-General himself.

I ought perhaps to add that whatever may be the difficulty of reaching the Postmaster-General in other regards and concerning other matters the Senator from Kansas knows that the Committee on Appropriations can get him to appear before them at any moment. He never fails to respond promptly whenever they ask him to come, and that committee can always get from him his construction of any communication or report that they may have any doubt about. The fact that the committee never called upon him when members of that committee were insisting that the committee were putting a false construction upon his language, and especially when the Post-Office Committee of this body having the postal service specially in charge sent no such amendment as this to the Appropriation Committee, and were not, perhaps, consulted in regard to it—I insist, when a difference of opinion existed as to the meaning of the Postmaster-General, it would have been the right thing to do if the majority proposed to charge a change of front or a change of feeling on the part of the Postmaster-General to have given him a chance to tell the committee what in fact he did mean. He never had any such opportunity, and it was because he had none, and because I knew from the statements in the committee that the majority proposed to charge that he had changed, and that the amendment was in accordance with his recommendation, and therefore we ought to stand by it, that I called upon him to know what his views were. I have read his response, and am willing to abide by it.

The President of the United States, in his last message, as well as the Postmaster-General, repudiated all idea of having subsidies incorporated into the Post-Office appropriation bill. The President says:

The Postmaster-General calls attention to the existing law for compensating railroads, &c.

The differences which arose during the year with certain of the ocean steamship companies have terminated by the acquiescence of all in the policy of the Government approved by the Congress in the postal appropriation at its last session.

That policy, as approved by Congress at the last session, was to strike out this subsidy, or one almost exactly like it. The President adds:

And the Department now enjoys the utmost service afforded by all vessels which sail from our ports upon either ocean, a service generally adequate to the needs of our intercourse.

He, too, calls attention to the petition which the Postmaster-General refers to, and treats them with the respect to which all petitions of American people are entitled by laying them before Congress and telling Congress what the petitioners demand. The President adds:

I suggest that as distinguished from a grant or subsidy for the mere benefit of any line of trade or travel, whatever outlay may be required to secure additional postal service, necessary and proper and not otherwise attainable, should be regarded as within the limit of legitimate compensation for such service.

Mr. President, that is the language of the President of the United States in his message sent to us within the last two months, and the language of the Postmaster-General following out the views of the President in laying the petition sent to him before the Congress of the United States, said what the Senator from Kansas said was at variance with other parts of his statement. The Postmaster-General said:

The application of the petitioners is entirely distinguishable from the subject which was discussed in the last report, and was thoroughly considered and wisely resolved by the Congress at the last session.

What does that mean? That the action of Congress at the last session in rejecting this subsidy was wisely resolved. The President says so, the Postmaster-General says so, and now are we to be told that the Postmaster-General has changed his mind and that this subsidy is proposed because he approves it and asks for it. The Postmaster-General further says:

The proposal then negatived was to pay all existing American companies for no more and no better service than they now render, and for years had rendered, a compensation much beyond what they had been accustomed to receive, and much beyond the limits of adequate remuneration.

The Postmaster-General has opposed and resisted in every form every suggestion looking to a subsidy as necessary for the successful operation of his Department. The appropriation for transportation of foreign mails is $375,000 for the concurrent year. In this bill, in lines 83 and 84, we make it $450,000, or an addition of $75,000. I do not know how far that might be applied or used to affect extended South American service, but there is $75,000 more added for the next year than was appropriated for this year, which if it can be applied to the purpose embraced in this proposition for a subsidy more than covers the $50,000, which the Postmaster-General says is all he asks.

There is no disguising the fact that the Committee on Commerce, looking to the commercial relations of the country and desiring to go into this subsidy business, determined to make another test of that pet policy, as they had succeeded in passing it through the Senate before on a Post-Office appropriation bill.

To show that the country is not deceived about this being a mere subsidy I will read an item from the Bulletin of the American Iron and Steel Association, which I found on my desk this morning. It understands the meaning of the proposition and, like all the organs of the high protectionists, is delighted with it. It says:

In reporting the Post-Office appropriation bill the Senate committee incorporated the subsidy clause rejected last year by the House. The clause appropriated $500,000 for the transportation of foreign mails by American built and registered steamships, to secure greater frequency and regularity and a greater speed in carrying the mail to Brazil, the Argentine Republic, and the Republics of Uruguay and Paraguay. Authority is given the Postmaster-General, after due advertisement, to contract with American-built steamships for a term of not less than five years, and at a rate of compensation not exceeding for each outward trip $1 per nautical mile between the terminal points by the most direct and feasible sailing route.

That paper is the chosen organ of the protectionists of Philadelphia, the Bulletin of the American Iron and Steel Association. Of course, it understands, as the country will understand, that this is a subsidy to be given to aid in building up and enriching a few companies who profess to own American-built ships, regardless altogether of the needs of the postal service. The $500,000 proposed to be donated is not wanted by it, and is not asked for by the Department. On the contrary, the message of the President, the report of the Postmaster-General, his communications to me which I have just read, all show that the Post-Office Department need no such sum, and do not want it for any postal purpose. On the contrary, the Postmaster-General insists that it is a limitation upon his power to carry the mails cheaply and rapidly instead of giving any additional facility.

If the Congress of the United States is going into the question whether we ought to subsidize the ships of private citizens in aid of commerce, or whether we ought to take any steps by law to increase our foreign trade, let us meet that great question fairly and discuss it fully as a separate proposition. I discussed it last year; I am ready to discuss it again. I do not care about reopening that wide field of discussion again on this bill. I desired to confine my remarks solely to the point that this subsidy is not needed and can not be wisely used for the postal service, and however desirable it may be for other purposes, when that question comes up I hope I will, as I have on other occasions, show that it is a bad way to make a beginning to extend trade by taxing our own people in order to give subsidies to a few ship owners who have to-day a monopoly of the coastwise trade. But I shall not go into that subject now. I do not wish to get started in an endless discussion. I know that in the argument I made last year I proposed to speak about three-quarters of an hour, and Senators by their questions kept me on the floor three hours and a half, and for fear that that might happen again, although I think my speech of last session can not be successfully answered—I feel sure that it has not been so far—I shall avoid further discussion and content myself with voting against this subsidy, as I have all others of like character.

Mr. PLUMB withholds his remarks for revision. [See Appendix.]

Mr. BECK. The Senator from Kansas is very free in his suggestions about coaching and subterfuges and other elegant forms of expression, when he speaks of the Postmaster-General and other gentlemen. I desire only to say as to the letter I read from the Postmaster-General that I saw him only for a minute on the subject. I told the Senator from Kansas that I was going to ask him if I was not right in my construction, and he asked me to deliver a message to him, which I did. I never spoke a word more to him. He said, "I will look at this and send you a statement in regard to my meaning." Before I saw him I sent him a message, asking if we should pass the bill as it came from the House. His answer was that the House bill was satisfactory. No suggestion was made by anybody that I know of to modify any opinion or view, nor is there anything in the letter or suggestions sent to me inconsistent with any language in the report. When the Senator from Kansas said that the report of the Postmaster-General last year induced him to believe that he would not have a letter carried on a vessel where there was a bale of goods, or on which commerce of any sort was carried, and that that was his construction of the meaning of that report, his reasoning was just as clear as to the proper construction of that report as it seems to be now as to the proper construction of this last report. I will leave his construction of both to the judgment of the country.

The reports of the Postmaster-General, both for last year and this year, are entirely consistent with each other. The Postmaster-General, like all other intelligent men, desires to see trade and commerce built up; he desires to see the mails of the United States carried wherever they are needed. He advised Congress that there are no mails now carried to Uruguay and Paraguay. He advises us he is anxious to send mails there; that they are growing countries, countries that would furnish us a prosperous trade if we will take pains to foster it, and therefore, he says, we ought to do everything we can to accomplish that result. He said so in his former report; he says it in the last report; and all that the Senator has said to induce us to believe that the Postmaster-General is now in favor of a subsidy is said, I have no doubt, in every report which has been made, and every Democrat on this floor and elsewhere has over and over again repeated it, but it seems the Senator from Kansas can not understand it. The trouble lies perhaps in the Senators own failure to comprehend the true meaning of these reports; they will be comprehended by the country.

Did it follow as a matter of course, or did it follow legitimately because the Postmaster-General desired to see all the facilities given for communication with all the countries of the world, that, therefore, he desires to give a needless subsidy to American-built ships, and insists that we shall not have the mails carried in any ship, unless it is built in the United States? He may have offers from a foreign ship that will make the passage in ten days, when the American ship will take twenty. Is it proper administration of a great department, paid for by the people using the mails, to say to the people of the United States who are interested in having prompt intercourse with foreign countries, "You shall not have your mail carried on a foreign-built ship, even if it goes in ten days to the port of destination; but you must put it upon an American-built ship if it takes her twenty days to do the work; you shall not have anything else;" and, I ask, is there any sense in Congress saying, "Mr. Postmaster-General, you shall not contract to have that service done for our people in anything else but in a ship of that character no matter how worthless she may be as compared with the great ships of other nations that are operating on the great oceans of the globe?"

Mr. PLUMB. Do I understand that he would be in favor of this proposition if we should authorize the contracts to be made with foreign-built ships?

Mr. BECK. I am not in favor of your proposition paying or limiting him to not less than a dollar a mile, even if the provision as to American-built ships was stricken out of it.

Mr. PLUMB. It does not say "not less than a dollar a mile." It says "not more."

Mr. BECK. That was the same clause which was inserted two years ago; and because the discretion was given to the Postmaster-General which he did not deem it wise to execute, the Pacific Mail Steamship Company and the Brazilian line refused to carry our mails, and there was a controversy last year because they said that discretion meant that they ought to have it. They refused to carry the mails altogether, and for several weeks our mails were stopped, and but for the intervention of foreign lines we could not have had the mails carried at all.

The failure of the Postmaster-General to give them all the money he could give was at the bottom of all the controversy of last year. They and their advocates have insisted that the discretion meant that they should have it all and they demanded it all, and the Senator from Kansas and his allies endeavored to censure the Postmaster-General in the arguments they made last year, because he did not give them all the money that was put into his hands and that he was authorized to give. The answer he makes to me to-day, which I have read, is substantially this: "When I know the service is not worth more than $50,000, when ten times that amount is put into my hands, the construction will be sought to be given again that because I have the power to give it Congress meant that these lines should have it;" and we shall have a renewal of the same contest that was made last year and year before last with the steamship lines owing to the use of the same language.

Mr. McPHERSON. Will the Senator from Kentucky permit me to put a question?

Mr. BECK. Certainly.

Mr. McPHERSON. In the exercise of that discretion by the Postmaster-General, have the mails been just as expeditiously and as satisfactorily carried without the payment of a subsidy as they would have been with a subsidy? Were there not American ships ready to carry the mails?

Mr. BECK. The limitation to American ships destroys the usefulness and value of the service.

Mr. McPHERSON. There has been no loss by the exercise of that discretion!

Mr. BECK. None; the reverse has been shown for the last year.

Now, Mr. President, speaking of the Cuban line, this was the condition as I recollect it: We had not only a railway line from Boston through New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Washington, and on to Tampa, but we had expedited that line for the purpose of giving all possible fast-mail facilities we could to our own people along the Atlantic seaboard. The crossing of that part of the Gulf enabling us to reach Havana could be done expeditiously provided we could induce our mail carriers to build large, fast-going steamers that could leave Tampa promptly on the arrival of the train and reach Havana within the hours fixed by the Cuban quarantine laws, and leave promptly the same day. They are compelled to land and leave in daylight, I believe; they can not land between dark and daylight; they must go in after the sun rises and leave before the sun goes down to avoid the delays caused by quarantine regulations as to yellow fever. A part of that expedition was for the benefit of the people living in Savannah, in Charleston, and in all the cities along the coast. Before we expedited and improved that service all the return mail for these cities, because of the slowness of the former service, or because of the inefficiency of it, went from Havana by way of New York, and then came along that line from New York through this country again down to Savannah before a man living in Savannah could get letters across from Cuba.

By getting a line of ships to go to Havana and come back rapidly in connection with that railroad, a man in Savannah or Charleston could get his mail direct from Havana without going around by New York and coming back. That was the condition, and we said, having expedited this great line, having given it a large increase of pay in order to take the mail rapidly and make that connection, seeing that we could get a faster line of ships between Tampa and Cuba, which could get there in daylight and leave before the sun went down and bring the mail back to Charleston and Savannah, instead of sending it by ocean to New York and then from New York down to these people, we gave the Postmaster-General authority to do what he pleased, and gave him the money to do it with. Whenever a case of that kind comes up it is only necessary to appeal to the intelligence of men to do what is right and best for the service.

We all voted for it, I suppose; I did, and I think the reasons for so doing were ample; I do not recall them all now; but when I am told that the Postmaster-General shall be confined to a particular class of ships on the ocean, whether they are good or bad, slow or fast, and give them an excuse by using language which indicates that Congress intends that they shall have the $500,000 whether they earn twenty or thirty thousand dollars of it or not, I submit that it is an impolitic provision. I am prepared, as I said, to discuss all the questions relating to the subsidy policy or impolicy, but I do not propose to do it now.

I do not believe in the policy of limiting mail service to American-built ships. I think one of the great troubles we have in this country grows out of the fact that we have treaties with all the nations of the world, Spain perhaps excepted, by which we allow their ships to trade and to bring their cargoes from any part of the world into all our ports upon exactly the same terms that ships built in the United States can bring similar cargoes, and all the other nations of the earth are allowed to buy their ships as cheaply as they can, wherever they please, and we seek to force our people, under pretense of protecting

American industry, to pay $400,000 to get an American-built ship in order to put a little money into somebody's pocket, while by treaty we allow all our foreign competitors to buy equally as good ships for $250,000 or $300,000. We thus handicap our own citizens in their efforts to compete for trade by forcing them to use a dear ship when all others who are competing with them, even for our own carrying trade, by our own treaties are allowed to purchase the cheapest ships they can obtain.

That I think I can show is absolute folly and all pretense that it aids American labor is nonsense. I think I can show that its effect has been to drive our shipping from the seas, to destroy or drive into other occupations the one hundred thousand sailors we had under Democratic low-tariff administrations, and to bring down our earnings from 85 per cent. of the carrying trade to less than 15 per cent. in the last twenty-five years. So far from being injured, England has been built up by our "dog in the manger policy." It is well known that she builds nearly all the ships now used in the world's commerce for private parties. Why? Because she builds them cheaper than anybody else, and private men consult private interest. There are just so many ships needed to do the world's hauling. England gets the money for doing it; it does not make any difference to her whether she gets it from a Frenchman or a German or from us. We are only injuring ourselves by agreeing that they may haul for us in cheap ships while we will not. We are only handicapping ourselves. All these things can be demonstrated to the plainest understanding. Instead of having $25,000,000 a year paid to us, as we had in ante-bellum days of balance of the carrying trade in our favor, we are paying out $160,000,000 annually to-day, of which England is getting $100,000,000, and we are feeding and supporting one hundred thousand of her sailors, all of whom she can turn against us at any moment when trouble comes, while we have none to enable us to defend ourselves against her.

That has been the effect of your miserable policy. Yet we are sometimes blustering here about fighting. We should remember that year after year we have destroyed and degraded American shipping, we have destroyed the occupation of the American sailor, and transferred him over to England, giving her, as I said, $100,000,000 a year as the balance of the carrying trade. Surely under our protective policy we have not been preparing for war in time of peace; nor has our high-protective policy left us after twenty-five years in a very enviable attitude as a commercial people among the nations of the earth.

But these are questions far beyond and outside of the mail service. All the Postmaster-General wants is money, enough money given to carry the mails; and $75,000 more is given for this service than we have for the current year for this character of service. I will only add that I think the Postmaster-General should be allowed to select any ship he likes and to send the mails as speedily as possible. But I am not going to make an argument against the subsidy. I know the Senate will vote for it. I hope the other House will not. That is all I care to say.

Mr. GORMAN. Mr. President, since I have had the honor of being a member of this body, I have uniformly supported all propositions to extend and increase our mail facilities, not only within our own territory, but have earnestly advocated every proposition to increase our facilities and encourage the establishment of new lines to countries south of us, and to pay for that service a fair rate of compensation, provided always that the contracts should be open to competition to all American citizens, and the service should be rendered in vessels of American build and register.

The amendment now pending before the Senate and reported from the Committee on Appropriations, had and has my earnest support. In advocating this measure in committee I supposed that I was in full accord with the Postmaster-General. I never until this moment have doubted that he was earnestly in favor of Congress authorizing him to do that which the committee proposes; and I submit, notwithstanding the statement made by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK], that there is scarcely an American citizen who read his last annual report who can have had any other idea.

I will read again, notwithstanding the Senator from Kansas has read it, a single paragraph of the able report of the Postmaster-General. After discussing the general question of our foreign mail service, he states:

> Petitions, numerously signed by well known and enterprising merchants and manufacturers of New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, New Orleans, Saint Paul, Minneapolis, and other places, have been presented to the Department for the establishment of direct and regular mail communication with the Argentine Republic, the Republics of Uruguay and Paraguay, and for a semi-monthly service to the Empire of Brazil. These petitions represent that within a few years past the Argentine Republic has increased in population and wealth with greater proportionable rapidity than any other country on the globe; that our manufactures, particularly machinery and coarse cottons, are in demand there, but our trade is limited by the lack of direct mail facilities and direct passenger and freight lines; that our direct monthly mail service to Brazil has increased our exports of manufactures to that Empire; and it may be confidently expected further advantageous results would follow the solicited enlargement of mail communication.
> No authority of law exists of which the Department can avail itself to meet this request.

I hold in my hand a clipping from a newspaper, written, as I am informed, by one of the most distinguished merchants in the city of Baltimore, which was a part of the argument presented to the Postmaster-General to induce him to recommend an appropriation such as the committee present. I ask the Secretary to read this communication.

The Secretary read as follows:

ROOM FOR AMERICAN CAPITAL—BANKS AND COMMERCE IN THE ARGENTINE REPUBLIC.

To the Editor of The Star:

SIR: In talking yesterday with Col. W. P. Tisdel, who has just arrived from the River Plate, some very interesting facts bearing upon the extension of our foreign commerce were developed. But few people are aware of the inviting field for the employment of American capital and the consumption of American manufactured products in the Argentine Republic. This is, perhaps, best indicated by the information given by Colonel Tisdel regarding the banks of that country. The Bank of the Province of Buenos Ayres has a capital of $34,000,000 gold; its deposits average $86,631,982; its operations during 1885 were $956,039,999; its number of depositors, 35,165. The National Bank has a capital of $20,000,000; its deposits in 1885 were $252,269,000; loans, $412,420,000; circulation, $35,000,000; surplus reserve, $5,112,167. The London and River Plate Bank has a capital of $10,000,000; reserve fund, $800,000; the net profits, exclusive of the addition to the reserve fund, in 1885 were $582,214.

The English Bank of the River Plate has a capital of $5,000,000; paid a dividend in 1885 of 7½ per cent. The River Plate Loan and Agency Company has loaned $1,000,000 on real estate and $750,000 on securities. The Bank of Italy and the River Plate has a capital of $1,500,000 and a reserve fund of $200,000. Most of these institutions are of comparatively recent origin, indicating the rapid development of this country. A French bank with a capital of $2,000,000 is about being started. The Carrabassa Bank is a private bank, which does an immense discount business and enjoys a large share of the public confidence. Colonel Tisdel adds that, with all these banking institutions, you can not buy exchange on New York. There is absolutely no banking business done with the United States. Even the drafts of our minister and consuls and the disbursement to our naval force in La Plata waters (the rendezvous of our South Atlantic squadron) have to be drawn through London. What is the reason for this state of things? Here is a republic whose constitution and laws are modeled after our own, with a population of 3,500,000, whose imports are about $100,000,000 annually. This republic has offered $100,000 a year toward establishing an American steamship line to the United States, and our great country meets this with the offer of "sea and inland postage," perhaps $2,000 a year.

Is it any wonder that we have no foreign commerce when we persistently neglect to adopt the successful methods of our competitors for the trade of the world? It is absolutely absurd to expect that trade will come our way when we do not furnish a means of communication. Steam has revolutionized the commerce of the world. Steamship lines build up their respective termini just as railroads do, and until we do as other nations do they will simply get the trade. Thirty-eight steamship lines now ply regularly between the Argentine Republic and all the principal ports of the world except those of the United States. All these, together with the opportunities for the remunerative employment of capital above mentioned, have grown out of the establishment of a few first-class mail steamship lines, which could not and would not have been established but for the liberal compensation paid by their various governments for the conveyance of the mails. Can there be any stronger evidence of both the duty and interest of the United States? Will the present administration, with all the needed means at its command, see this state of things continue?

MERCHANT.

NEW YORK, February 2.

Mr. GORMAN. With that condition of affairs, with the natural and anxious desire of our enterprising merchants throughout this country to extend our commercial relations, they presented the facts with great force and power to the Postmaster-General, and his reply was in effect, "Congress has not given me sufficient funds to give you increased mail facilities." "You ought to have them," he practically said, "but I am powerless to give you the facilities you ask." I will use the language of the Postmaster-General:

> The application of the petitioners is entirely distinguishable from the subject which was discussed in the last report, and was thoroughly considered and wisely resolved by the Congress at the last session. The proposal then negatived was to pay all existing American companies for no more and no better service than they now render, and for years had rendered, a compensation much beyond what they had been accustomed to receive, and much beyond the limits of adequate remuneration. It would have secured no additional advantages to the postal service; but, instead, would have multiplied its cost, with no other tendency than to enable existing carriers to intimidate competition, and thereby restrict the increase of facilities available for the service, as well as for commercial intercourse. It would have been not only an unnecessary but a pernicious bestowal of the public money on one class of carriers.
> This application suggests the augmentation of existing service and the creation of new with the particular states, in both aspects desirable.

The Committee on Appropriations, by this amendment, have said to him: "Here is the money; it is at your discretion; you apply it to the purpose of extending our mail facilities with all these countries south of us. There is no subsidy in it unless you make it a subsidy. You have the authority to contract with any existing lines of American ships, or any new line, if you can secure one, or not, as you see proper. If you think the interests of this country demand that you shall withhold the expenditure of every dollar, withhold it; but if, as you have said in your annual report, the public interest would be promoted, then expend it, or any portion of it, up to the limit of $500,000."

Mr. President, I had congratulated myself that I was in accordance with the recommendation of the Post-Office Department. I did not support it merely because I desired to be in accord with the Postmaster-General; I have supported like propositions when my party was not in power. I was perfectly willing to give to a Republican Postmaster-General the same authority that is contained in this amendment. I have not treated it at any time as a party matter, but as an American I have felt humilitated that our carrying trade upon the ocean was not in a condition of which an American could be proud, and I have been anxious to extend it.

Now, as I understand from the communication read by the Senator from Kentucky, the Postmaster-General takes the ground that he would be hampered by this provision because he is restricted to ships of American build.

I confess, Mr. President, my great surprise and disappointment that the Postmaster-General should take the ground he does in the communications read by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK], for I as a Democrat had found great satisfaction in the fact that within one year after the advent of a Democratic administration we had established a new line of American steamships between Florida and Cuba. Small as the beginning was, I had looked upon it as the commencement of a policy, or rather the re-establishment of the old Democratic idea by which our commerce should be increased and our mails carried to all the countries south of us in vessels sailing under the American flag.

And anxious as I was a year ago, as my friend from Kansas, with whom I differ politically, knows, to authorize the Postmaster-General to contract with the line from Tampa to Cuba, I was not willing to throw the door open, as was finally done by Congress, leaving absolutely at his discretion the amount he would pay, for the reason that in that case there was a monopoly; there it was a subsidy pure and simple, which could only be availed of by one line. All the rest of the ship-owners of the country were necessarily excluded from it. It was a line running in connection with a railroad and owned by a railroad, and nothing but that railroad could put on a line of ships between Tampa and Havana; but, thanks to a Department managed, I will say, economically, we did succeed in making a contract with that line which had a monopoly of that carrying trade, at a fair rate of compensation, and there is not an American to-day who does not feel proud of the result. It has not only increased our mail facilities and increased our commerce, but the Spanish mails—mail to and from Havana to Spain—are passing through our territory and over our railroads.

Mr. President, I understood the Senator from Kansas to intimate that possibly it was undemocratic to advocate a proposition which confines the carrying of this mail and the payment of this amount to American ships. I hold in my hand a communication to Congress—Miscellaneous Document No. 239, Forty-ninth Congress, first session—prepared by the Superintendent of the Foreign Mail Service, in which I find an abstract of all the laws on this subject that have been passed since 1845, and from 1845 to 1860 practically the Democratic party controlled this Government in all its branches. Never at any time, I believe, was it out of power in all at once. There is not an act upon the statute-book, from 1845 to 1862, that does not discriminate in favor of American-built and American-registered vessels in the carrying of the foreign mails of this country.

The Senator from Alabama says that is probably the reason we do not carry more of them now. He and I pride ourselves always, and he among the foremost in this land, in a reference to our carrying trade in the period between those years. There were Democrats then in Congress and in the executive department of the Government whose teachings and example I have always been taught to follow; and this is one of the prominent characteristics of their legislation, giving a preference to American-built ships. They appropriated from 1848 to 1860 inclusive $16,542,722.54 for carrying the foreign mails, of which $16,232,529.19 were paid to American ships, leaving only $310,193.35 which was paid in those thirteen years to vessels of foreign register.

Then, Mr. President, the war came on, and as a matter of necessity our vessels having been driven from the ocean, Congress in 1862 repealed the legislation of 1845 and permitted the Postmaster-General to send the mails by any vessel that left our ports. It was a public necessity. It was not the want of Americanism on the part of the Republican party, but the operations of war made it necessary. They reversed the Democratic policy of promoting the building of ships by making large appropriations for American-built ships to extend our commerce to all parts of the world, and from 1862 down to and including the year 1885 there was paid for foreign mail service $15,642,228.03. In these twenty-three years foreign vessels received $3,187,075.72 more than American-built ships. As late as 1885 we paid to foreign vessels $331,000 in round numbers, and only $49,000 to American-built ships.

Mr. President, we have reached a point in the history of our country when we are beginning to develop the iron and steel ship-building interest. It is a pregnant fact that since the advent of our party into power, and for the first time since the close of the war, the ship-yards not only on the Delaware but in Baltimore and on the Pacific coast are prepared to construct iron and steel vessels for purposes of commerce and of war which will compare favorably with any vessels constructed upon the Clyde. The liberal appropriations that have been and are likely to be made for the construction of war-ships, have, and will so encourage the ship-builders of this country that, in my judgment, all that is necessary to be done by the Government to establish lines of first-class steamers to all the countries south of us, is to say that when any line shall have been properly equipped we will give you the United States mails to carry, and we will apply the same rule in fixing the compensation that we apply to the railroads or to the transportation upon the waters of the United States. That is to say, we will give you fair compensation, taking into consideration speed and regularity of your trips.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I do not propose to take up the time at this late hour by any general discussion as to the merits of this proposition, which has been ingrafted on the Post-Office appropriation bill by the Committee on Appropriations. To go into that would be threshing old straw. The whole subject was thoroughly debated in the Senate at the last session, and the Senate took strong ground in favor of this proposition, which seeks, under the form of aid to the postal service, to extend and advance our communication with the sister republics of South America.

Nothing now can be added to the general considerations presented by the Senator from Kansas in favor of this proposition. But I wish to call the attention of the Senator from Kentucky to what must already be plain to his comprehension, that he is engaged in a failing cause. This proposition, which does open and encourage traffic and commerce with our sister republics of America, is growing in importance in the public mind, is gaining more and more recruits in Congress; and whether or not it be turned aside this year as it was turned aside last year by the action of the House of Representatives, sooner or later and at no far distant day it is bound to prevail.

The whole country has seen that those great regions lie open to our commerce; that they need our manufactures; that they furnish products which will be sent to us in exchange; that this commerce will relieve the present necessities of the country in over-production, which has resulted in slack employment of labor, and it is to be carried out in the future, and the Senator from Kentucky can not obstruct it long.

He told us last year that he was against it; that the President was against it; that the Postmaster-General was against it; that the Secretary of the Treasury was against it; that the House of Representatives was against it, and that his party here was against it. But light has dawned in darkened minds upon this proposition. The very intelligent and able exposition of this subject which was deliberately put out by the Postmaster-General in his annual report, and which has been again and again referred to to-day, shows that that official has at last seen light, and that his deliberate utterance is in favor of this general proposition.

The broad and generous ground taken just now by the Senator from Maryland shows that the Senator from Kentucky can not hold his party here in the Senate upon his opposition to this proposition, and if it fails now it will have added strength next year. The Postmaster-General has fallen away from the Senator from Kentucky; part of his own side of the House has fallen away from him; next year the President may fall away. Probably the last body, the last influence, the last power in the Government that will yield will be the body at the other end of the Capitol; but that is a body easily changed in the mutations of our politics, and the people who demand that we shall not go on supinely longer and let the great trade of the Southern republics drift away to European hands will at last be heard, and the Senator from Kentucky will see that his cause is a falling cause, and he, last of all, will be obliged to give it up.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President——

Mr. BECK. Will the Senator from Alabama allow me to say a word in answer to the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE]?

Mr. MORGAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. BECK. Whenever a proper occasion arises (and this is not one, because I feel that I am somewhat charged with the duty of passing the Post-Office appropriation bill as promptly as possible) I shall submit my views upon the questions now suggested.

I have only this remark to make now in regard to what the Senator from Maine has said: I may be engaged in a failing cause, but what I have been insisting upon for years past is that we shall open our markets at least to raw materials for our manufacturers, reduce our tariff taxation, allow our manufacturers to have a fair chance with those of the other nations of the world by making it possible for them to trade with 1,500,000,000 people now on the earth, instead of building a Chinese wall around our country and swapping our manufactures at double prices with fifty-six or sixty millions of our own people. When that cause and these objects that I have always advocated fail it will be a dark day for this Republic.

I will go as far as any man to aid in extending the markets of the country and in keeping the laboring men employed at the best wages, and letting the manufacturers sell their goods in the open markets of the world; but when I see a proposition introduced here to limit even the carrying of our mails, which means the right of men to send and receive their letters from one country to another, to American ships that have to be built at the highest cost, and, perhaps, may be the slowest on the ocean, and $500,000 taken from the tax-payers for that purpose annually, I do not think that I am doing anything that will injure the interests of the great body of the American people by opposing it.

I may be mistaken in all that; but I repeat I am not going to be drawn into an argument now. I argued these questions elaborately last year. I am content to stand upon the argument I then made, at least until it is answered better than it has been. I believe the President, the Postmaster-General, and those of us who are opposed to protective tariffs and subsidies, and who seek to prevent the isolation of this country from the commerce of the world which the system of restriction will necessarily produce, will some of these days see our views carried out; and when we do we will have a prosperous country.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, I was not here last summer when this provision was passed about which a great deal of difficulty has been experienced, and had no opportunity to express my opinions on it at that time; but I do not regret it because I had done so before in the Senate. In fact ever since I have been in this body this same question has been threshed over year after year and the Senate seem to be no nearer together now than they were ten years ago about it. The difficulty is in an obstinate adherence to certain theories which I think practice has demonstrated are faulty.

The Senator from Maryland said that we are not carrying our foreign mails in American ships. The simple reason for that is that we have not got any American ships to carry them in. We have had the navigation laws all these years ever since the Government was ordained, but they have not produced ships. That policy has been a barren mother. Nothing has come from the navigation laws except the dwindling down of our commercial rating. I do not know how we are ever to improve in that particular until two things occur.

The first is that we have a commerce to export to foreign countries; and the second is that the money-making men of this country—and those who have money-making desires are in a very large majority—shall find it to their interest to invest their means in the building of ships. If the people of the United States who are commercially disposed and disposed to speculate or to make investments of their money found as much profit to-day in building ships as they do in building railroads or in making investments in Alabama iron ore and Alabama lands and the like, the sea would soon be covered with American ships. There would be no trouble about it. So, if we had an overabundant commerce to exchange with foreign countries bringing in return not specie and other kinds of money, but bringing in return that much more valuable traffic the commerce of foreign countries, their products in exchange for ours, we should find that we should have plenty of ships sailing under the American flag. Private enterprise when attracted toward the business of having ships sail across the seas will always find ample opportunity, and their activity will be remarkable when the incentive is produced. That now in a general way is my idea of the reason why we have not got any ships going abroad.

The navigation laws of the United States prevent us from giving home work, home protection, home advantages to ships that our people may go abroad and buy and put under our flag. They prohibit the importation of ships to wear the American flag in the coastwise or in the foreign trade. The result is that no man thinks of investing money in a ship in the United States except for the coastwise trade; or at least it has been a long time since men have thought of investing their money in that direction.

When we come to building an American navy, war-ships, the whole question changes. We must build our war-ships in the United States and build our guns in the United States, for the reason that the United States is the only patron, the only person to whom we can sell such things. After awhile when our establishments grow up we shall build guns as Krupp does for the Chinese, for the Polynesian Islands, and for the South American republics—when we get a start. But that is not the motive now that impels us to build guns in the United States for the service of the United States. The motive that prompts us is that we shall have in time of war, when we most need these agents and facilities, the means of manufacturing such things at home, for a country is at great disadvantage that has to fight a foreign enemy and bring its guns across the sea.

Equally so in respect to our ships of war of every class and character. The Government being the only authority in this country, the only person, I may say, who can patronize a ship-yard for the building of men-of-war, the guns ought to be built here under our supervision and out of our material as far as we can make them; and so with the ships, because of the necessity of having such reliable resources in time of war. That question is by no means similar to the matter of owning or building ships of commerce.

So, then, in voting as I always vote, for the establishment of American machinery, American plant, to make guns and to make ships and every part of a ship, and in voting for the requirement that every ship shall be American in every sense of the word that is made for the Navy of the United States, I by no means commit myself to a mere commercial proposition, but I commit myself to a proposition of necessary self-defense standing on entirely a different footing; and there is no parallel between the two cases.

Here are two parties in the Senate, one adhering to the old navigation laws of the United States, and the other thinking that those laws are an unnecessary and an inconvenient cramp upon the ship-building industry and ship-owning industry of this country; and therefore the American flag is oftentimes excluded from a vessel that ought to be sailing under those colors. These parties antagonize and will not give up anything. From year to year, whether it is for the transportation of commerce or for the transportation of mails, we find this same old wrangle in the Senate of the United States, and no compromise and no concession at all.

It is true that when the Democrats were in power in the Senate my colleague [Mr. PUGH] made a report from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, which takes a lower ground than that occupied by the Senator from Kentucky and a higher ground than that which is occupied by the Senator from Kansas. I will read it to show what was then the Democratic interpretation of our duty in respect to this very matter of carrying mails. In a debate that occurred here last year my colleague read this amendment, which he had moved to the Post-Office bill on the occasion to which I have referred:

Mr. PUGH. I offer an amendment from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, to come in at the end of section 1.

This was in 1881.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed, at the end of line 197, to add the following:

For additional postal service to foreign countries, $1,000,000, to be expended under the direction of the Postmaster-General, in the establishment of mail steamship lines, equitably distributed among the Atlantic, Mexican, Gulf, and Pacific ports: Provided, That the vessels employed for such service shall be owned and manned by American citizens—and that said vessels thus employed shall be iron steamships, accepted by the Secretary of the Navy, after due inspection, as in all respects seaworthy and properly entitled to such service.

Not built—

There was a million dollars proposed to be appropriated under the direction of the Post-Office Committee of this body when they were Democratic, and when we had a Republican Executive, to be expended under the direction of the Postmaster-General, a broad discretion in the establishment of mail steamship lines to foreign countries, and to be distributed between the different seacoasts of the country, the Pacific, the Gulf, and the Atlantic. I think there has not been a moment of time when the Senate and the House of Representatives also might not have agreed to that proposition but for the obstinate adherence of gentlemen to mere theories. I claim that your theory of the American navigation laws has expelled the American flag from ships, and that instead of gaining ships you are all the time growing less and less in your commercial marine, and I contrast your theory with the experience of this country, and say that the experience has utterly disproved its value, and I propose that we shall try a different theory.

I am not alarmed, after that proposition has been reported by a Democratic committee of this body and voted for by Democrats, at the idea of the subsidy that may be said to be involved in it. There is no subsidy in the expenditure of a million dollars distributed in the discretion of the Postmaster-General over the ports of the three great coasts of the United States. A subsidy means that you will give to a particular enterprise or a particular person or corporation a monopoly, an advantage in doing a certain thing. When you appropriate money at large for the good of the mail service, whether it is foreign or domestic, if it turns out that some men are better prepared to carry the mails than others, the idea of subsidy is not involved in such an appropriation as that by any means.

I noticed to-day that the two Senators, one from Kansas and the other from Kentucky, got into a little disputation about the effect and meaning of an appropriation for carrying the mail between Tampa, in Florida, and Havana, in Cuba, and it turns out that both of these Senators in their desire to benefit the country, which they always have, have plumed themselves upon their own theories. In his anxiety to get mail communication between Tampa and Cuba, which is an important matter, the Senator from Kansas utterly forgot to say a word about American-owned and American-built ships, and the Senator from Kentucky forgot anything about subsidy, and they came together in the enactment of that law, which seems now to be a standing law of the Post-Office Department, which reads as follows:

The Postmaster-General is authorized to contract for inland and foreign steamboat mail service, when it can be combined in one route, where the foreign office or offices are not more than 200 miles distant from the domestic office, on the same terms and conditions as inland steamboat service, and pay for the same out of the appropriation for inland steamboat service.

If you will just take that statute and broaden it so as to say that the place of delivery of the mails may be 25,000 miles distant from here, you have just as good a law as this is, as constitutional, as correct, as Democratic, as wise, and there is just as little subsidy in it.

Now, strike out that provision of the statute which I have just read, which confines the operation of this law to places not more than 200 miles from our coast separated by the sea, and let it go to any distance whatsoever, to any country or place whatsoever, and you have got precisely the law that my amendment proposes, except that you confine this mail service between the United States and certain States of South America. I am willing to agree to that also, for I would rather give to the Argentine Republic, and Paraguay, and Uruguay, and to Brazil, the privileges of this legislation than to distribute them at large over the whole of South America or the whole world.

These two Senators, when they forgot their theories and came down to practice, arrived at a perfectly just result, and I propose, so far as the States named in this amendment are concerned, that that same result shall be applied to this case; that is to say, that the Postmaster-General shall have the amount of money which is here appropriated, $500,000, to be by him distributed in carrying the mails from the United States to those countries named in the amendment of the committee; but I would strike out "American-built ships," and I would do it for this reason: The activities of the Southern States are admired and commended by people throughout the length and breadth of this country, and I believe that no compliment has ever been paid to the Southern States that I have so thoroughly enjoyed as the compliment that arises from the fact that we are now accepted to be a people of good sense and industry.

Mr. CULLOM. A pretty big compliment.

Mr. MORGAN. A large compliment, and I value it very highly. I only wonder at the incapacity of our friends to have seen this many years ago. If they had looked at us then with the same kindly eye that they do now, we should have been seen then to be probably about the wisest and most progressive people in the world.

Mr. MAXEY. Will the Senator from Alabama allow me to emphasize his remark by stating a historical fact? We came out of the war utterly devastated, left entirely to our own exertions, with our institutions broken up; we have not only renewed our former position, but are to-day as prosperous as any people in the world.

Mr. BECK. Their soldiers got no pensions, and they are not beggared either.

Mr. MORGAN. A great many compliments can be bestowed upon us very justly, and they are all true. We came out of the war bereft of everything on earth. We were penniless absolutely, stripped even of meat and bread and clothes; our institutions were broken up; society was devastated by the intrusion of people into it who had no other motive in the world than to wreck it. The governing powers of the people of the Southern States were taxed as they were never taxed in any country before; and the triumph of local government in the Southern States in reorganizing society, re-establishing our industries, bringing down the rates of taxation, lowering salaries, and the complete administration of justice, the restoration of peace and prosperity, including religion, in the South—these triumphs are greater than ever existed in any country in all the annals of history. No man can point back through these annals to any people who have resurrected themselves as we have done with so much of outward oppression and internal discord as have the people of the South.

Now, Mr. President, we have no ship-yards in the South. Very few vessels are built there of any description at all, only a few small schooners and fishing smacks. That is due to two facts. The first is that there has been no encouragement of ship-building anywhere. We have been nursing with our laws and our appropriations and our indulgences and our protections in every way that we could that industry which is perishing even on the coast of Maine, perishing in every direction, and I fear will continue to do so as long as these navigation laws are on the statute-book. As long as we shut out foreign commerce by a high protective tariff, and these navigation laws are on the statute-book, I see very little chance for the restoration of the ship-building interest in the North and Northeast. But we have in the South no ship-yards, certainly none for making iron and steel ships and their machinery. The ship-yards at Wilmington, Del., I believe are the farthest south of any that exist in the American country.

Now, you arrange this provision of the bill to take effect at the beginning of the incoming fiscal year, on the 1st day of July; and let me ask you what chance have we got to build ships between now and then when we have not even a ship-yard or the tools and machinery with which to build a ship? We can not possibly construct in the South an American-built ship between now and the 1st of July. We could hardly get a fair start on it. What, then, is the effect of this proposition? It is, of course, to put the whole of this appropriation in the hands of men who have ship-yards or who own ships of American build. It diverts entirely the appropriations from all the South Atlantic and the Gulf, and there is no chance for us to have a particle of interest in it unless we go and make up companies and buy ships that were built in the United States; and the few that we have got here not engaged in the coastwise trade have been built for special objects and to transact special business and adapted to certain particular localities.

Under this law a Philadelphia, a New York, or a Boston company puts in a bid for carrying the mail. Will they put in that bid to carry the mail from Mobile or from Galveston or from New Orleans or from Pensacola or from Charleston or Savannah? No; they will put in a bid for the purpose of carrying the mails back and forth to their own towns, and when they get these contracts they have just as effectually shut us out from the benefits of the proposed advantage by the interchange of commerce between us and Brazil and the Argentine Republic as if we were excluded under the bill itself. We therefore have no chance.

If the Senators who advocate this measure will give us at least five years beyond that to execute these contracts and put it in the bill that at least one of these lines shall go from the Gulf of Mexico, by the time your law has executed itself at the end of the five years you will find that we are building iron ships and steel ships in the South. We shall then have the incentive for it.

If you sail a ship that is owned in New Orleans out of the port of New Orleans, or from Mobile, when your ship comes home there must be some place of repair, there must be a dry-dock, there must be machinery there for the purpose of repairing the engine and other parts of the vessel, and the companies that might contract to carry the mails in ships that they owned, whether built at home or abroad, would find it necessary to take the initiative at least to the extent of building ship-yards for the repair of ships. A ship-yard for the repair of a ship must be one for its construction. If you have a ship sailing from the port of Mobile to the port of Rio de Janeiro, going and coming, bringing and carrying the commerce of the countries, carrying out our cotton, timber, coal, and iron, and returning loaded with hides and the other rich productions of this South American country, you would find that the people of Mobile would establish there, perhaps in the vicinity of that reservation of the United States called Mount Vernon, on that river where the fresh water is 40 feet deep, a place of repair, and in connection with that a machine-shop, and they would carry their iron and their steel and their coal down from Birmingham; and by the time these five years had expired, instead of buying their ships, then they would be building them at home.

Give us just this chance to have a start in this thing. Let us go into the markets of the world and buy our ships and start this mail line, and you will find plenty of Southern men of enterprise and capital going into the establishment of steamship lines between the Gulf of Mexico and Brazil and the La Plata River.

Who can object to giving us this one opportunity? When the Northern States of this country desired to have a coastwise mail to Cuba they wanted 55 cents, I believe, per mile for the transportation of the mails to Tampa; and then the committee came in here and both sides of the Chamber voted a large appropriation of money, and left it in the discretion of the Postmaster-General to equip a line between Tampa and Havana, and said not one word about there being an American-built or a foreign-built ship on that line. Every one thinks here to-day that that has been a successful line, a prosperous line, and no harm done to the ship-building interests of the United States because the vessels that sail there may be of foreign build. I hear no complaint at all of that law; on the contrary, it has been loudly commended on the floor of the Senate to-day. I take that one enterprise as being an absolutely conclusive example of the proposition I offer, that for the five years the contract you provide in this bill is to run you shall give the Southern States a chance to go out and buy the ships and start the line. That can not hurt you, or break you up in five years; and yet you see how we can establish ourselves in this business, and how by granting us this opportunity you can set on foot this ship-building industry in the South, that gentlemen say is so absolutely essential to the prosperity of the people of the United States as well as to their credit and honor.

That is what we claim under this amendment. To pass the committee's amendment just as it is is to force a discrimination against the South. To pass it as I propose to amend it is to give us an opportunity to enter into this traffic, and I hope the Senators on both sides of the Chamber—as I know there are Senators on both sides of this Chamber who desire the prosperity of the people of the United States as much as I do—will see the necessity of the occasion and will permit this to be amended so that we in the South can have some chance to establish ourselves. As long as we stand here warring upon theories we shall do nothing. When we make the sort of compromise that was made in the bill from which I read, establishing a line between Tampa Bay and Havana, prosperity comes immediately to that part of the country. The mails are transported back and forth from Havana with great rapidity and security, much greater than they have ever been before.

I think, Mr. President, that the reason of the case, the proof of the example I have cited, and every consideration relating to the future prosperity of this country ought to influence the Senate to adopt the amendment which I have had the honor to propose.

ILLINOIS JUDICIAL DISTRICT.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore appointed Mr. PUGH, Mr. HOAR, and Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, the conferees on the part of the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. AMENDMENT TO A BILL.

Mr. FRYE submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the river and harbor bill; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

JAMES W. GOODRICH.

Mr. HOAR. I desire to move that a message be sent to the President of the United States requesting him to return an act for the relief of James W. Goodrich. It is an act paying a postmaster for funds of which his post-office was robbed, and it describes the post-office by the name of the wrong town by an accident, so that the act would be entirely futile. It ought to be returned before the President signs the act. The act was sent to the President either yesterday or to-day.

I understand that that bill originated in the House and, therefore, has been sent by the House to the President; and under these circumstances the precedents of Congress are that there shall be a concurrent resolution. I therefore submit the following concurrent resolution:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring,) That the President be requested to return to the House of Representatives the bill (H. R. 5652) for the relief of James W. Goodrich.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to.

MRS. M. E. WOODS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2997) granting a pension to Mrs. M. E. Woods, which was in line 8 to strike out "twenty-five" and insert "twelve."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa [Mr. WILSON] desires a disagreement with a view to a conference.

The amendment was non-concurred in and a conference was ordered to be requested of the House of Representatives on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

By unanimous consent the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate, and Mr. SAWYER, Mr. BLAIR, and Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, were appointed.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 10793) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President——

Mr. SAULSBURY. If the Senator from Florida will yield, I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. PLUMB. I hope we shall have a vote on this bill. I do not think it will take long to dispose of it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Delaware moves that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was not agreed to.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, I do not propose to detain the Senate any great length of time after the discussion which has been had on this bill to-day.

I was a member of the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations on the Post-Office appropriation bill and voted for this amendment. I propose to vote for it in the Senate. I do not, however, think that there is any kind of inconsistency between the report of the Postmaster-General in regard to this matter and his explanation as read by the Senator from Kentucky. When we discuss a proposition we should meet the points that are really involved in it, and not raise new questions that are not connected with it and do not logically relate to it.

The Postmaster-General in his recommendation to Congress contained in his annual report does not anywhere intimate or declare in any form that, as between the question of the purchase of foreign ships and their use for the purposes of mail transportation, he has a preference for the policy of limiting the carriage of the mails and the assistance that the Government may provide to American-built ships. That is the whole question in controversy between his present explanation and his annual report, and it is on this that the whole centention has been made to-day.

Neither is there any inconsistency in a support of this amendment, and agreeing with the declaration of the Senator from Kentucky, while I support this amendment, I would prefer to support an amendment which would permit the American citizen to buy his ship abroad. There is no inconsistency in these propositions. There may be in the opinion of persons like myself a better method of encouraging the construction of American ships. I believe there is. I am prepared to go much farther and much more effectively, in my judgment, in the encouragement of American ship-building than has ever or can ever result from prohibiting the purchase of ships from abroad and limiting the transportation of this country to American-built ships.

If there can be anything done, as in my opinion there can be, to aid and develop American ship-building, it is to be found in a system of bounties to the ship, to the tonnage, open to every American citizen, and in a system which will furnish Government facilities in those sections and portions of the country where they are not now to be found for the construction of such ships, plants in navy-yards, furnished by the Government, and which may be leased to combinations of labor or of capital in the different sections of this country, so that the expenditures of the Government, which are in themselves of great importance, shall not be concentrated in the hands of particular individuals, of capitalists, or of particular localities. A system of this kind will reach the point required, and will develop the American industry of ship-building in the different localities of the country. The navigation laws have failed to develop American ship-building for the foreign trade of the country. What good reason can be given for not trying some other policy—some other means reasonably adapted to attain the object we wish to accomplish?

It is not wise for Senators who insist on resisting this proposition to assume that there may not be a better system of developing American ship-building than that of the navigation laws which have existed so long without producing the desired effect.

But what does the Postmaster-General say? He may not perceive or admit the logical result of his declaration as it impresses me. He may not admit the conclusion which his own premise demands. He says:

This application suggests * * * the purchase of mail facilities which do not exist, and can not be expected soon to exist in the ordinary manner.

What is the purchase of a mail facility? Certainly, if there be anything in the idea of a subsidy, it is a payment as a compensation of something greater than the actual service would itself require. Whatever is intended to develop, to produce, to encourage a future development, whatever is greater than the actual compensation at the moment for the service rendered, whatever is greater than the present need, is in the nature of a subsidy. I have no objection to the use of the term. The purchase of a mail facility is unquestionably a subsidy, unless it be at the lowest possible market price at which it can be obtained, and unless it exists in the ordinary course of business. The Postmaster-General further proceeded to say that these facilities do not exist, that the commerce of the country will be developed, will be created, and that it is a wise consideration that for that further development these mail facilities shall be purchased.

He further says that mail facilities may wisely be created, "purchased" in advance of the necessities of actual business. Considerations of race, blood, and public policy may demand them. And in our domestic mail service these considerations are recognized as a sound and wise policy, and a justification for expenditures beyond the actual necessities of the service at the time. This is nothing but a subsidy; nothing but making the expenditure of the public money the foundation of the mail service. Our whole domestic mail service is a subsidy, as the annual deficiency shows. Why, then, is the policy not equally true for the foreign mail service?

The point of difference—and that is all that is required, that is all that is asked in this amendment—is the purchase of mail facilities beyond the immediate and pressing needs of established business. There is no argument about that; that is a plain proposition; it is a subsidy, an inducement, an encouragement. The Postmaster-General proceeds to say that this is nothing more than is done with numerous domestic lines of mail transportation, beyond what is needed by the business of the moment, in anticipation of greater development and of greater business, and certainly that is true, and there is no distinction in reason or in logic between these two things. If it is good for our domestic relations it certainly is good for our foreign relations.

So, then, we have before us the simple question presented by the Senator from Kentucky: Shall we open this foreign-mail service to vessels constructed abroad—to foreign-built ships? Shall we obtain the best mail service that can be obtained, without reference to where the ship was constructed? Unquestionably, in point of business or commerce or mail facility, the ship that is best adapted to it, that is speediest, and that can be obtained at the cheapest rate is the best, and I should vote for that amendment.

But what then? We know it is impossible in this Senate owing to the division of opinion to obtain the passage of an amendment of that character, and the question then recurs shall we do without this facility because of this divided opinion—erroneous opinion, if you please—or shall we encourage it under the best practical terms, awaiting some future development which will put this upon a higher and a better system of economy—better for the commerce of the country, better for its transportation, better for all its industrial interests? For myself, I do not hesitate, although I perceive that this expenditure will be necessarily expended for the advantage of particular localities, of particular sections, as nearly all the expenditures of the Government are concentrated in a few great cities, or in a small area of the population of this country, an evil which ought to be remedied by some better system of economy. A policy that will divide these expenditures between the different ports of the country might easily be devised—a policy that will build ships and establish mail lines from Tampa, or Pensacola, or Jacksonville, or Fernandina, in Florida, or Mobile in Alabama, or New Orleans, as well as from New York and Baltimore and Boston.

Mr. FRYE. I wish to call the attention of the Senator from Florida to the admission which he is making that this may result in a benefit to one locality to the exclusion of others. Now, in one single ship that sailed from New York to Rio Janeiro twenty-six States and Territories had their manufactured goods on board of her. So it is not possible that it shall result in benefit to one locality because the ship sails from that locality.

Mr. CALL. But the expenditures for building the ships were in a particular locality.

Mr. FRYE. That particular expenditure may be.

Mr. CALL. And all other ships will be made there under the present condition of the law, and the money expended there, including this appropriation. I should be very glad to prevent that. I should like to see a ship constructed at Pensacola or at Tampa Bay, or Jacksonville, or Fernandina, contiguous to the iron and coal of Alabama, where it can be done cheaply, and whence it could sail with greater proximity to any of the Central or South American ports than anywhere else, and whence the mail could be carried with greater expedition. I think a policy ought to be adopted that would develop and encourage and produce that result. But what is the first step toward it? That is impossible to do. Now we must make a commencement or it can never be done. We can not advance this object by assuming that foreign trade in American vessels is impossible because we have a tariff system which intervenes difficulties, nor because we have navigation laws which diminish the profits of American commerce in ships owned and manned by American citizens.

Shall we abandon this communication with South America which the Postmaster-General so ably presents as a public necessity of the moment, because we can not accomplish these great desirable ends of public policy, and so desirable particularly to the whole Southern country? Shall we abandon that commercial intercourse which may, as the Senator from Maine has suggested, be of some benefit, which will carry off the productions of the South as well as the North, which will bring the coffee and the products of other countries for the consumption of the South as well as of the North, which will be open to the enterprise of Southern men, and to the capital which may be accumulated in the Southern States? These are advantages that will accrue with American-built ships as well as with foreign-built ships, although there will be disadvantages attending it, although larger benefits would result from the policy of purchasing ships wherever they may be bought cheapest and best. An American-built ship carrying passengers and freight to a foreign port will do anything in the way of encouraging trade that a foreign-built ship owned by Americans could accomplish.

Therefore I have never failed to support the provisions in the Post-Office appropriation bill providing for mail facilities, and I am not frightened away from it by the fact that there is an injustice in it and that the purpose might be accomplished better in a different manner, for this is the whole extent of the argument against it. The proposition is that we must have nothing because we can not get everything.

Mr. President, that is all I propose to say in justification of my vote. While the Postmaster-General's argument, in my judgment, does demonstrate the necessity for this appropriation, it is doubtless not intended by him and does not of necessity impart the idea that he desires to see it done in American ships exclusively, and to be expended for the construction of American ships. In other words, he believes that the mail service would be better promoted, that the development of American ship-building would be better promoted, by encouraging commerce at large, and by the purchase of ships from abroad as well as by constructing them in the United States; but his proposition certainly is that mail facilities with the countries mentioned are desirable, and that we have not now those facilities, and must create them.

As a member of the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations having in charge this Post-Office appropriation bill, I desire to say that I do not agree with the criticisms which have been made by the Senator from Kansas on the Postmaster-General. His report is an evidence that he is a man of ability, that he is a man who masters whatever is presented to him, and I venture to say that no more concise, forcible, and clear presentation of that great Department and its operations and its necessities has been made than that which is contained in his annual report at the beginning of this session. It is one of the most important departments, and perhaps the most difficult of the departments to administer.

It has the largest number of officers, it requires the greatest minutiæ of investigation and knowledge of details by the officer in charge, the Postmaster-General. That he may not be able at all times to secure the best mail service in the most remote portions of this country is not to be attributed to him as a serious fault. That there should be somewhere imperfect or disconnected routes, that some time should elapse before they are remedied, is impossible to prevent in a system so wide and so extensive as this. And while I have heard of complaints, while newspaper men here and there may assume that they could administer this Department better than he, that is but the criticism of a single man. There have been complaints of irregularities and failures in my own State, but I have not known of any which when communicated to the Postmaster-General he has not promptly sought to remedy; and I undertake to say that the administration of that Department at the end of his term will have been able, efficient, and economical.

Mr. President, it does not belong to the Committee on Appropriations who have charge of this bill and who are responsible if there be no sufficient and adequate appropriation made for the support of that great establishment to criticise its head. Its efficiency depends upon its employés. It depends upon the remuneration they receive, upon their number, their character, and the capacity they may have, and it depends upon the provisions of law that are reported by the Committee on Appropriations. If they will increase that remuneration, or if they will give to the Postmaster-General an entire discretion in the expenditure of that money, then he may be criticised; but if you limit him, if you limit the salaries, you must take the consequences.

The whole system of appropriations in this Government since I have been a member of the Committee on Appropriations is to regard the heads of Departments as unworthy of trust, to treat the smallest detail with an iron rule, and say, "You shall not exercise any discretion; you are limited to this amount; we will not trust you;" and such is this Post-Office appropriation bill. If this money was given to him and a discretion allowed, holding him responsible for it, then you might perhaps criticise his conduct.

For myself, I shall sustain this amendment, and I desire to be understood as expressing my own judgment of the ability and the efficiency and the economy with which that Department is administered. I do not now speak of the appointments in the Department, but of the personal conduct, ability, and business methods and efficiency of the Postmaster-General.

This is only a question of a proper mail service and the purchase of mail facilities, and ought not to be considered in connection with the tariff, or with the repeal or modification of the navigation laws. It gives the Postmaster-General $500,000 annually and authorizes him to use it in the purchase of mail facilities on condition that the facilities purchased, which must be ships, shall be American ships. Even with those who think foreign ships would be better, there is nothing in their arguments which can support their conclusion that they will not have any suitable mail to South America unless they can get it on foreign ships.

Mr. EUSTIS. Mr. President, I do not intend to discuss this question. I simply desire to state that when this proposition was under consideration at the last session I took occasion in debate to establish that Government aid to steamship lines for the purpose of developing commercial intercourse had been a favorite measure under Democratic administrations, and I regret to hear Democratic Senators endeavoring to apologize for the statesmanship and broad position which our Democratic Postmaster-General has taken in his annual report upon this question with reference to the pending proposition.

When this report appeared, although it may have shocked the sensibilities of the Senator from Kentucky, it was universally accepted in the country as a sign that upon this question our Democratic administration had taken a new departure, and those who favor this proposition indulged in the gratification that they had secured the advocacy of a very influential and powerful convert to what we consider one of the most important principles, with reference to the present and the future, which can guide our legislative action. I felt proud, as a Democratic Senator, that this Democratic administration had announced to the country that they realized the necessity of taking some step forward, some step in advance, in favor of developing American commerce and American shipping. For I believe that whenever this policy shall be established, whenever our repeated efforts in that direction shall bear some fruit, our course and our statesmanship will command the universal commendation and applause of the American people.

There can be no question whatever, I take it, that if we can understand the English language, that if we can understand arguments which are presented, that if we can understand what an individual intends when he follows a certain process of reasoning in order to make certain recommendations, and where that officer is a Cabinet officer, I say there can be no question whatever but what this amendment reported by this committee is responsive to the recommendations made by the Postmaster-General now in office. It is yielding to the demand which has been made, yielding to the pressure which has been brought upon this administration, recognizing the fact which has been heretofore denied that we must find some outlet for our increasing production, and that the great outlet which is open to us and which we can secure beyond peradventure is with the South American states.

I congratulate the Postmaster-General. I think he has exhibited great moral courage, that he has shown that he understands what the people of the United States demand from him and from his office, when in a most elaborate, sound, and logical presentation of this question he has embodied every argument which was used by Senators at the last session of Congress in advocacy of this proposition.

I regret that the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] is not in his seat, as I told him that I intended to pay my compliments to him, that he should stand up in the Senate and attempt to wipe out of view the report of a Cabinet officer, and to tell us that it does not mean what it declares.

This is not a question involving a construction of a sentence about which there can be some difference of opinion. This is not a question which involves the ambiguity of a mere phrase. It is a question whether these three pages, written by the Postmaster-General, intended to be a basis for legislation by Congress and so uttered, were seriously or jocosely written; and that is the question that I wanted to propound to the Senator from Kentucky. No private correspondence can destroy the effect or remove the intended purpose of this communication to Congress. The Postmaster-General accepted the responsibility of that recommendation. It is in accord with what we have maintained, and we can only accept it as an utterance of his serious convictions upon one of the most important questions affecting the interests of the American people.

I repeat, in conclusion, and I congratulate my fellow-Democratic Senators upon the fact, that this Democratic Administration is moving in the right direction, that it stands upon a high platform in the developmen of American commerce, and that it is willing to carry out that policy by giving Government aid to establish steamship lines with the South American States.

Mr. MAXEY. Mr. President, since I have been a member of the Senate I have been an earnest advocate of close and liberal commercial relations with Mexico and Central and South America. When we look at our great surroundings there can be no question that there is an absolute necessity for this country to get an outlet for its surplus productions. There is to-day enough capital invested in American manufacturing and there is enough skilled labor adapted to factories to produce in six months all that can be consumed in this country in twelve months. That is a fact. That fact means that those factories must work on half time, or lock-out a portion of the time, or strikes are inevitable, and strikes are going on all over this country. What is the outcome of that? A spirit of unrest running all over this land from one end to the other.

What shall we do? We must find somewhere a market for the American surplus production. We must find somewhere a market which will consume all that can be reasonably produced within twelve months by our factories. Where can we look for that? Only in Mexico and Central and South America. So believing, for the twelve years that I have been a member of the Senate I have been an earnest advocate of the adoption of some policy that will open out the trade of those countries to us.

In 1881 the amendment which was offered by direction of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. PUGH] met my hearty approbation. I was at that time chairman of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads. We agreed upon an amendment, which has been read, which provided—

That the vessels employed for such service—

That is, the service from the Atlantic, Gulf, and Pacific ports—

shall be owned and manned by American citizens, and that said vessels thus employed shall be iron steamships, &c.

"Owned and manned by American citizens." To-day I am in favor of the same policy. I advocated it then; I do to-day. I care not where the vessel may be built, whether on the Clyde or here, but I am in favor of restoring the American merchant marine which has been driven away from the high seas so that we have left to us only about 15 per cent. of the carrying trade of all the exports that leave this country for foreign markets.

Something has done that. What is it? If a vessel can be purchased cheaper on the Clyde than it can be in one of our own establishments, let the men who are willing to invest their capital in that vessel go there and buy it, and aid in opening out and restoring the American marine.

I am in favor of the amendment of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN], first, because I want to restore American shipping. This is a movement in that direction. I am in favor of close commercial relations and liberal relations with all the countries south of us. I am in favor of reciprocal treaties which will enable this country to compete in the markets of Mexico, of Central and South America with England or any other country on the face of the earth.

You never can do that under your present tariff; it is simply an impossibility. Therefore you must make commercial reciprocal treaties with those countries, and for that reason I have been for years an earnest advocate of such reciprocal treaties. It would be the grandest move forward in statesmanship to combine these two things together. First, capture that trade, open out, begin to establish your steamship lines, let the owners of those lines buy their ships where they please and register them as American vessels, man them by American sailors and sail them under the American flag. Start in that direction. That done, then make your reciprocal treaties and get an outlet for all the vast production that our factories turn out annually over and above that which is necessary for home consumption.

It is the worst of nonsense to build up a Chinese wall around this country and limit the consumption of American manufactured articles to the American people. It is the veriest purblind policy that was ever adopted by any government on the face of the earth. You have got to compete; and as the world advances in enlightenment, as capital increases and seeks investment in factories, and labor seeks to be skilled so as to be employed in those factories, you produce more annually in this country than it is possible to consume. You must have an outlet, and you can not have that outlet when every article that goes into a piece of manufactured goods, the coal, the iron ore, and each raw material all the way along the line is taxed heavily. It is an impossibility for a manufacturer to contend in the markets of the world with countries which have the free-trade system.

Sir, we may as well meet that issue. It has to be met some day. This thing has got to come about. Where you have capital invested in American factories and skilled labor which can produce in six months more than can be consumed in this country in twelve months, what are you going to do the other six months? Shall that capital lie idle? Shall the laborers go out and become tramps? That is the effect; it is inevitable.

The man who loves his country will seek to have all that those men can produce consumed somewhere, and that consumption must come not from Europe, because they will not consume what we raise, but it must come from those countries which lie south of us, and contiguous to us, and which are our natural commercial allies. Yet, owing to the purblind policy of this country, right across the river which separates my State from Mexico, the trade of Mexico has been captured by England and Germany in the very face of the American citizens.

Something is wrong. It results from your protective tariff; and you can only have that (because you cannot get this people at once to do it) by adopting commercial reciprocity treaties with those countries and making them as liberal as possible. When I say that I also say that I am a better friend to the manufacturing people than he who opposes a commercial reciprocal treaty with Mexico and Central and South America.

If the amendment of the Senator from Alabama is adopted, I shall vote for this provision, not so much because of the postal service as that it is a move in a commercial direction. It is the starting point to giving us a trade with the countries lying south of us, which this country must possess if we are to be prosperous as a manufacturing people.

But, sir, I have another object in view. I want to restore American shipping. Whenever the price of ships, and especially of steamships is so high in this country that capital can be better invested in other directions, they will not be bought; but when men can go anywhere and buy their money's worth of ships and open up and secure this trade, which if we adopt the true policy of reciprocal relations will go on ever and ever increasing, we shall have a prosperous country.

For that reason, because I want to restore the American merchant marine and because I want the American flag to cover an American cargo when it crosses the water, I favor the amendment offered by the Senator from Alabama. If that is adopted I shall vote for the amendment reported from the Committee on Appropriations; otherwise I shall not.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I should like to cast a vote in the American Senate in favor of the extension of American commerce. I think it is a very great crime in the statesmanship of this country that we have adopted such policies as that American commerce with foreign countries is dwindling. It has not reached the magnificent proportion to which it is entitled.

I want to extend American commerce. I think we have the power, if we use it wisely and well, to supply the markets of the world with cheaper and better goods than any other country. But I am not to be charged with being unfriendly to the extension of American commerce because I can not see that that extension will come from the subsidy proposed by the Committee on Appropriations.

I should like to have this proposition answered: When we have a tariff of 46 per cent. on the average, levied, as I understand and as everybody avows, for the purpose of enabling the American manufacturer to compete in American markets at home with foreign manufacturers, how is it possible that this same manufacturer, requiring a protection of 46 per cent. to enable him to compete with the foreign manufacturer at home without any transportation on the sea and selling to his neighbors, can sell his goods in foreign markets against the same foreign competitors? That is the question I should like to have answered.

We are told that the American manufacturer can not sell even to the American people in the home markets without the cost of foreign transportation, that he can not exist unless he has an advantage of 46 per cent. in the way of a tariff. Yet we are told at the same time that the American manufacturer can go out into the markets of the world, dispense with the 46 per cent. protection, and compete favorably and advantageously with the foreign manufacturer. I should like to have that answered; and when that is answered, when I can see that that problem can be worked out under these conditions, I may consider the proposition to subsidize steamships to carry our goods to foreign countries.

The Senator from Louisiana [Mr. EUSTIS] congratulates the country that the Democratic administration has taken a step forward in this matter. I should like to ask the Senator from Louisiana whether the sugar produced in his State and which, as I understand, can only be produced by a protective duty of about 70 per cent., can be sent to foreign markets and compete with foreign sugar after losing the 70 per cent. advantage.

Is it to be said that we produce so much here that we want to get rid of our surplus? I think I have heard something of that sort said in this debate. Let us see what that means. It is said that we produce more than we consume. Suppose we do, how are we to sell that surplus in foreign markets without the protective tariff and against foreign competition? We can only do it by underselling the very goods which the 46 per cent. has been levied to protect us against in our own market.

If we sell cheaper than that, then one of two things results: either that the 46 per cent. is a fraud on the American consumer, and that the American manufacturer can in fact produce goods and sell them in the home market cheaper than the foreign manufacturer, or it results, as the other alternative, that the American consumer is taxed 46 per cent. on all he consumes in order to enable the American manufacturer to sell his goods to other people cheaper than the cost of manufacture. I am opposed to either proposition. I think the American consumer is entitled to have the products of his own country furnished to him as cheaply as to the people of South America. I am opposed to taxing him 46 per cent. in order that the American manufacturer may sell to the South American consumer at less than the foreign manufacturer can sell in that market. I do not think it is right to make the American people, not only bear the enormous expense of supporting our manufacturers in an exclusively home market, but also to put on their shoulders the additional burden of compelling them to pay in order to enable the American manufacturer to sell to other people goods cheaper than he will sell to them.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] to the amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. MORGAN. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CALL. I wish to know what amendment we are voting on.

Mr. VEST. I ask that the amendment be read.

Mr. FRYE. It is the free-ship amendment.

Several SENATORS. Let it be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection the amendment offered by the Senator from Alabama to the amendment of the committee will be read, although it is now too late, the roll-call having been begun.

Mr. HOAR. The giving consent to that does not give consent to further debate, I suppose.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The debate is closed. If there be no objection, the amendment will be read pending the roll-call, several Senators having answered to their names.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 90, in the second line of the proposed amendment, strike out the word "built" and insert the words, "owned and officered;" so as to read:

For the transportation of foreign mails by American owned and officered and registered steamships, to secure the greater frequency and regularity in dispatch, &c.

And at the end of line 103 add:

Such steamships so owned and officered shall be entitled to be enrolled, registered, and licensed as American-built ships are while the same are employed in the execution of said contract for the transportation of foreign mails.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The roll-call will proceed.

The Secretary resumed the calling of the roll.

Mr. COLQUITT (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. CHACE].

Mr. HARRIS (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. BERRY (when the name of Mr. JONES, of Arkansas, was called). My colleague [Mr. JONES, of Arkansas] is paired with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. HARRISON]. If my colleague were present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. WHITTHORNE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

The roll-call was concluded:

Mr. CULLOM. As has been announced, the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] is paired with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. WHITTHORNE]. The Senator from Rhode Island would vote against the pending amendment if he were present.

Mr. VEST (after having voted in the affirmative). I withdraw my vote. I am paired with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY]. I forgot the pair at the moment.

Mr. CAMERON (after having voted in the negative). I withdraw my vote. I am paired with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER], whom I see is not in his seat. I should vote "nay" if I were not paired.

Mr. PLUMB. The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. VAN WYCK] is absent from the Chamber, and is paired with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY].

Mr. MANDERSON. I am paired with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN]. Were he present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. BECK. And my colleague [Mr. BLACKBURN] would vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 19, nays 31; as follows:

YEAS—19.

Beck,	Eustis,	Maxey,	Saulsbury,

So the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs on the amendment reported from the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. MORGAN. At the end of line 103, I move to add:

One of the lines of steamships to carry the mails provided for in this act shall be required to sail to and from a seaport of the Gulf of Mexico or the Mississippi River.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President, I shall not attempt at this late hour to discuss this question. Propositions of this kind have been before the Senate heretofore and I have voted against them, and I believe in almost every instance I have expressed the grounds of my opposition to such a provision.

But I have heard something here to-day that I can not consent to pass unnoticed. The Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN], the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. EUSTIS], and the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] have undertaken in this debate to base their advocacy of this measure upon the recommendations of the Postmaster-General. I have looked over the recommendations of the Postmaster-General as carefully as I could, and I think that no fair construction of the language which he used in his annual report can be made the basis of any such construction as that which is sought to be placed upon it by the Senator from Kansas, the Senator from Maryland, and the Senator from Louisiana.

Turning to the annual report of the Postmaster-General, I find he states that certain petitions had been sent to the Department, and he goes into an analysis of what is set forth in those petitions. After stating what those petitions refer to, he says:

No authority of law exists of which the Department can avail itself to meet this request.

Then he explains that the statute does not give him the authority to comply with the request of the petitioners. He says again:

This application suggests the augmentation of existing service and the creation of new with the particular States, in both aspects desirable.

After presenting what the petitioners have represented to him, he says:

These considerations suggest inquiry whether there be the need of such mail communication with the mentioned countries of the southern continent, whether that need be worthy of special effort to meet it, and whether it can be supplied at a cost justifiably adequate to the present and prospective value of the proposed intercourse. The determination of these inquiries rests with the Congress, and the Department is privileged, and by its information able, only to express the general opinion that such service would be highly useful and is fairly demanded by the interests of the country.

He calls upon the President of the United States to bring these considerations to the attention of Congress, and after doing so he says:

Should the recommendation meet with favor in its general aspects, the Department might be authorized to solicit proposals for the performance of such a service as the Congress should deem desirable, with limitations as to cost prescribed by its judgment of the probable resulting value to the country or otherwise. There is good reason for the expectation that such an invitation, open to fair and general competition, for a service of a sufficient duration to warrant the requisite provision of vessels, would result in proposals that would enable a desirable contract to be made and a system of communication to be established of great and lasting advantage to the United States.

There is nothing to be found in that recommendation or in the suggestion to the President of the United States which justifies the belief that the Postmaster-General desired a subsidy to be given to particular lines, whether American, English, French, Italian, or any other line. Therefore, when there is an attempt made to put a construction upon his annual report which will commit him to a subsidy to a particular line, whether American or otherwise, he repudiates it, as was done in the letter which he addressed to the Senator from Kentucky. So the attempted construction by the Senator from Louisiana, the attempted justification of the position by the Senator from Maryland in support of this proposition upon the ground that the language of the Postmaster-General justified it and warranted it, is wholly untenable in my opinion.

Mr. EUSTIS. Will the Senator from Delaware allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. SAULSBURY. Yes, sir.

Mr. EUSTIS. I did not state that the report of the Postmaster-General committed him to the favoring of American ships for carrying American mails. What I did state was that his report does commit him unequivocally, in my judgment, to the giving of Government aid to establish lines of steamships between this country and South America.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I may have been mistaken, but I understood the Senator from Louisiana to state distinctly that the report of the Postmaster-General justified the amendment proposed by the committee. That amendment proposes to subsidize a particular line, a particular class of ships.

Mr. EUSTIS. No, sir; the Senator is mistaken. I voted at the last session and I voted just now in favor of the amendment offered by the Senator from Alabama. The question of American ships I had not alluded to, either with regard to my position or the position of the Postmaster-General. The only position of the Postmaster-General that I have alluded to is that Government aid should be given to establish steamship lines to develop American commerce between this country and South America.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I understood the Senator distinctly to avow that the amendment reported by the committee is in harmony with the recommendation of the Postmaster-General. However, I may have misunderstood the Senator from Louisiana. Certainly that was the position of the Senator from Maryland, as well as the Senator from Kansas. Against that construction and in behalf of the Postmaster-General I feel bound to enter my protest, not because I am the especial guardian or keeper of the Postmaster-General. I do not ask of him many favors, nor of any other Department of the Government; but when a Democratic administration is assailed, and unjustly assailed in my judgment, as being inconsistent, I am not willing as a Democrat on this floor to sit here and listen to such an assault.

Mr. EUSTIS. Will the Senator permit me to ask him a question? I praised the administration for its course. Does the Senator from Delaware believe or not that the Postmaster-General's report does or does not commit him to the doctrine of giving Government aid for the purpose of establishing mail lines with South America?

Mr. SAULSBURY. It expressly leaves the matter to the determination of Congress He expressed the opinion that it might be desirable, and said that if the applications were favorably considered by Congress, then the Postmaster-General might, by advertisement for "general competition," contract for the carrying of mails to those ports. However, I have said all I desire to say on that point.

Now, in reference to the question of this appropriation for the carrying of the mails, it is a pretense for carrying the mails. The Postmaster-General sends a communication to a Senator to-day saying that an annual appropriation of $50,000 will accomplish all that he thinks is desirable to accomplish, and yet you propose an annual appropriation of $500,000.

But, Mr. President, it cannot be concealed what the object of this appropriation is. The object is not to facilitate the carrying of the mails. It might incidentally have that effect, but the object is an ulterior one, the promotion of the commerce of the country by a subsidy. It is a question whether, by appropriations of this kind, you can improve the commerce of the country. I hold—I have expressed it before in the Senate—that the subsidizing of lines will not promote the commerce of the country.

You may aid a particular line to run to a foreign country, but the very subsidy you grant instead of promoting the general commerce drives away all competition with the subsidized line, because by virtue of the subsidy which they enjoy they can afford to carry freight at a cheaper rate, and instead of building up general commerce, by subsidizing a particular line you break down competition in the carrying trade and concentrate the whole in the subsidized line. When they have cleared the ocean of competing lines, then your subsidized lines would advance rates and burden by excessive charges the general commerce of the country. Therefore, instead of a benefit to the general commerce of the country, in my judgment, honestly entertained, I believe that the subsidizing of American lines will break down all lines not subsidized.

Mr. President, I am opposed to this appropriation on another ground. I think I have discovered a disposition to use public money in order to dispose of the surplus that is in the Treasury. We see every day attempts to expend money very largely. Why? If there were no surplus in the Treasury, if there was no danger to the high protective tariff which has filled the coffers of the Government to overflowing, many of these appropriations would not be made; but men in favor of a high protective tariff are ready to vote away the public money in order to create a necessity for high protective tariffs. And when a Democratic House of Representatives sends a postal bill here to carry out the wishes of the Department in reference to the postal service of the country, a subsidy is tacked upon it. Why is it? For the purpose of depleting the Treasury of the surplus so as to force a necessity for high protective tariffs.

If there is any sentiment in the country to-day on the part of the American people it is in favor of a reduction of the taxation which is drawing more than a hundred unnecessary millions from the people and putting it in the Treasury to be squandered in useless expenditures or to be hoarded up in the Treasury; keeping the money out of circulation. No, sir; I am in favor now, I was before the Presidential election, of curtailment of the expenses of the Government to an economical administration of the Government, and I want the people of the country to resist the extortions that are made upon them. I want the Treasury not to be depleted and the people deceived by the wasteful extravagance of Congress while they are paying an unnecessary amount into the public Treasury.

Why, sir, to-day the people of this country everywhere, especially in the agricultural portions of the country, are poor. Their crops are not more abundant than formerly, and the prices of their products are much depreciated, and they are scarcely able to meet the expenses of carrying on their business. Yet there is no article which they are compelled to buy upon which they do not have to pay enormous taxes. Every article of clothing that they wear, much that they eat, much that they use in carrying on their business, is taxed enormously. The people all over this country are crying to Congress to relieve them from oppressive taxation; but instead of responding to that just demand on Congress, we are frittering away the public money in useless expenditures very frequently.

What has been done at this session? A few days ago we passed a bill here to take out of the Treasury fifteen or sixteen million dollars and remit it back to the States, received from the direct tax that was levied in 1864. The object was, or at least the effect is, to reduce the surplus in the Treasury and keep up the necessity for taxation. My State paid her portion of that direct tax, every dollar of it, and her people would be willing to have it back, but we more especially desire relief from another quarter. We desire to be relieved from the burden of taxation imposed upon us.

Complaint about the extravagance of this administration was made, I noticed, the other day in a colloquy which took place between the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] and the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations [Mr. ALLISON]. An inquiry was made—I have it here—of the chairman of the committee as to the probable expenses of the Government, and he referred to the estimates of the different Departments. I will read the inquiry:

> We have heard a great deal about not raising any more by taxation than was required for the expenditures of the Government economically administered. If we are to take the estimates made by the Departments as the standard of economical administration and appropriate as much as they require, will there be any surplus revenue?

That question was put to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations. The next day he answered by a detailed statement of the estimates of the various Departments. This Democratic administration will be subject to the charge of extravagance notwithstanding it came here with professions of economy. The Senator from Kansas who has charge of this bill, and who is now urging with all the eloquence and all the vehemence and all the energy that he possesses the passage of this appropriation for the purpose of carrying mails which the Postmaster-General says is ten times more than he needs—the Senator from Kansas——

Mr. PLUMB. Let me ask the Senator a question for the purpose of illustration. Did he not vote for this bill taking $15,000,000 out of the Treasury to pay back the direct tax to the States?

Mr. SAULSBURY. Let me read what the Senator said.

Mr. PLUMB. Will my friend answer my question?

Mr. SAULSBURY. The Senator said:

> Mr. PLUMB. Is not the Senator aware—I think he must be as much as any one on this floor—that in the Executive Departments, where the expenses are let go without much, if any, supervision, and especially without legislative supervision, there is a great tendency to extravagance?

So, Mr. President, the other side of this Chamber, and especially the Senator from Kansas, has been holding up before the country the extravagance of the Democratic administration, and yet, in order that he may be enabled to go out before the country in the next campaign, after Congress has adjourned, and hold up to criticism the extravagance of the Democratic administration, he comes here as other Senators are coming here to increase the expenditures of the Government far beyond what is needed.

I have no doubt the eloquent voice of the Senator from Kansas will be heard in complaint on the hill-tops and in the valleys of Kansas denouncing the extravagance of this administration after he himself, with many of his confrères on the other side of this Chamber are pressing upon the administration appropriations they do not want and compelling extravagance that the Democratic administration does not desire. Here is a notable illustration in the matter under discussion. The Postmaster-General writes to you in his letter read in this debate and says $50,000 is as much as he needs for any such purpose as you propose to give him half a million for.

Mr. PLUMB. Now, will the Senator answer my question? I want to get his status fixed as he can fix it. He has fixed mine. Will he answer me whether he voted for the bill to refund $15,000,000 to the States?

Mr. SAULSBURY. I said in that debate that I should vote for it because there was no possibility of getting anything else, but I said also in that debate that I should prefer rather than see the debts of the Southern States made an excuse for that appropriation that those debts should be forgiven and let the $15,000,000 remain in the Treasury. I think I have answered the Senator's question.

I did not intend until a few moments ago to say a single word on this question. I have been watching with some interest the efforts made to force on the Postmaster-General an annual appropriation of $500,000 which he does not want, and then if he does not expend it to go out as you did two years ago when you appropriated $400,000 for the postal service which he did not want and because he did not use it in the manner you proposed, held him up to criticism before the country.

Mr. President, I will not detain the Senate with any further remarks on this bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations as amended.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us have the yeas and nays on it.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. FRYE. I desire to call the attention of the Senate to the limitation in this proposition:

The carriage of such mails to Brazil, the Argentine Republic, and the Republics of Uruguay and Paraguay.

The amendment which the Committee on Commerce reported and sent to the Committee on Appropriations made this include all the republics of Central and South America, and I would like very much to have the clause amended in this way—

The carriage of such mails to Brazil, the southern and central republics.

So as to include the whole. For instance, take Chili. We formerly had a service between San Francisco and Chili which did an immense business until Great Britain put on a subsidized line and drove ours off. Now, if this should become a law very likely another line might be established between San Francisco and Chili and Peru. The Argentine Republic is in here by name.

Mr. PLUMB. In regard to that, the Committee on Appropriations were so enamored with the views of the Postmaster-General, so desirous of being in perfect harmony with the patriotic purpose which he had expressed, and of aiding him to accomplish the great object which he set forth with so much clearness and so much force in his annual report, that we concluded to take the proposition exactly as he made it, so as to avoid any possibility of an issue with him and to put him in the attitude of having clear and plain sailing in regard to a measure of great importance which he thought ought to be carried out. I think that on the whole that purpose of the committee should not be clogged by anything that may be proposed now by the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. FRYE. I will offer this amendment, to strike out after the word "Brazil," in line 92, the words "the Argentine Republic and the Republics of Uruguay and Paraguay" and insert "the republics of Central and South America."

Mr. EDMUNDS. After "Paraguay" add "and the other South American republics."

Mr. FRYE. I will change it. I will leave those words in, and after "Paraguay" insert "and other Central and South American republics."

Mr. VEST. I wish to make a single remark in reply to the Senator from Maine.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment of the Senator from Maine will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. After the word "Paraguay," in line 93, it is proposed to insert "and other Central and South American republics."

Mr. VEST. I do not care to say a word in this general debate. I have expressed my opinion on the subject before, and it is not necessary that I should add anything to what I have already said; but the Senator from Maine states now that we had a large commerce with Chili until the English Government subsidized a mail steamship line, and drove us out of that trade. I have been a member of the Committee on Commerce for seven years, and I have had occasion to examine this question as to our carrying trade repeatedly, both in the committee at large and in subcommittee.

A few years ago it was testified before a subcommittee of the Committee on Commerce, by a Boston merchant, that he and his partner, both for purposes of gain and patriotism, had constructed two vessels and put them in the trade with Chili and Peru. They were built abroad because, as he expressed it, they were not able to build them in this country except by paying $30 more on the ton than they were compelled to pay on the Clyde. Those vessels were put in the trade with Chili and Peru. He took out from Boston a lot of Yankee notions, as they are termed. He found a ready market for them at Lima and in the ports of Chili. Then when he undertook to load his ship to return home he was compelled to load with the productions of the country, and he found that wool and copper were the principal exports from Peru. He loaded his vessel, and then was confronted with the singular proposition that he could not bring that home-bound cargo into the ports of the United States on account of the high protective tariff. The result was that he was forced to take his cargo to England.

It is not the subsidies of the British steamship lines that drive away from us the commerce of these foreign countries; it is the fact that we have by our tariff destroyed all commercial relations with them. It is true that those American merchants could take their vessels and sail them under the British flag and carry that cargo to the English market; but being Americans they were forced away by the tariff imposed, as it is said, for American manufactures. They found that the tariff duty on wool and on copper was so high that they were compelled to sail those vessels, in which was invested American capital, to British ports.

To-day we are the largest manufacturing country in the world. We manufacture almost as much as England and France combined, as the statistics show; and yet we do not export three per cent. of our manufactured goods. We do not export to-day of our manufactured goods three per cent.

Mr. FRYE. We consume them at home.

Mr. VEST. We are forced to rely exclusively on the home market, which is created by the protective tariff. We do not trade with foreign nations, except to sell to them. The principles of common sense and of commercial intercourse are just the same between nations as between individuals.

Mr. DAWES. I should like to ask my friend what the advantage to us would be to bring here things that we can make at home?

Mr. VEST. Then why have commercial intercourse, and why subsidize foreign steamship lines? Why is it that here to-day we hear this clamor for subsidy, for increased mail-pay, as they term it? Why do we want to trade with these countries if we have all that we need at home?

Mr. DAWES. No one has said we get all we want at home; but we get what we have at home, and we propose to have the other besides.

Mr. VEST. And I tell the Senator from Massachusetts we shall never get it under the present conditions.

Mr. DAWES. Very likely; it does not look like it.

Mr. VEST. No; you ought not to have it. Take the merchant of any town in this country who wants to sell all that he has upon his shelves, and when he wants to buy goes to a neighboring town to purchase. He would be a fine specimen of commercial sense and sagacity! What is the good of such a man? And what are we doing to-day? We say to the whole world, "Come and buy;" and when we undertake to buy we close our ports hermetically against foreign products. As I said before, we manufacture as much ——

Mr. DAWES. Will the Senator allow me to put a question?

Mr. VEST. Of course.

Mr. DAWES. Will you be kind enough to tell us, because we all want to know, what the net gain is in going 3,000 miles for a thing we can make at home?

Mr. VEST. Then let us put a Chinese wall around this country.

Mr. DAWES. No; answer that question. What is the net gain?

Mr. VEST. I say that there is no net gain, but a net loss. We are selling to-day to fifty-five million people instead of to one billion five hundred million. Any one who wants an article will not buy it from us. The Senator's proposition is that a market with one billion five hundred million people is not as good a market as one with fifty-five million people. That is a proposition I will not argue upon.

Mr. FRYE. Yet Great Britain, a free-trade country, with every country she trades with, except her own colonies, finds the balance of trade against her.

Mr. VEST. And yet to-day we are talking about the great subsidies of Great Britain having brought her the commercial mastery of the world.

Mr. TELLER. Brought her the carrying trade.

Mr. VEST. The carrying trade of the world, and here we are to-day with virtually no carrying trade at all. Here we have had this splendid navigation system ever since the Government was created, and we have gone down until now, like the Scotchman with his mare, we have got to one straw; and yet when we touch this sacred white elephant of the navigation system the cry is, "Hands off! hands off! You will destroy the carrying trade of the United States!"

Mr. FRYE. Will the Senator allow me a word, because I have kept entirely quiet to-day and refrained under great temptation from making a speech in order to hurry the bill? Does the Senator forget that under absolute protection, called prohibition, we have a coastwise fleet twice as great as Great Britain, greater than Great Britain and France and Germany combined, of over twenty-one thousand ships, two hundred of them iron steamers, and as good as any in the world?

Mr. VEST. Yes, 200 iron steamers. The coastwise trade of the United States to-day is dependent upon schooners. If we had to make our coastwise trade in iron steam vessels we might maintain it to a certain extent, but still it would decrease on our hands year by year. The very same thing that gave us the mastery over Great Britain from 1830 to 1850 sustains our coastwise trade to-day. It is because we can build wooden vessels cheaper than Great Britain or any nation in the world. From 1830 to 1850 the American merchant marine gained steadily upon Great Britain, and why? Because our wooden clipper vessels mastered the ocean, and we could build them cheaper and make them run faster than any vessels in the world—wooden vessels, I mean. In 1850, after the Great Western came from Liverpool to New York, an iron steamship, after the proposition was demonstrated that steam could be used and iron used upon the ocean, from that very moment England commenced gaining upon the United States; and yet during all these years, from 1830 to 1850, England was paying enormous mail subsidies, paying from three to five million pounds sterling a year, and the United States was paying only a few paltry hundred thousand dollars; and yet we were gaining with subsidies against us.

It shows exactly what I assert to-day, that subsidy is not the remedy. Other conditions supervene, other causes have the effect of taking away from us the carrying trade. Subsidy will not put one pound of freight upon any line between this and any other country. You must make it to the advantage of the merchants, the manufacturers, and the producers of the two countries to trade with each other, and until you do it, until we remove the radical defect which closes our ports against barter and commerce with foreign nations, you may pile subsidies mountain high and you will not remove the evil. You might as well tell me that cuticura would remove an organic disease. It does not touch the cause. If you want commerce with foreign countries, you must have exchange, you must have barter, and until you do no amount of subsidy will effect anything.

Mr. FRYE. Do these South American and Central American republics give and take with Great Britain? Does Germany give and take with Great Britain? Can the Senator name me a country that gives and takes with Great Britain? The duties in these South American republics are three times as high as our duties are to-day.

Mr. VEST. Why is it that when you go to Callao you find that port crowded with British steamers and British vessels? Because those British steamships and vessels are loaded with a return cargo of Chilian and Peruvian productions, because there is commercial reciprocity between the countries. We ought to have that trade, and all the world knows it. Why do we not get it? It goes by our doors.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to ask the Senator a question if he will allow me. Is it not a fact that we buy much more from all the South American countries than we sell to them? The balance of trade is against us from all those countries.

Mr. FRYE. We buy twice as much as England does of Brazil to-day.

Mr. VEST. Why is it then, if that be so, that subsidies must be used in order to create this commercial intercourse between South America and us?

Mr. FRYE. Will the Senator allow me to answer?

Mr. VEST. Certainly.

Mr. FRYE. Because the subsidies which Germany and Great Britain and France give to their steamship lines to those countries enable them to carry the freight to and from Brazil and the South and Central American states 30 per cent. cheaper than we can do it with vessels that are unsubsidized.

Mr. VEST. And during the time we dominated the ocean and when our merchant marine gained steadily upon Great Britain, why was it that this same argument of the Senator did not apply then? Subsidies were against us then. Great Britain was paying out from three to five million pounds sterling, while we were paying out six or seven hundred thousand dollars, and yet we had the carrying trade, and we brought not only the productions of other countries to our doors and to our manufacturers, but we carried abroad our own goods to foreign countries.

Mr. FRYE. How much did we carry abroad thirty years ago?

Mr. VEST. We carried a vast amount; more in proportion to the amount we produced than we do now.

Mr. FRYE. Oh, no.

Mr. VEST. We are to-day the largest manufacturing country in the world, and as I said we do not carry abroad 3 per cent. of our manufactured goods.

Mr. FRYE. Because we use them at home.

Mr. VEST. And we use them at a loss, according to the Senator.

Mr. EDMUNDS. May I ask the Senator a question for information?

Mr. VEST. Certainly.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am entirely indifferent, as I generally am; but I should like to know what the Senator proposes to do about the restoration of American commerce and markets for American goods? He is not for this, evidently.

Mr. VEST. I am not.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What is he for?

Mr. VEST. If my opinion is worth anything, the Senator from Vermont is certainly welcome to it. In the first place, I would reform our tariff. I would make it to the advantage of these countries to trade with us. I would let raw materials come into this country duty free. I would let articles of necessity come into the country at the lowest possible tariff or duty free. I do not suppose the Senator wants now to go into the tariff discussion on this bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then the medicine for our present sickness is free introduction of all raw material and free introduction of all articles of necessity?

Mr. VEST. I do not say that is all of it. If the Senator proposes now to take up the tariff bill and go through it seriatim, it is rather an inopportune moment. I have no objection, however, to going into the discussion. I simply say that so long as we have this war tariff, which virtually closes our ports against the incoming cargoes of productions from other countries, no subsidy will remedy the evil.

Mr. EDMUNDS. But perhaps the tariff in the administration of Washington and Jefferson and Madison and Monroe and John Quincy Adams and so on down to the great era of human rights in Jackson, and still on from that time a little while, was a war tariff; or was it a protective tariff? It was just on exactly the same scale we have it now, and our commerce grew and our ships covered the seas.

Mr. VEST. Yes, Mr. President; and they did it without subsidy.

Mr. EDMUNDS. But they did it with a protective tariff.

Mr. VEST. There is no similarity between the condition of the country at that time and now.

Mr. FRYE. Why did the Senator cite it?

Mr. VEST. The Senator from Missouri has not cited it. The Senator from Missouri has not cited the former tariff in reference to this question. I say now—and it is a fact which can not be argued away, and no system of rhetoric will efface it—we have tried these navigation laws, and what has been the result? The carrying trade has disappeared from the ocean, and you are now forced to resort to subsidies in order to create a commercial intercourse that ought to come to us naturally and inevitably.

Mr. MAXEY. I desire to suggest to the Senator from Missouri, in response to a question asked to-day, that the history of commerce shows that there was more tonnage afloat flying the American flag under the Walker tariff of 1846 to 1850 and between 1850 to 1860 than there is in this day and year of our Lord 1887.

Mr. EDMUNDS. But it existed before and managed to survive for a few years.

Mr. VEST. I did not rise to discuss this question, but simply to disavow as a member of the Committee on Commerce any responsibility for this amendment. I opposed it in the committee, and I oppose it in the Senate. I do not believe it is the remedy for the present condition of affairs in this country. What the Postmaster-General has said can not and will not affect my action or my opinion. He has his responsibility and I have mine. If this entire administration to-morrow should undertake officially and in every other way to advocate this doctrine of subsidies, I would oppose it. I do not believe that it constitutes any remedy for the present disease, and therefore I shall oppose it.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I think it very clear that we shall not get through with this bill this evening, and I move that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Virginia moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. PLUMB. I insist that we shall vote on the bill.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. Relying exactly on that same kind of kindness and courtesy that has heretofore been extended to me, with the distinct understanding that I do not withdraw my motion, I yield for that purpose.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE] to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question now is on the amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations as amended, on which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. COLQUITT (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. CHACE]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. BERRY (when the name of Mr. JONES, of Arkansas, was called). My colleague [Mr. JONES] is paired with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. HARRISON]. If my colleague were present, he would vote "nay."

Mr. GORMAN (when Mr. MCPHERSON'S name was called). The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON] requested me to state that he was paired with his colleague [Mr. SEWELL]. On this proposition he would vote "nay" and his colleague "yea."

Mr. MANDERSON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN]. He would vote against this amendment. I should vote for it.

Mr. PLATT (when his name was called). My colleague [Mr. HAWLEY] is absent, paired, as I understand, with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST]. If present, my colleague would vote "yea." I vote "yea."

Mr. VANCE (when his name was called). On this question I am paired with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. GIBSON]. If he were present, he would vote "yea," and I should vote "nay."

Mr. VEST (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. HARRIS (when Mr. WHITTHORNE'S name was called). My colleague [Mr. WHITTHORNE] is necessarily absent this evening. He is paired with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH]. If my colleague were present, he would vote "nay" on this question.

Mr. CULLOM. The Senator from Rhode Island would vote "yea."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. HAMPTON. My colleague [Mr. BUTLER] is paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON].

Mr. BECK. My colleague [Mr. BLACKBURN] is paired with the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON]. My colleague, if present, would vote "nay."

Mr. PLUMB. The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. VAN WYCK] is paired with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY], and requested me to announce the fact.

Mr. CAMERON (after having voted in the affirmative). I withdraw my vote, being paired with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER].

The result was announced—yeas 36, nays 14; as follows:

Mr. SPRINGER. The regular order at this time is a special order, which I ask the Clerk to read.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands what is the regular order, but several gentlemen are claiming the floor on privileged matters.

Mr. SPRINGER. Such matters are not in order at this time, as the special order to which I refer provides that "no other business be transacted until the consideration of said bill is concluded."

The SPEAKER. The Chair will have the order read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union be discharged from the further consideration of Senate bill 199, entitled "An act for the retirement and recoinage of the trade-dollar," and that Saturday, February 12, immediately after the reading of the Journal, be set apart for the consideration of the same in the House, no other business to be transacted until the consideration of said bill is concluded.

Mr. HATCH. I rise to a question of order. If the question of consideration should be raised upon the bill referred to in the order just read, and if the House should vote not to consider it, would this day be then taken up with other business?

The SPEAKER. The Chair so supposes. The Chair will state in reference to the point of order raised by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] that according to the reading of the order, no other business can be transacted to-day until this bill is disposed of. After it is disposed of, or if it should occupy the day, then on Monday next gentlemen having privileged reports will have opportunity to present them.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I rise to a question of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. My point of order is that there has been made by the House a continuing order in favor of "such business as may be presented by the Committee on Labor." That order, after excepting "general appropriation or revenue bills, bills reported from the Committee on the Public Lands, and other prior orders," existing at that time, provides that the order in favor of business of the Committee on Labor shall continue "until the bills presented by said committee shall be disposed of." I submit that this, being a general order applicable under the rules to the business of a committee, takes precedence of a special order with reference to a particular bill. I desire to be heard upon the point of order.

Mr. SCOTT. I thought I had the floor.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SCOTT] demanded the regular order; but the gentleman from Missouri makes the point of order that business of the Committee on Labor has priority. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. Under the head of "special orders" it is stated in the Digest that—

A special order assigning and setting apart a day for the consideration of business of a committee takes precedence of a special order making a particular bill a "continuing order."

The Digest also states that—

Where two special orders are made for the same time, the one first made takes precedence.—Cong. Globe, I, 26, page 325. [The other, according to the practice, if made for that day, and "from day to day," will come up as soon as the one first made is disposed of.]

Again, Mr. Speaker, as applicable to this point of order, the Digest states that—

Pending a special order it is not in order to move a suspension of the rules, the special order having been made under a suspension of the rules.

Now, Mr. Speaker, when committees were called for the purpose of moving to suspend the rules, the Committee on Labor, of which I have the honor to be chairman, came before this House with but one request; and that was to give the Committee on Labor a special time for the consideration of their business. The prior orders, together with general appropriation or revenue bills, and bills reported from the Committee on the Public Lands, were exempted from the operation of the order.

After a contest of several hours, the order then proposed was adopted by a two-thirds vote. That order operated as a suspension of the rules by the only process which can suspend them—a two-thirds vote. The resolution of the gentleman from Pennsylvania was referred to the Committee on Rules, and reported back from this privileged committee February 5 and adopted, as the record shows, by the vote of a majority. Can this action set aside the action of this House under a suspension of the rules, requiring a two-thirds vote? Why, sir, under such a system of procedure a special order of this House, made by a two-thirds vote, would become a farce.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Speaker, the great object of the House is to expedite the public business. I have no objection to the gentleman stating his point of order, but I do not want him to venture on debate to the extent that he is now going.

The SPEAKER. There is no question before the House except the question of order made by the gentleman from Missouri. The Chair will hear the gentleman briefly upon the point of order.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I am confining myself as strictly to the point of order as the importance of the subject will permit, and I desire to show that it is not in order many months afterward, either by a special rule or a plain resolution, even though reported by the Committee on Rules, to interpose to set aside an order made by a committee under a suspension of the rules and by a two-thirds vote of the House; and I think it proper to add that up to this hour the Committee on Labor has never been permitted to occupy one moment of time under that rule.

Mr. RANDALL. But the Speaker can exercise his discretion in regulating the right of debate on a question of order.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I insist upon my right to be heard upon the point of order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has stated that the gentleman can make a brief explanation.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I am making it just as briefly as possible.

This case is different from any other question presented to the House. If this principle is carried out, that the Committee on Rules of the House can in this manner set aside a special order, made by a two-thirds vote, then it follows that the Committee on Rules can, by a resolution introduced, at any time absolutely nullify the action of the House. Under the privilege of this committee they can to-morrow, by the introduction of a resolution and its adoption by a bare majority, set aside the whole balance of the session for special legislation, particular jobs, or for any other purpose, and thereby prevent the consideration of any special order or any pending bill, even though a two-thirds vote was necessary to the making of such special order.

I insist that under the rules of the House if the morning hours are dispensed with, no matter on what ground, the next business in order, if I can obtain the floor, is the consideration of reports from the Committee on Labor; and that that order of business takes precedence of any special order even though reported from the Committee on Rules, if adopted subsequent to the time when the House provided for the consideration of labor bills.

Mr. RANDALL. I do not think it necessary to enlighten you, Mr. Speaker, by any remarks on this matter. I ask a decision upon the point of order made by the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. BELMONT. Mr. Speaker, unless the special order is proceeded with I will call up the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill.

Mr. O'NEILL. Of course the gentleman from New York is kind enough to antagonize the labor bills, but I hope the House will not concur with him in that view.

The SPEAKER. The House made the special order referred to by the gentleman from Missouri on the 17th day of last May. During the present session the House made the special order now called up by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SCOTT]. The special order to which the gentleman from Missouri refers was a continuing order until the Committee on Labor had one day for the consideration of bills reported by it.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. Will the Speaker allow me. Under the order of May 17 the committee has not had up to this day one moment's recognition on the floor of the House.

The SPEAKER. That does not affect the question of order. After that time, and during the present session, the House, by a direct vote—not the Committee on Rules, but the House itself, by a vote—set apart a particular day for the consideration of this trade-dollar bill, to the exclusion of all other business.

That was undoubtedly a declaration on the part of the majority of the House that on this day the special order, and all special orders heretofore made, should be superseded for the time being by the consideration of this bill.

The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. Then I raise the question of consideration, and hope the House will stand by me.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill made a special order for to-day.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 199) for the retirement and recoinage of the trade-dollar.

Mr. SPRINGER. I rise to a question of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SPRINGER. The rule under which we are acting to-day provides as follows:

No other business to be transacted until the consideration of said bill is concluded.

That is different from any other order made in the House within my recollection; and it does not admit of any other business until the consideration of this bill has been completed. You can lay the bill upon the table; you can strike out the enacting clause; you can indefinitely postpone it; but you must consider it to that extent as a compliance with the order.

The SPEAKER. There have been quite a number of orders made containing substantially the same language, and it has been always held to be within the power of the House to consider the order or not. The House never deprives itself of the right to determine whether it will or will not consider a question.

Mr. RANDALL. Regular order.

The SPEAKER. Will the House proceed to the consideration of the special order, the title of which has just been read?

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 104, noes 47.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I am afraid there is no quorum.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will appoint tellers.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. To save trouble, I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HATCH. I want to announce to the House—— .

Mr. RANDALL. Regular order! I object to debate.

Mr. HATCH. I shall endeavor to call up—— [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The SPEAKER. Debate is not in order, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 139, nays 102, not voting 77; as follows:

Mr. ATKINSON. I am paired with Mr. CANDLER, but not regarding this as a political question I have voted.

The vote was then announced as above recorded.

CHARLES E. CREECY.

Mr. SPRINGER, as a privilged question, entered a motion to reconsider the vote by which, on yesterday, the enacting clause was stricken out of the bill (H. R. 9930) conferring jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims and Supreme Court of the United States to finally determine the case of Charles E. Creecy, assignee in Congressional case No. 71, reported to the House of Representatives by said Court of Claims under the provisions of the act of Congress approved March 3, 1883; which motion was passed over for the present.

TRADE-DOLLAR.

The SPEAKER. So the House will proceed to the consideration of the special order, which is Senate bill 199, entitled an act for the retirement and recoinage of the trade-dollar.

Mr. SCOTT rose.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. Will the gentleman from Pennsylvania pardon me for a moment?

Mr. SCOTT. No; I cannot.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I move, then, that the House adjourn.

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman from Pennsylvania has been recognized.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania has the floor.

Mr. SCOTT. I do not desire to occupy the attention of the House any longer on this bill than is necessary. I hope the House will approve my request that debate be limited to two hours, and at the expiration of those two hours the previous question shall be considered as ordered. I ask the division of time be fairly made between the friends and opponents of the measure. I do not propose to object to the offering of any bona fide amendment, whether for or against the bill.

Mr. LANHAM. Two hours of debate will be sufficient.

Mr. SCOTT. I do not yield the floor at this time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks by unanimous consent the debate on this bill be closed in two hours; at the end of which time he asks the previous question shall be considered as ordered.

Mr. TAULBEE. I will object unless there is an understanding to this effect: That the friends of the bill shall be considered those who are in favor of the bill as it is, and who will support it without amendment; and that those in opposition shall be considered those who are opposed to the bill as it is. If that be the understanding I will not object.

The SPEAKER. Any gentleman opposed to the bill comes under the terms of the understanding as opponents of the bill.

Mr. BLAND. Why not let the debate run until 3 o'clock this afternoon?

Mr. SCOTT. I understand the gentleman from Texas [Mr. LANHAM], who has made a minority report from the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, represents the element opposed to the bill. Under an arrangement with him this morning we agreed to limit the debate to two hours, one hour on each side, and that is the reason why I have made the motion.

Mr. LANHAM. So far as I am concerned, we do not require longer than two hours.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania for unanimous consent. [After a pause.] The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I do not propose to occupy the time of the House in the discussion of this bill, for I can not but believe that every gentleman on this floor is fully cognizant of everything I could say in regard to it. I will simply refer to a few facts.

The present trade-dollar was authorized by an act in 1873. That act made it a legal tender in sums of $5. From 1873 up the year 1876 there had been coined and paid out 15,631,000 of these dollars. The act of 1876 deprived the coin of its legal-tender quality. But, sir, at the time the legal-tender quality was taken from the trade dollar, the power still was vested in the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States to continue its coinage. Up to 1876 the people of this country who had taken these trade-dollars, and up to which time they had been legal-tender, believed them to be dollars, and they were dollars.

It is hardly to be supposed, sir, that an act of Congress, such as that of 1876, repealing the legal-tender value of this coin, could be known by all of the fifty or sixty millions of people of the country who had been educated to believe that it represented a dollar, and that the Government would not repudiate it in the future.

In 1876 the legal-tender quality, as I have stated, was withdrawn, and from 1876 until the stoppage of the coinage of this dollar was directed by the Secretary of the Treasury, there was a further sum of 20,328,360 coined and put into circulation.

Mr. DANIEL. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. SCOTT. Yes, sir.

Mr. DANIEL. Twenty millions issued after——

Mr. SCOTT. Issued after the act of 1876 which deprived them of their legal-tender quality, after the people of this country had become accustomed to receiving them as dollars, and after the time that the repealing act took effect. In 1878 the standard silver dollar was provided for, and the number of grains in that coin was established at four hundred and twelve and a half grains, yet the Government continued the coinage of the trade-dollar, containing 420 grains of silver, although by act of Congress it was denied its legal-tender quality.

Mr. DANIEL. Will the gentleman allow me another question?

Mr. SCOTT. Certainly.

Mr. DANIEL. Upon what theory is the Government called upon to pay a legal-tender dollar for another dollar that never was a legal-tender dollar. I mean for those twenty millions issued that never were legal tender?

Mr. KELLEY. They were all legal tender to the amount of $5 in one payment.

Mr. SCOTT. If the gentleman from Virginia will tell me how he can distinguish a dollar that was issued prior to 1876 from the dollar that was coined after 1876 then we will make an amendment in that direction.

Mr. DANIEL. I will tell the gentleman how to do it; and I accept the proposition that no trade-dollar issued after the year 1876 shall be redeemed in a legal-tender dollar. The date stamped on the face of the dollar is a sufficient distinction.

Mr. SOWDEN. Will the gentleman from Pennsylvania allow me a question?

Mr. SCOTT. Yes, sir.

Mr. SOWDEN. Does not the gentleman know that there are to-day only between seven and nine millions of these dollars in circulation in the United States and that the greater bulk of these coins have gone abroad to China; so that the whole amount even issued before would not be reached in their redemption now. Some fifteen millions were issued prior to the withdrawal of their legal-tender quality under the joint resolution of Congress.

Mr. SCOTT. Now, Mr. Speaker, I have stated that prior to 1875 fifteen millions of these dollars were coined, and after 1876 $20,328,000 of them were coined. They were issued by the authority of the United States. They have upon their face the stamp of the mint of the United States; each one was stamped a dollar, and the people of this country who took them in payment for their commodities had every right to expect and believe that they were dollars.

The total amount coined was $35,965,924. The official reports of the Treasury Department show that of this total of $35,965,000, $26,929,000 have been exported, leaving in the country $9,036,752.

Mr. LANHAM. Will my colleague allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. SCOTT. Certainly.

Mr. LANHAM. I wish to state that the Director of the Mint estimates only a little over $7,000,000 as being in the country.

Mr. SCOTT. Of this $9,036,000 it is reasonable to suppose that a large proportion has been utilized as bullion. Up to a certain period over $500,000 of them had been recoined in the mints of the country; and at this time the redemption of this coin, if this bill becomes a law, will probably not exceed $7,500,000 even if it be so large a sum.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman permit me a question?

Mr. SCOTT. Certainly.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. What assurance have we that the other twenty-three or twenty-four million dollars will not be returned to this country?

Mr. SCOTT. The assurance is this: The original idea of this trade-dollar was that it was simply a dollar to meet the relations of our trade with China. It was hoped that it would be introduced as a substitute for the Mexican dollar, which has always been the standard dollar of China, and when these dollars were coined they were largely exported to China. The custom or habit of the Chinese people is that whenever they get a dollar they put some kind of a stamp upon it, and this bill expressly provides that no dollar defaced or stamped shall be redeemed by the Government. It is a safeguard against the return of the $26,929,000 which we have exported.

Mr. HALL. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. SCOTT. Certainly.

Mr. HALL. Why should this distinction be made, if the quantity of metal is the same, between those dollars which the Chinese Government have stamped and those held here?

Mr. SCOTT. We want to protect our silver mines in Colorado and our people, and this will protect them. We do not want foreign bullion to come in.

Mr. BLOUNT. Will the gentleman permit me a question?

Mr. SCOTT. Yes, sir.

Mr. BLOUNT. I ask the gentleman if he has any official data of this or any other country showing how many of these trade-dollars have been stamped by the Chinese Government.

Mr. SCOTT. No, sir; but we know what amount went to China and, as I have said, the custom and habit of the Chinese people is as well authenticated in this respect as any statute you have on your books.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Have not any of those trade-dollars that have gone to China come back again?

Mr. SCOTT. Some few.

Mr. BLOUNT. Does the gentleman mean to say that the treatment of the trade-dollar which he has described is the result of Governmental action, or merely of the habits of the people?

Mr. SCOTT. The habits of the people. When a broker gets a dollar he immediately commences to clip off portions of it, and sells so many grains to one Chinaman, and so many to another, and the dollars are largely consumed in that way.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Have those dollars which have come back from China got the Chinese stamp upon them?

Mr. SCOTT. I understand that a great many of them have.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Do you know that they have?

Mr. SCOTT. I have been told so, but I can not state it as an absolute fact within my own knowledge.

Now, Mr. Speaker, there have been several bills introduced in connection with this trade-dollar question, and some of these have, I think, separately passed both Houses; and I do not think there is much division of sentiment in regard to the duty of the Government with respect to the redemption and retirement of this coin. The only difference of opinion in the Committee of Coinage, Weights and Measures was as to what disposition should be made of them after they shall have been retired.

The majority of the committee have directed me to report favorably the Senate bill which is now on the table, with a simple amendment providing that the time shall be extended for six months from the passage of the act instead of being fixed on the first day of July next. That is the only amendment that the committee have directed me to make. A minority report has been submitted, and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. LANHAM] presented to the House the other day and had placed upon the Journal an amendment which he proposes to offer. I will not now proceed further with this discussion on my part, but I desire to reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Speaker, I desire to send to the Clerk's desk and have read an amendment which I propose to offer to this bill, and which I ask to have considered as pending.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause, in section 1 and 2, and insert:

"That for a period of six months after the passage hereof, United States trade-dollars, if not defaced, mutilated, or stamped, shall be received at their face value in payment of all dues to the United States, and shall not be again paid out or in any other manner issued.

"SEC. 2. That the holder of any such trade-dollars during the period aforesaid, on presentation of the same at the office of the Treasurer or any assistant treasurer of the United States, if said coins be not defaced, mutilated, or stamped, may receive in exchange therefor a like amount and value, dollar for dollar, in standard silver dollars, or in subsidiary coins of the United States, at the option of the holder.

"SEC. 3. That the trade-dollars received by, paid to, or deposited with the Treasurer or any treasurer or any national depository of the United States, shall not be paid out or in any other manner issued, but, at the expense of the United States, shall be transmitted to the coinage mints and recoined into standard silver dollars or subsidiary coin, at the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury."

Strike out the words "section 3" in the Senate bill, and insert "section 4."

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Speaker, the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures are substantially agreed that it is the duty of the Government to redeem the trade-dollars, they having been issued by governmental authority and subsequently degraded and impaired by act of Congress. There is no disagreement particularly among us so far as that is concerned. We, however, do differ as to the methods of redemption, or rather as to what shall be done with these trade-dollars when they are received at the Mint or at the Treasury offices of the Government.

The amendment which I have sent to the desk presents substantially the views of the minority of the committee on this subject, and has been already printed in the RECORD on a previous day. We believe that in redeeming the trade-dollar that subject ought to be specifically treated upon its own merits and without interfering with any other statute or disturbing the monthly purchase of bullion and its coinage into standard silver dollars as now provided by law. This very amendment has been substantially adopted heretofore, both in the Senate of the United States and in the House of Representatives, at different times. A like provision passed the House at the last Congress almost in the very words of this amendment; and now we are going to ask the House to repeat their former work and redeem these trade-dollars, in keeping with the dignity and the duty of the Government, but not to interfere with the act of 1878 providing for the issuance of the standard silver dollar.

The Senate bill provides that when these trade-dollars shall be received at the coinage mints they shall be regarded and treated as silver bullion, and, at their bullion value, shall be deducted from the amount of bullion required to be purchased and coined by the act of February 28, 1878. We believe that we ought to redeem the trade-dollars independently, as I have stated, and without any interference with any other statute. This is the logical and proper treatment of the question.

Mr. PARKER. Does the proposition which the gentleman advocates contemplate an increase of the amount of currency to the extent of the trade-dollars redeemed?

Mr. BLAND. That is precisely what it is.

Mr. LANHAM. We propose that the trade-dollars when received by the agents of the Government shall be recoined into standard silver dollars or subsidiary coin, at the option of the Secretary of the Treasury, and that this coinage shall be independent and exclusive of the "not less than two nor more than four million dollars' worth of silver bullion per month" which the Treasury Department under existing law is required to purchase and coin.

Mr. PARKER. Then the effect, as I understand, is to add so much to the currency.

Mr. LANHAM. Yes, sir; it will undoubtedly add to the silver currency of the country to the extent of the trade-dollars recoined.

Mr. PARKER. Then the gentleman proposes by his amendment to add from $8,000,000 to $20,000,000 to the currency?

Mr. LANHAM. It will not be that much, as the amount to be redeemed is estimated by the Director of the Mint to be about $7,000,000.

Mr. BLAND. I hope it will be.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. It would be a good thing if it were.

Mr. TAULBEE. Are we to understand the gentleman from Texas [Mr. LANHAM] as saying that this bill proposes to increase the amount of the currency if we consider trade-dollars as currency?

Mr. LANHAM. I mean to say this: these trade-dollars are now practically dormant bullion; they are not in circulation; their legal-tender quality has been taken away. If they be now redeemed and recoined under this proposition, this new coinage will be independent of the present quantum of silver required to be purchased and coined monthly under existing law. To this extent the silver dollars or subsidiary coin into which these trade-dollars may be recoined would be an addition to the currency.

Mr. TAULBEE. In the bill are trade-dollars treated as coin, as money, or are they treated as bullion? In other words, are they to be purchased at their face value or at their bullion value?

Mr. LANHAM. They may be received in payment of all Government dues; they may be exchanged, dollar for dollar, at the offices of the Treasury; and after being thus received they are not to be reissued or in any manner paid out, but may be recoined into standard silver dollars or subsidiary coin, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury. Any man who holds these trade-dollars may present them at the office of the Treasurer of the United States or any subtreasurer and receive in exchange therefor, dollar for dollar, standard silver dollars or subsidiary coin, at his option.

So that, Mr. Speaker, the question presented as between the bill reported by the majority of the committee and the amendment which we advocate is simply and in the main whether these trade-dollars shall be considered a part of the monthly purchase and coinage of bullion or to be independent and exclusive thereof.

Mr. BLOUNT. I desire to ask the gentleman what is the difference between the proposition embraced in the amendment of the minority of the committee and a proposition providing that trade-dollars shall be legal tender?

Mr. LANHAM. We do not propose to make the trade-dollar a legal tender at all for future circulation.

Mr. BLAND. The proposition of the minority makes the trade-dollars, when recoined, an extra coinage not counted as a part of the monthly silver coinage now required by law.

Mr. LANHAM. Yes, as the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] suggests, it is the purpose of the minority of the committee to make this an extra coinage, independent of the "two to four million dollars' worth of silver" now required to be coined monthly.

Mr. BLOUNT. I understand that; but I am asking what would be the difference between that proposition and a proposition to declare the trade-dollars legal tender and thus end all this business?

Mr. LANHAM. The difference would be this: We would then have in circulation one silver dollar, the trade-dollar, containing 420 grains troy, and another silver dollar, the standard dollar, containing 412½ grains. This would be something abnormal in our coinage system. It is, I think, the purpose and policy of the Government to simplify our silver coinage and have only one silver dollar. It is our purpose to eliminate the trade-dollar altogether and at the same time to provide for redeeming the obligation which was assumed by the Government in the issue thereof; in other words, to say to each and every holder of a trade-dollar that he can bring it to the officers of the Government which created it and receive in exchange therefor a standard silver dollar or subsidiary coin, and that no more trade-dollars shall be coined or issued.

Mr. Speaker, inasmuch as I have heretofore discussed this question very fully and given my views upon it at length, I do not desire now to occupy further time, but wish to distribute the remainder of my hour among other gentlemen who desire to speak. I will ask what time I have occupied?

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. RICHARDSON). Twelve minutes.

Mr. LANHAM. I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND], the chairman of the committee.

Mr. ROGERS. Before the gentleman from Missouri proceeds I desire to ask, merely for information, whether the difference in value between the legal-tender silver dollar and the trade-dollar will pay the expense of recoinage?

Mr. BLAND. Oh, yes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. What time does the gentleman from Texas yield to the gentleman from Missouri?

Mr. LANHAM. Ten minutes.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, my throat is in such condition to-day that I shall not be able to discuss this question as I would be glad to do. The question in relation to this trade-dollar is an important one. The trade-dollar has a peculiar history. The original act of 1873 authorized the coinage of what was called the trade-dollar, containing 420 grains, and made it a legal tender in sums not exceeding $5 in all payments. From 1873 to 1876 some fifteen million of these trade-dollars were coined, and most of them went into circulation. In 1876 Congress passed a resolution taking from the trade-dollar its legal-tender character, but continued the coinage at the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury. After 1876 the sum of $16,000,000 were coined—after the legal-tender quality had been taken from them.

Mr. LANHAM. Twenty millions of dollars.

Mr. BLAND. I am corrected by the gentleman from Texas, who states that the amount is $20,000,000.

Now we remember, Mr. Speaker, that in 1876 silver had begun to depreciate as compared with gold. In fact it had depreciated. Silver was ruling at about 47*d.* per ounce, and little more than it is worth to-day. We can see the enormous job in the coinage of the trade-dollar after its legal-tender power was fixed.

We find, Mr. Speaker, they went into circulation and continued for some time. In 1876 and 1878 they passed at par. Finally the banks refused to take them. That was about 1880. They depreciated to bullion value. There was little effort made to redeem them during the time people generally held them. It was only years after they had been thus demonetized they came into the hands of the banks out of the hands of the people, who had taken them at par.

Now, sir, when they are concentrated and held in the hands of banks we find a tremendous pressure for the redemption and recoinage of the trade-dollar. I say the poor people of the country who held the trade-dollars for the last six or seven years waited for Congress to redeem them and Congress refused to do so. Now, whence comes this clamor for the redemption of the trade-dollars? It comes from what point? It comes from a quarter hostile to silver coinage. It comes from those who are opposed to the coinage of silver unless they are to be benefited by it. While they are demanding suspension of silver coinage under the act of 1878 they are quite willing to dump down these trade-dollars under that act.

It may be said, and I appreciate the argument, that when the Government permits, by fraud or otherwise, a coin to go into circulation, it ought to be responsible for its redemption.

Now let the parties who ask for this equity do equity themselves. What is that? The trade-dollars had a legal-tender quality in sums of $5 and no more. They were an independent coinage. They were in circulation in this country as money at par when these banks refused to receive them and thus depreciated them. If they want equity let them come to Congress and say this coin shall be monetized and put into circulation. No extra coinage, because they were coined and in circulation when the banks demonetized them. That is equity. Let us declare them legal tender in sums of $5. Place them where the law places them. Make them legal tender the same as the standard dollars. That would be equity.

These parties do not want them. Standing as they do by their representatives they are unwilling to put them into circulation in this coinage in the monthly purchase of bullion, thus interfering with the law of 1878. I hope the House will vote down that proposition.

I am not here to see any such miserly policy inaugurated, such as telling the people of this country we are unwilling to put money into circulation. I am not a representative of that class. I wish to see gentlemen on the floor of this House go upon the record on that question.

It was asked by gentlemen awhile ago if this would be an extra coinage. In no sense. This would only be to remonetize them under the amendment of my colleague.

Why, Mr. Speaker, with our retiring bank-note circulation even with the recoinage and remonetization of this trade-dollar during the next fiscal year we will not have the same amount of money in circulation as we have to-day. That is the result of the effort of these people who are opposed to putting money into circulation, of the people who are opposed to coining the metal of this country.

Mr. OATES. Will the gentleman yield to me for a moment?

Mr. BLAND. Certainly.

Mr. OATES. What would be the objection to, or what the effect of, a simple statute declaring the trade-dollar a legal tender?

Mr. BLAND. None whatever, except the statement of my colleague that it might be a little anomalous to have one dollar contain 412½ grains, and the other 420 grains. But the substitute accomplishes that precisely. The amount of extra silver will pay the expense of coinage, and it is uniformity of currency that we want and ought to have.

A MEMBER. Would there not be a profit in the coinage?

Mr. BLAND. None of any consequence; there may be some little profit to the Government, not much.

I care nothing for the redemption of the trade-dollar particularly. As I said before, they are in the hands of gentlemen who have bought them at their bullion value.

Mr. SCOTT. No, sir.

Mr. BLAND. They are in the hands of gentlemen who are opposed to silver coinage unless they can reap profits; and if they are to be redeemed, let us compel them as the representatives of this people to do justice to the people of the country, which is to restore them where they were before they were demonetized. We know the policy of the Treasury Department has been and is to-day to coin only two millions of silver a month, the very lowest limit fixed in that act. They never go above that amount, but the quantity runs from two to about two and a quarter millions, and for the last few years they have not been purchasing the amount authorized by law.

I say, therefore, that every man who votes to coin these trade-dollars to apply them as against the purchase of bullion indorses that policy, and it is a virtual instruction to the Secretary of the Treasury not to purchase more than two millions and not to coin more than that. Now I wish to know who will go on record indorsing that policy by voting for this bill. It is to be counted as a part of the monthly purchase of bullion, and we know that they will not purchase more than two millions a month; and I repeat, this bill is an instruction on the part of Congress to the Treasury Department to purchase only that amount and is an indorsement of that policy.

Mr. SOWDEN. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. BLAND. Yes.

Mr. SOWDEN. Would it not be more just to redeem and use the outstanding trade-dollars as a part of the coinage of the two millions a month, rather than purchase two millions of bullion a month from the silver kings of the country and repudiate these coins?

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. LANHAM. I yield to my colleague two minutes longer.

Mr. BLAND. No, sir; the silver kings of the country come to the Government and sell the bullion at London and New York prices; but this bill proposes to pay dollar for dollar for the trade-dollar to speculators, and thus allow them a profit of about 20 or 30 cents on the dollar.

A MEMBER. What are the trade-dollars worth?

M. BLAND. They are worth about 75 cents.

Mr. WARNER, of Missouri. I would like to ask my colleague one question.

Mr. BLAND. I yield for a question.

Mr. WARNER, of Missouri. I wish to ask whether or not in justice the trade-dollars ought not to be redeemed at their bullion value?

Mr. BLAND. That can be done to-day. They can take them and get the bullion value for them anywhere just like anyone else who has silver bullion to sell. There is no trouble about that.

But, sir, the one reason why I am willing to vote for the bill making the trade-dollars an extra coinage is simply to authorize the coinage and issue of money that will take the place of retiring national-bank notes. Even if we recoin the whole of the trade-dollars as an extra coinage, and there should be ten or fifteen millions of them, it will not prevent the contraction of the currency under the national banking system.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. LANHAM. I will yield further to my colleague on the committee, if he desires it.

Mr. BLAND. I am not able to go on any further, and therefore submit the question with these remarks.

Mr. LANHAM. I will yield now to my colleague on the committee from California [Mr. FELTON].

Mr. FELTON. Mr. Speaker, I have no desire to attempt to discuss the silver proposition as such. I had supposed, sir, that in the first session of this Congress that question had been so ably and thoroughly discussed as to render it unnecessary to say anything upon it now; and I had further thought that the result of that discussion was to settle the question so far as the policy of this House is concerned upon the main issue, as it is termed, the "silver question." The House decided that it was not in favor of universal coinage; it also decided by a very considerable majority that they were opposed to further restrictions on the issue of the silver dollar at the present time. In other words, that the law as it now is for the coinage of two millions a month should not be disturbed; and what I now desire to say to the friends of the bill, and very briefly, is that if they had looked wisely to their own interests, and while on the justice of this measure they would have disconnected it with any other question of coinage, it also seems to me that the committee of which I have the honor to be a member could have made an amendment in the committee which would have substantially saved all of this discussion in the House.

Sir, the retirement of the trade-dollar is not a question that attaches to the main issue here presented. In my opinion it is a question whether this Government shall do justice or not. Shall she redeem an issue of money which she has given to the people and which went out with or under a redemption law of $5 in amount, and legal tender to that amount, or shall she repudiate that issue? That is the whole question.

Gentlemen have stated the main facts of this case and it is unnecessary to reiterate them. But I do desire to say to the friends of the trade-dollar that if they would accept the amendment offered by the minority of the House committee they will save time and possibly save the passage of their bill, as well as protect the Government from the stigma of repudiating its own issue, which I do not believe this Congress desires to do. I am in favor of the redemption, but I am opposed to and shall oppose any measure that will in any way reduce the present purchase and coinage of silver.

Mr. SYMES. Mr. Speaker, I am for this bill, provided it is modified according to the amendment of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. LANHAM]. I am willing to wipe from the record of the Congress of this country the stain of semi-repudiation that was brought about by the gold-bugs when they passed the act of July, 1876, demonetizing the trade-dollar.

Mr. PARKER. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. SYMES. No, sir; I have but five minutes.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I am only astonished that the gentlemen who are advocating this bill, the distinguished gentlemen from New York [Mr. PARKER] and Pennsylvania [Mr. SCOTT], and others in this House, when I have but five minutes, will not allow me to trace their record on this question. For the last ten years they never waked up to the fact that a dark blot of semi-repudiation had been imposed upon this country, until the bankers and gold-bugs had bought up all these demonetized dollars.

I am a little surprised that these gentlemen who prate of nothing but financial honor, who have rung the changes on that phrase before the people of this country for the last fifteen years upon every occasion, in season and out of season, forgot in 1873, when by a legislative fraud they demonetized standard dollars that were a universal legal tender for any amount in this country, and never thought of the fact from 1873 to 1878, that millions of those standard dollars were in the hands of the people of this country disgraced and demonetized by semi-repudiation. These monometalists and great financiers who claim to have the financial honor of this country in their special charge, never advocated the redemption or remonetization of these standard silver dollars from 1873 to 1878, although they were held by the people of this country no longer a legal tender; but by the act of February 12, 1873, they had become silver bullion.

Mr. Speaker, again in 1877 and 1878, when the distinguished gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] was advocating the Bland act before this House, the same gentlemen and their representatives and associates who had voted for the act of 1873, demonetizing and disgracing these standard dollars when they were in the hands of the people, opposed their remonetization. And, again, when they passed the act of 1876, demonetizing the trade-dollars, which by the act of 1873 they had made a legal tender to the extent of five dollars, it never seemed to occur to them that they were guilty of two acts of semi-repudiation. And still I find from a pamphlet I have received from the Bankers' Association of New York the men who have fathered this trade-dollar redemption bill in the Senate, and the men who are advocating it in the House to-day, are the same men who are responsible for these financial blots of dishonor that they are apparently now seeking partially to atone for on this floor to-day.

Sir, I am for the passage of this bill although the people of this country have been swindled out of millions, because they have sold these trade-dollars to bankers and brokers. But, sir, I do not expect perfect justice this low down on earth; on account of having stood on the stump and everywhere else in favor of the resumption of specie payments with a contempt I never can express for anything which can look toward semi-repudiation in my country, I am willing at the expense of this swindle to redeem the honor of my country and redeem the trade-dollar, provided we shall not repeal the Bland act or modify it to the extent of $500,000 a month, so as to accomplish indirectly what these gentlemen dare not bring before this House directly.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. SYMES. I ask unanimous consent that members generally may be permitted to print remarks on this question in the RECORD.

Mr. HEARD. I object.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. MCCOOK, its Secretary, informed the House that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the following titles:

A bill (H. R. 6393) to authorize the Fort Worth and Denver City Railway Company to construct and operate a railway through the Indian Territory, and for other purposes;

A bill (H. R. 6976) to erect a public building at Portsmouth, Ohio;

A bill (H. R. 7775) to increase the appropriation for the erection of a public building at Troy, N. Y.; and

A bill (H. R. 10305) to increase the appropriation for the public building at Brooklyn, N. Y.

REDEMPTION OF TRADE-DOLLAR.

Mr. LANHAM. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WARNER].

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I send to the Clerk's desk, that it may be pending, an amendment to the substitute of the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. SOWDEN. Let it be read.

The Clerk read the proposed amendment, as follows:

Be it further enacted, That until January 1, 1889, the coins known as trade-dollars, if not defaced, mutilated, or stamped, shall be receivable at their face value for all dues of the Government and exchangeable when presented at the Treasury or subtreasury in New York or at any of the mints for standard dollars; the trade-dollars so received shall be melted down and coined into standard dollars: Provided, That the recoinage of trade-dollars under this act shall not be counted as part of the silver bullion required to be purchased and coined into standard dollars, under the act of February 28, 1878.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I voted in the Forty-sixth Congress to redeem the trade-dollar. I deemed it then an act of justice to the people who at that time largely held them. As an act of strict justice it was demanded more strongly then perhaps than now. But the fact that these dollars have in a large measure changed hands since then and are now probably owned for the most part by brokers, bankers, and speculators, who have purchased them at a discount, does not change the other fact that part of them when issued were legal tender for $5 and that all of them bear the stamp of the Government and are issued as "dollars," and as dollars they went into circulation. Our people when they see a coin stamped "a dollar" by the Government of the United States have understood that it was a dollar, and the act of 1876 taking away the legal-tender quality of the trade-dollar without providing for its redemption constitutes, I believe the only act of repudiation which this Government has ever been guilty of.

Therefore, in whosesoever hands these trade-dollars may now be, I shall vote for their redemption. Their original issue was a blunder undoubtedly, and that blunder comes back to plague us now, and these dollars will continue to plague us as long as they are left unredeemed. I say a blunder. I have heretofore on this floor characterized the issue of these trade-dollars as a trick. This coin was, in fact, in the first instance, a kind of "trick" dollar, for I can not believe that those who issued it were so simple-minded as to believe that by putting a few more grains into a coin we could get more per grain for our silver abroad.

It is said they were intended for the foreign trade, but there never was a time when one hundred and sixteen standard dollars would not buy just as much in any country as one hundred and fourteen trade-dollars—that being about the relation of the pure metal in the two coins. Therefore there never was any gain at all in issuing the trade-dollar, but their issue was a part of the scheme to demonetize silver in this country. There can be no doubt about that. Notwithstanding that, however, I want to get them out of the way; but in doing so I, for one, can not consent that the requirement to purchase at least two millions' worth of silver bullion each month shall be encroached upon on any plea whatsoever, or possibility of adverse interpretations of this act. I have, therefore, offered the amendment read at the Clerk's desk, and I say to those who favor the redemption of the trade-dollar that they had better let it stand as an independent measure, and not attempt to couple it with any other proposition, and especially not to interfere with the operation of the coinage act of 1878.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. LANHAM. I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL].

Mr. DANIEL. Mr. Speaker, there is, in my judgment, a partial element of justice in the pending bill, but there is coupled with it a very much larger element of injustice. If justice were a thing that could be mathematically measured I would say this bill is three-sevenths justice and four-sevenths injustice, for reasons which the facts will develop.

THE ORIGIN OF THE TRADE-DOLLAR.

On the 12th of February, 1873, fourteen years ago this very day, Congress enacted as follows:

The silver coins of the United States shall be a trade-dollar; a quarter dollar or 25-cent piece; a dime or 10-cent piece; and said coins shall be a legal tender at their nominal value for an amount not exceeding $5 in any one payment.

And by the same enactment, under which the trade-dollar was brought into being, it was provided that it should contain 420 grains of silver, Troy. Nothing was said about the old standard silver dollar of 412½ grains. It was simply ignored, and dropped out of coinage. In brief, a new silver dollar, called a trade-dollar, was created by this act, containing 7½ grains more of silver than that "dollar of the fathers," which had been the hard-money currency of the people from the beginning of coinage by the Government to that time.

WHAT WAS DONE UNDER THE ACT OF FEBRUARY 12, 1873.

Under the provisions of the statute above quoted, and between its date and July 22, 1876, the number of trade-dollars coined was $15,631,000; and for convenient reference I will here insert the tabular statement given us in the report of the Director of the Mint, which is as follows:

Number of trade-dollars coined, imported, and exported prior to the joint resolution of July 22, 1876, and since.

	Prior to demonetization, July, 1876.	From July, 1876, to June 30, 1878.	From July 1, 1878, to date. (Proof pieces.)	Total.
Coined	15,631,000	20,328,360	6,564	35,965,924
Imported		2,074,812		2,074,812
Exported	12,580,000	16,424,004		29,004,004
Excess of coinage and imports over exports	3,051,000	5,985,732		9,036,732

RECAPITULATION.

Coinage prior to July 22, 1876	$15,631,000
Exported prior to July 22, 1876	12,580,000
Balance not exported		$3,051,000
Coinage since July 22, 1876	20,334,924
Imported since July 22, 1876	2,074,812
Total	22,409,736
Exported since July 22, 1876	16,424,004
Balance not exported		5,985,732
Total not exported		9,036,732
Minimum remelted at United States mints	500,000
Probably taken out by Chinese	1,500,000
		2,000,000
Estimated amount in the country		7,036,73

It will be seen from this table that four-fifths of the trade-dollars coined between February 12, 1873, and July 22, 1876, were exported from the United States immediately, or almost immediately, upon being coined. This fact was not of casual or accidental occurrence. These trade-dollars were originally designed for exportation to China, where silver is the sole standard of value; and while our statute is silent on the subject, it is a notorious fact that while ostensibly they were to be a part of our circulating medium they were really intended for use in the eastern markets—the stamp of our Government being taken there as evidence of their bullion value.

Whatever their design, however, $15,631,000 of them were issued under a declaration of law that they should be "a legal tender at their nominal value for any amount not exceeding $5 in any one payment;" and with this law in force one-fifth of the aggregate amount of trade-dollars issued did enter into our circulation and were taken as sound legal-tender dollars in the business of the country.

REPUDIATION OF THE TRADE-DOLLAR.

On the 22d of July, 1876, Congress passed a joint resolution, which provided as follows:

The trade-dollar shall not hereafter be a legal tender; and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to limit, from time to time, the coinage thereof to such an amount as he may deem sufficient to meet the export demand for the same.

This was rank repudiation, not "semi-repudiation," in the mild phrase of condemnation used by the gentleman from Colorado. This was repudiation—pure and simple—the repudiation of a silver dollar by a government which had made it legal-tender money, and which had divested it of its monetary and legal tender quality, and left it a mere naked piece of bullion, stamped, indeed, to show the number of grains of metal in the bullion—but still bullion, and nothing more.

THE FULFILLING OF GOOD FAITH AS TO THE LEGAL-TENDER TRADE-DOLLAR.

Now, as it is a matter of fact that the Government did issue 15,631,000 of trade-dollars with the pledge of its faith that they should be legal-tender money, and did afterward, in July, 1876, repudiate that pledged faith, it is an obvious matter of justice that the legal-tender quality be restored to these 15,631,000 of repudiated dollars. And if this were all that this bill asks, I would heartily support it. Ay, I would go farther than this. As you can not tell from looking at these trade-dollars which bear the stamp "1876" upon them whether they were issued before or after "July 22, 1876," the time when the legal-tender quality was taken away from trade-dollars, I would vote to restore that legal-tender quality to all trade-dollars of the "1876" issue, so as to be sure to keep faith to every dollar that came under the governmental pledge. It is simply a case like that of the confusion of goods, and in which the party who made the confusion must bear the loss.

TRADE-DOLLARS ISSUED AFTER 1876.

But as to the trade-dollars issued since 1876—some $20,334,924 in amount—as to this body of trade-dollars comprising four-fifths of the whole issue, let it be remembered that they were expressly coined, under the act of July 22, 1876, not in any wise as part of our circulating medium, but solely "to meet the export demand for the same," and that no statute at any time gave them a legal-tender quality or contemplated their use as American money. At this late date to make them money when they never were, and never pretended to be, money, and to subject the people to the expense of doing it, is in my judgment repudiation of the rights and interests of the people, and a taking in vain of the name of "public faith," which is invoked for the purpose. To keep promises that were made is to preserve public faith, but to affect the existence of promises that never were made, and to smuggle them in under the plea of good faith in promises that were made is quite another and different thing, and this it is what the pending bill would do.

WHAT SHALL WE DO WITH IT?

Now, then, if gentlemen are seeking to distribute justice, to keep their pledges to the people on the one side and to the money-holders upon the other, let them restore to their statute-books an act which will again make legal tender of those trade-dollars which were legal tender, and let them exclude from coming in under cover of that pretext the holders of twenty millions who have merely speculated upon the statutes and upon the people.

Mr. SOWDEN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. DANIEL. Certainly.

Mr. SOWDEN. Did not the people who received those trade-dollars and who now hold them pay the Government for them, at the time of their issuance, 100 cents for every dollar put in circulation?

Mr. DANIEL. They never paid a cent for them—neither 100 cents nor 1 cent. They offered their bullion and had it coined and they have got their bullion still. Wherefore, then, should we pay them the 100 cents?

Now, Mr. Speaker, at the proper time, in order to relieve the embarrassment which the Government has got into upon this question, I am willing to do this: To restore the legal-tender quality to those fifteen millions of trade-dollars for the period of two years, in order to give notice that they must be brought into the Treasury, and then, just as fast as they are brought in, to couple with that provision the amendment which has been offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. LANHAM]. Thus they will cease to be dollars, or pretended dollars, of any kind whatever when they reach the Treasury, but, as bullion, they may be received by the Government and issued again into the circulation as the valid, legal money just like the standard silver dollars of this country which are so issued.

These trade-dollars—issued since 1876 and twenty millions in amount, never were, and never ought to be, anything else than stamped bullion. Their holders can get full value for them any day by selling them as bullion; and they never were, and never should be, entitled to get any other value for them.

They have been bought up by their present holders, for the most part, at from 75 to 80 cents on the dollar. They are held in large measure by speculators who bought them in the hope that such an act as this would pass, and they should be content to get back what they paid for them, which they can readily do. They ought not to be permitted to palm them off upon the Government, as they will be able to do if this bill passes without proper amendment, and get from us a dollar of good money for what is only so much bullion of less value than a dollar or a dollar's worth.

They can not be, and ought not to be, "redeemed," for "redemption" is a thing that can not be predicated of them. They never had a promise made upon them, or concerning them, and you might as well speak of saving the soul of a stick as of "redeeming" a thing that never contained an element of pledge or promise. But still they should be dealt with. How?

Let the Government buy them in simply to get rid of them and to put a stop to the clamor arising out of them, paying a small premium over their bullion value to induce the holders to bring them in. And when they are brought in let them be recoined according to the principles of the amendment to the pending bill offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. LANHAM]. At the proper time I will offer a substitute to effect this just disposition of the subject. It is the simplest, cheapest, and most effective plan, and should it be adopted it will ere long eradicate this weed of a coin that sprung up in our financial garden and leave our silver currency of standard coin pure and undefiled by its presence. And in this manner will full faith be kept on all sides—faith to the holders of legal-tender trade-dollars in restoring them to dollarhood and converting them into standard dollars, and faith to the people in refusing to pay what we do not owe to the holders of the trade-dollars which never were legal-tenders and never should be. Yes, faith to the people who seem to be the only party to these financial contracts to whom good faith is not preached or practiced; faith to them in refusing to palm off upon them the expense of a needless burden.

Mr. LANHAM. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. TAULBEE].

Mr. TAULBEE withholds his remarks for revision. [See Appendix.]

Mr. LANHAM. I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. TARSNEY].

Mr. TARSNEY. Mr. Speaker, it may be deemed presumptuous on my part as a young and humble Representative on this floor to attempt to discuss this important question. But I come here as the representative of a powerful commonwealth that is deeply interested in the monetary system of this country. I stand here in opposition to this bill as it comes to us from the Senate, and I desire briefly to state to the House my reasons.

I believe, and the people who send me here believe, that if there is anything in this land which should be stable, which should lack "elasticity," it is that which measures all our values. When, in 1792, the "fathers" who were here before us established as a standard of value a silver dollar of 412½ grains, including the alloy, and a gold dollar of 25.8 grains, they established a yard-stick of measurement by which every acre of land in our broad country has been measured; by which all our indebtedness, national, state, and municipal, as well as the private indebtedness between individuals, has been regulated and measured, except during the abnormal and unfortunate period of the civil war and the years of depression which followed it.

I desire to call the attention of the House to the fact that when the coinage of this trade-dollar, and I hold one in my hand, was authorized in 1873, it was not for domestic circulation. It was for the purpose of trade and commerce with China and Japan.

Mr. LANHAM. Was anything said in the language of the act to indicate this fact?

Mr. TARSNEY. It is not in the language of the act, but we construe it in reference to the circumstances which surrounded us at that time.

I desire to call the attention of the House to the fact that the silver dollar of 412½ grains had been demonetized at the time this was authorized; that this dollar, as I have said, was not in circulation among our people, but was designed for foreign trade. It contains 6¾ grains of silver more than the standard dollar.

Mr. LANHAM. But what about the legal-tender quality of it?

Mr. TARSNEY. I will answer my friend from Texas, if he will allow me to proceed with my remarks.

Mr. LANHAM. Let me ask the gentleman whether we can make a legal-tender quality for Japan or for China. Have we any such extra territorial power?

Mr. TARSNEY. Unquestionably not; no foreign coin is a legal tender here, and we have no power to give extra territorial effect to our laws; but we can establish our own measure of value, and deal with foreign nations in our exchanges with reference to it.

I say we had no coin in circulation in this country until after the "greenback" dollar came to par with coin, and the greenback dollar came to par only after the passage of the "Bland" act in 1878.

I say to this House now, these people had coined some $35,000,000 of these trade-dollars in all. They were intended, as I have said, for foreign trade, but speculators have got this money back into the country, and now every one of these monetary bucket-shop men are coming here asking Congress to give them a standard dollar for this debased piece which possesses no monetary value.

I say to you, Mr. Speaker, and I maintain, no dollar (irrespective of the material of which that dollar is composed) ever was yet created except by the fiat of law. And when we declared 412½ grains should be a dollar we should stand by it. It is as dishonest to compel the debtor to pay more than he agreed to pay as it is to require the creditor to accept less.

One word more, and I will not longer occupy the attention of the House. My time is so brief I am necessarily hurried. I speak the sentiment of the great commonwealth which sent me here when I say that I simply ask that we may have a stable currency by which our values and property may be regulated. We protest against being compelled to pay by sheer force of law more than we contracted to pay at the time we entered into our contract. We say, "Take thy pound of flesh, but not one drop of blood." I would, sir, had I the power——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. TARSNEY. [Cries of "Go on!"] I would, sir, if I had the power call in every gold certificate that is outstanding; I would call in every silver certificate that is outstanding; I would call in every national-bank note that is outstanding, if you please, and in their place, based upon the 25.8 grains of gold and 412 grains of silver, I would issue a United States Treasury note convertible into coin, and I care not whether they be called greenbacks or graybacks. [Laughter.] I would remove from the statute-books of the land that restrictive provision which prevents the officers of the United States Government from receiving it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's time has expired.

[Cries of "Go on!"]

Mr. TARSNEY. I would sweep from the statute-books of our land that restrictive provision which prevents the officers of the United States from receiving that Treasury-note dollar for debts due to the Government. I would eliminate from the face of that bill that provision which actually depreciated it, and I would place that Treasury-note currency in the situation where the world could not say this great Republic will longer hishonor its own obligations as it has dishonored it for the last quarter of a century. [Applause.] I thank you. I had some London quotations, but as my time has expired I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. LANHAM. I renew the request that members be permitted to print remarks on this bill in the RECORD.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. LANHAM. I now yield the remainder of the time to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BROWN].

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, this is a day of triumphs on the part of the friends of silver money in this country. This bill is a notice that the enemies of silver money are about to give up the fight. We have here a confession, clear and unquestionable, that silver has been degraded by the lawmaker. It is very gratifying to me to witness the contrition embodied in this bill. The assassins of silver money are at the confessional. May the Lord have mercy on their souls!

Silver bullion never retreated from its old and proper value until the lawmakers of the world commenced to discriminate by statute against it. England had attempted by legislation to destroy its value for fifty years, and failed. Silver held its own until she was re-enforced by other nations. The help came first from Germany, but the two nations combined did not succeed in their warfare. Then they secured the assistance of the American Republic in 1873, and that did the work, so far as the work could be done by legislation. From that time to 1878 there was nothing in this country to stay the downward tendency of silver bullion, which the statutes had induced by discriminating in favor of gold.

The creditor nations of the world, who intended to double the value of the promises they held, were having things their own way down to the time when the act of 1878 was passed.

Then commenced a fight for its repeal, which continued until the vote in the first session of the Forty-ninth Congress gave the world notice that the sentiment in favor of that law was on the increase instead of decrease, as they confidently hoped.

When the debate ended and the vote was announced, silver bullion had touched bottom prices. In that debate the prognostications of the monometalists placed silver bullion dangling in the air among the sixties, with the bottom dropping out of things in general, and the glittering gold, which was their all and in all, in full retreat across the ocean.

It did not go. Silver bullion has advanced, and gold is coming to this country much faster than it flies from it.

If you pass this bill, declaring, as it does, that the Congress has not only ceased its discrimination against silver but indicates a purpose to restore to it the "strength of the law," which gold demands and receives at its hands, silver bullion will move on toward a par with gold on the old ratio.

Mr. JAMES. That is a prognostication too, I believe.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. That is a prognostication; yes. I am not afraid to put it against any in that line the gentleman himself has so confidently indulged in.

Mr. JAMES. I did not give any prognostications. I was very careful not to make any prognostications.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. Very well; if the gentleman now disclaims it I am bound to believe he is correct and that I do him wrong in counting him among the prophets of a year ago. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SCOTT], in that memorable discussion, told us that silver was only fit to be used as a subsidiary coin; now he comes and tells us to put back into silver the law that was filched from it by the act of 1876. This is a movement in the right direction. I rejoice at my colleague's second sober thought. It is a good one. He is evidently over the fright he took a year ago at the sight of so many silver dollars. Then he was in the subtraction business. He is now turning his attention to addition. After eleven years of criminal neglect it is at length proposed to add to the silver dollar what the Congress then subtracted from it. It is most gratifying to me that my colleague [Mr. SCOTT] is crying out: "Give us more law for our silver dollars."

Mr. Speaker, neither the Government of the United States nor any other government ever took from money or its promises to pay money any law which it had previously imparted to it without doing a dishonest thing. It is impossible that it could be otherwise. When that quality of law which gives or enhances value is imparted to money it should go with it to the end of its existence; and when you take one iota of law from money somebody as a matter of course must be cheated. Now that was exactly what the act of 1876 did.

The least thing, then, that should be done by the Government of the United States is to put back into the trade-dollar exactly what it took from it by the act of 1876. When the Government has done that it has done the honorable thing. It is under obligation to holders of trade-dollars to go thus far, and there is no demand beyond that which can in justice be made. Practically that is what this bill does, and I give it my hearty support. It is not the part of statesmanship to higgle over the question as to who holds these abandoned dollars. It is a question whether the Congress will longer degrade itself by degrading its money.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. SCOTT. I yield now twenty minutes to my friend from New York [Mr. JAMES], reserving the balance of my time.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. Speaker, I am not going to enter into an argument on the silver question, but there are a few fallacies which have been uttered here during the course of this debate which I would like in the few minutes I shall occupy the floor to undertake to correct.

It has been said, notably by the gentleman from Ohio, that the trade-dollars that are in this country are now in the hands of speculators in New York largely and other large cities. Such is not the case. The trade-dollars which went into the hands of the speculators, those who make a business of buying bullion, trade-dollars and other coins, have all been used and have been exported. They did not buy them to hold. There has been constantly going on from this country an export to China of Mexican and trade dollars. They are exported from San Francisco, and it has been going on for years, quite an extensive business.

In 1868 I was at San Francisco and crossed to China, taking with me an amount of money for ordinary expenses, for which I paid at that time a premium of 103, or 3 per cent. over the value of gold. They were sent out there and used in China as a circulating medium. They have no coin in China except the "cash," a little piece of iron of the value of one-tenth of a cent, and the coinage used ordinarily is the Mexican dollar.

The trade-dollar was wisely conceived. It was a wise thing on the part of our Government that that law was passed providing for the trade-dollars. It was passed providing for them entirely with one purpose in view, and that was to meet the demands for silver in China, to send them out in place of the Mexican dollars which were being purchased and sent out there to pay our obligations for merchandise we were purchasing. As I say, the plan was a wise one, and though it has been denounced on this floor repeatedly in the last eight, ten, or a dozen years, I say it was wise in this, that we found a market for our silver, which was being produced in large quantities, and it helped us to pay our obligations with the products of our own country.

When the act was passed taking away from the trade-dollars the legal-tender quality it was because after the demonetization of silver in Germany and its effect the price of silver bullion went so low that it was thought necessary and desirable that the legal-tender clause should be taken away from it. That was done. But subsequently the trouble came which we have upon us now, and which we have had upon us during the years that have intervened; and that grew out of the fact that there was a profit to the man who held the bullion, the mine-owner, a profit in coining that silver bullion into a trade-dollar and selling it to contractors for internal improvements who were paying large sums of money in wages. When gold was at a premium and when greenbacks depreciated in value there was a profit between buying bullion and sending it to the mint to be coined into a trade-dollar and paying it out to laborers when they knew they were paying it in a coin that was not legal-tender. It was taking advantage of the law by the speculators to pay wages to workmen in a coin which was not a legal-tender.

I consider there is no legal obligation upon this Government to redeem these trade-dollars, but there is a moral obligation, and because there is that obligation, because there is a propriety in it, I am desirous of getting rid of these trade-dollars.

I would state further in regard to where these trade-dollars now are, I have here a little book which probably you have seen on your desks. It is prepared by a resident of my own city, and he gives in it responses from a large number of towns and cities in the State of New York, one hundred and forty-eight in number, telling how much is held in each town, how much the bankers hold, and how much individuals hold as correctly as the facts can be ascertained. The reports, I have said, are from one hundred and forty-eight towns and cities, and the amount does not run up to a very large sum total.

The amount held in New York in banks and by individuals is $500,000. It is held by small dealers who could not afford to sell the amounts in their hands out to the brokers. That is the principal reason, and the only reason, why I desire to get rid of these trade-dollars, that we may relieve the small traders in whose hands they are and who have held them for years rather than submit to a sacrifice on them.

I have a letter in my hand from a gentleman residing in the city of New York who is thoroughly familiar with this trade-dollar question, and who is connected with business in the East. He writes me that the amount which is held by merchants on the coast of China, or which is to be seen there in circulation, and in Japan, and at Singapore is insignificant. We have had some fear it might come back here if we passed this bill. But the amount is so small as to be practically insignificant. But there is one thing more to which I want to call attention.

Mr. PLUMB. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. JAMES. I have not time. There is one thing more to which I desire to refer. I wish the House distinctly to understand there is very little prospect, in my judgment, if we adopt the substitute offered by the gentleman from Texas, that there will be any action had during this Congress. This question was up in the Forty-sixth, in the Forty-seventh, and in the Forty-eighth Congresses, and it is now before us in the Forty-ninth. If we adopt the Senate bill, I think this question will be settled. If we adopt the House bill, which is moved as a substitute by the gentleman from Texas, then I fear we will have this whole question over again in the future.

How much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has used eight minutes. He has twelve minutes remaining.

Mr. JAMES. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. PARKER].

Mr. PARKER. I wish to say a few words on this question. It is too late to discuss now the details or the particulars of either the silver question or the trade-dollar question. The question presented to us here is a question of honest or dishonest action toward the men who honestly hold and honestly obtained the trade-dollars within this country; and it seems to me there is no feasible or practicable way to deal with this except to pass to-day the Senate bill and relieve the innocent holders all over the country.

When the trade-dollar became degraded a few men of large wealth undoubtedly grasped the opportunity, bought the dollars, and laid them away. I do not regret that those men have had to wait some time before getting current money again; but during the same time there have been, and there are, many of these dollars held by small traders and dealers all over the country, and those men have to lose also; and therefore these trade-dollars should be redeemed.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the trade-dollar to-day is not currency; it is not used or recognized anywhere as currency. Then what is it? It is not counterfeit. It is in the nature of bullion. We can treat it only as bullion; we can buy it only as bullion, and we can recoin it as from bullion. Gentlemen say they are willing that we shall go on and redeem the trade-dollar, provided we do not disturb the flow of silver that is being bought by the Government. Gentlemen here who represent those who sell silver object to any interference with that industry of selling silver to the United States, and they would rather that this dishonest method of making the people throughout the country hold the trade-dollar should continue than that the selling of silver by the bullion makers should be interfered with. Unless they can continue the business of selling their silver to the Government they say they are opposed to this bill. I regretted very much that my friend from California [Mr. FELTON] should oppose this bill for the reason, if I understood him correctly, that it would interfere with the steady flow of silver into the mints. I think that question should be put aside in this discussion. I think it has no proper place here.

Mr. FELTON. If the gentleman will permit me, that is precisely what I said. I claim that the movers of this bill should have brought in a measure for this purpose without interfering in any way with the general and present laws governing the coinage of silver.

Mr. PARKER. The gentleman from Colorado [Mr. SYMES] took the same ground, but more distinctly; opposing the redemption of these trade-dollars unless opportunity shall be given to keep up the sales of silver.

He referred in a very feeling manner to the blot upon our escutcheon, the stain upon our national name, to wit, the degraded trade-dollar, and then he told us that unless we were willing that his constituents and those he represents shall be still enabled to sell to the Government whatever bullion they produce, for more than it is worth, he was in favor of keeping that blot upon our national escutcheon.

Mr. SYMES. The gentleman is mistaken. Does he not know that the silver-miner can sell his bullion in London or New York for just as much as the Government pays him for it? So the silver-miner does not obtain any advance in price, because the United States purchases $2,000,000 per month at the market price.

Mr. PARKER. The gentleman from Colorado [Mr. SYMES] objected somewhat sharply to my interrupting him a few minutes ago, and I now protest against his seeking to thrust his remarks into my time. To quote your own "halcyon and" (literally) "vociferous" words, "you ought to know better."

The gentleman [Mr. SYMES] reminds me of an oration once made before the New York Legislature by a Cayuga chief, a speech of great brilliancy and eloquence, delivered with much dignity, and translated sentence by sentence. He said: "When our fathers used to come to see yours, we always received whatever we asked for; so that when we went back to our people our hearts were so light that our feet scarcely touched the ground. We went upon wings." After continuing in this lofty strain for some time, he brought out the real purpose of his long and beautiful oration, which was that he wanted us to build his people a plank-road. [Laughter.] There was a great deal of fine oratory, but under it all was the effort to secure a personal and local benefit. So it is with the argument of the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. SYMES]. He shudders, almost, at the blot upon our national escutcheon, but objects to any attempt to remove it unless his people shall be allowed to sell us their silver at what they and we know to be more than its value.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. How more than its value? I wish the gentleman would explain that point.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. JAMES. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY].

Mr. DINGLEY. I think, Mr. Speaker, that under all the circumstances it is the duty of the United States to redeem the trade-dollars which were issued under the authority of this Government, but in doing that it seems to me important that our legislation should not in any manner touch any other question. The bill has passed the Senate, and, as it has been reported to this House by the majority of the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, does not disturb the silver coinage as it now exists. It provides, in substance, that there shall be no increase or reduction of silver coinage. It properly leaves that question entirely outside; but the amendment of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. LANHAM] would change the silver coinage as provided by the act of 1878.

Whatever may be our views respecting the increase or diminution of silver coinage, it ought to be left a question to be considered by itself, and not be brought in incidentally and indirectly upon a bill of this nature. This bill as passed by the Senate does not affect the question of silver coinage, but leaves the laws on that subject precisely as they now exist; whereas the bill proposed as a substitute would change those laws and increase the silver coinage.

As a matter of fair dealing, therefore, it seems to me proper and just that in a bill of this kind, which proposes simply to authorize the purchase and redemption of the bullion which exists to-day in the form of trade-dollars, we should not undertake to legislate on the silver question, but should allow those dollars to be retired and treated as bullion, as they would be under the existing laws.

More than that, it will be remembered that a bill for the retirement of the trade-dollars passed this House in the Forty-eighth Congress; and while it was pending an amendment precisely similar to that now offered by the gentleman from Texas was adopted. The result was that the bill fell between the two Houses. If there is any desire on the part of this House to redeem these dollars, it should be done as the Senate proposes.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. JAMES. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. EVANS].

Mr. EVANS. Mr. Speaker, the question of the redemption of the trade-dollars was pretty thoroughly discussed in the Forty-eighth and the first session of this Congress.

On three occasions previous to the present I have addressed the House on the subject, and I have at all times, in season and out of season, endeavored to impress my fellow members with the importance of their redemption.

I have nothing new now to offer, and can only hope in the short time allowed to reiterate briefly some of the reasons why I favor this bill. I hope the time has come when a majority of this House will be found voting with me for the redemption of the trade-dollar, notwithstanding the manner of redemption as provided in the bill may not exactly conform to all our ideas.

I do not see how it is possible for any one to think that the National Government should not redeem these coins. The authority to coin them was given by Congress under the act of February 12, 1873, in the following words:

The silver coins of the United States shall be a trade-dollar, a half-dollar or a 50-cent piece, a quarter dollar or a 25-cent piece, a dime or a 10-cent piece; and said coins shall be a legal tender at their nominal value for any amount not exceeding $5 in any one payment.

The same act defines the relative proportion of pure silver and alloy in the trade-dollar, and that the devices and legends used shall be the same as on other coins of the United States.

Relying on these pledges of the Government, it became a current coin at home as well as abroad, and debts to the amount of millions were paid by it. Admitting, as asserted, that they were coined for the purpose of promoting trade with China and other Asiatic countries, it was not intended that that should prohibit their circulation at home.

The Mint report of 1873 says:

Having been made a legal tender in limited amounts, it may eventually, if the price of silver relative to gold falls sufficiently, to some extent enter into home circulation.

Indeed, the Government provided for their circulation when it declared them a legal tender; and it was such a recognition as to lead everybody to suppose that this great Government of the United States would not repudiate a currency which it compelled the people to take in the payment of debts.

Secretary Folger, in his annual report of 1883, said:

The reading of the law taught the people that the trade-dollar was a coin of their sovereignty, and for the redemption of which, at an unabated value, their Government was bound.

Strange kind of a policy that would be for a Government to adopt which would compel the people to accept a coin of its own making which it would not itself accept in payment of debts due to it. The act of 1873 provided that no other silver coins should be issued by the mints except those mentioned in the act.

It is well known that from 1873 to 1878 the law was complied with, and no silver dollars of any other denomination were coined by the United States.

After nearly half the whole amount had been coined, and several millions had passed into circulation among our own people, as shown by the statistics of coinage and exports, Congress in 1876, by a joint resolution, declared that hereafter trade-dollars shall not be a legal tender. But mark the fact that the Government continued to coin them, even after the foreign demand had ceased, until $20,000,000 more had been coined.

When Congress took away their legal-tender quality it made no provision for their redemption. The Government certainly has no just right to take away the legal quality of its obligations at will; if so, it can take away with equal justice the legal quality of the present standard silver dollar. The Government has no more right to break its contracts than a private citizen or a corporation. Its agreements with its citizens should be as binding and sacred as its treaties with foreign nations. And if the Government of the United States refuses to redeem the trade-dollar it will be guilty of a great wrong and will be setting a bad example for its citizens. She might with equal justice have said when her bonds were below par that she would not pay them in full because they were in the hands of speculators.

It can not be possible that the Government will repudiate one of its own coins by refusing to receive it in exchange for another of less intrinsic value, but which on account of Congress taking away its life blood, is only worth its weight as bullion. I am informed by a letter received but a few days ago from the Director of the Mint, that the amount to be redeemed under the restrictions of this bill would not probably exceed $7,000,000, and as the Government would have the right to recoin a dollar of 420 grains into a standard dollar of 412½ grains it would sustain no loss; but if the individual holder who took the trade-dollar at par is compelled to sell it as bullion he will lose at least 20 per cent., not counting interest for the length of time he has been obliged to hold it.

It has been claimed by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WARNER] that these coins are no longer in the hands of the original holders, but have passed into the hands of speculators. If this be true, let me ask who should be held responsible? Who was it that made speculation possible? Why, the Congress of the United States, when it took away their legal-tender quality. And if it were true that they are in the hands of speculators, it would be no good and sufficient reason why they should not be redeemed.

But we are not willing to admit that they are largely in the hands of speculators even at this late date. A little more than two years ago I made a very thorough investigation as to the number of trade-dollars and the manner in which they were held in my State, Pennsylvania. In order to do this I sent a circular letter to the banks, bankers, trust companies, as well as to private individuals, requesting them to give me the amount of their holdings and the manner in which they were received, whether at par or discount. The result of that investigation was, as heretofore stated by me to the House, as follows:

Held by banks, bankers, and trust companies	$796,749
Held by private individuals and societies	1,641,134
Held at a discount	123,044
Total	2,560,927

You will notice by this inventory that less than 5 per cent. of the whole amount reported were taken at a discount; the remainder, $2,437,883, were taken at their face value, and out of this number $1,641,134 were taken at par by private individuals, benevolent, beneficiary, and religious societies.

The correctness of my investigation was corroborated by the reports of the Comptroller of the Currency and the Director of the Mint, made at the opening of the first session of this Congress. By these reports it is shown at that time there were $1,600,000 held by the banks, and about $5,000,000 still in the hands of the people, seven-tenths of which are held at their face value. The last report of the Comptroller, on October 7, 1886, gives the amount of trade-dollars held by the banks as $1,889,764, a small increase over the previous year.

Last August there were reported to me over $300,000 of these coins held by private individuals in the city of Philadelphia, taken at their face value in the ordinary transactions of business. They were not called for by me, but were reported voluntarily. I made no effort to make further investigation. I am fully convinced that in my State at least a large proportion of the trade-dollars are still in the hands of those who took them at par, most of them tradespeople, who took them of poor and laboring people in exchange for merchandise. And those held by banks in my State were nearly all taken at their face value in the payment of notes or on deposits.

Mr. Cheney of the Garfield National Bank of the city of New York made a similar investigation, and found that out of $1,000,000 reported to him only about 28 per cent. of the whole amount were taken at a discount.

No doubt some of them are in the hands of speculators; so are some of the standard dollars; they are bought and sold every day in the market, but that is no reason why the Government should refuse to take them.

After having declared the trade-dollar a legal-tender Congress surely had no right to take away that quality without at the same time passing a law for its redemption.

No notice whatever was given to the holders that on a certain date Congress would pass a law taking away their legal-tender qualifications.

No time for redemption was given in the act of 1876, but from and after its passage, on the very day it became a law, they ceased to be a legal tender. The Government not only refused to take them, but virtually notified everybody that they were no longer compelled to take them in the payment of debts. This left in the hands of innocent holders many millions of dollars, which they were either forced to sell to speculators at a discount or hold until the present, waiting hopefully for Congress to come to their relief. If this bill should become a law, I believe that very little profit would be realized by the speculators, for the reason that they have in most instances had to carry them a sufficient length of time to lose all in interest that they will gain by redemption.

The act now under consideration, passed by the Senate and slightly amended by the Coinage Committee of the House, is, in my judgment, the very best that could be adopted. It provides:

That for a period of six months from the passage of this act, United States trade-dollars, if not defaced, mutilated, or stamped, shall be received at the office of the Treasurer or any assistant treasurer of the United States, in exchange for a like amount, dollar for dollar, of standard silver dollars of the United States.

SEC. 2. That the trade-dollars received by the Treasurer or any assistant treasurer of the United States shall not be paid out or in any other manner issued, but, at the expense of the United States, shall be transmitted to the coinage mints, and shall be regarded and treated as silver bullion, and, at their bullion value, shall be deducted from the amount of bullion required to be purchased and coined by the act of February 28, 1878, and shall be recoined into standard silver dollars, according to the provisions of said act: Provided, That the amount to be so deducted as provided in this section shall not exceed $500,000 in any month.

SEC. 3. That all laws and parts of laws authorizing the coinage and issuance of United States trade-dollars are hereby repealed.

It will be observed that this bill is, to a certain extent, a compromise between the conflicting opinions of the free-coinage and the anti-free-coinage people in Congress.

While it provides that trade-dollars redeemed shall be regarded as bullion and be deducted from the monthly purchase required to be made under the act of February 28, 1878, it also provides that the amount to be deducted shall not exceed $500,000 in any one month. This provision is so drawn that the Treasurer can not exceed $500,000 monthly, but he may, if he thinks best, only deduct $100,000, or even $1,000.

So it would seem to me that the amount deducted from the monthly purchase could not seriously cripple the silver market.

From the opinion of the Director of the Mint and others who seem to be informed on this subject, the amount is not likely to exceed $7,000,000; this amount distributed over several months' purchases would not be likely to affect the London bullion market in the least appreciable degree.

I am one of those who believe that the present coinage of silver is in excess of the demand, and therefore ought to be suspended; but in view of the fact that the trade-dollars were once a legal tender, made so by the act of Congress, and subsequently demonetized by it without making any provision for their redemption, leaving several millions of them in the hands of innocent, honest, trustworthy people, and who, unless some provision is made, and that very soon, will lose not less than 20 per cent., not counting loss of interest, I feel it my duty to vote and work for the passage of this bill. And however much I am opposed to the increase of the present coinage of $2,000,000 a month, I would, if it became absolutely necessary for their redemption, be willing for the Secretary of the Treasury to increase the amount to $2,500,000 per month during the time necessary for their redemption.

I have before said, and I am firmly grounded in that belief, that a great Government like ours can not afford to take the advantage of its people by refusing to take its own coin. I hold that the passage of any law by the Congress of the United States, which demonetizes any of its money without providing for its redemption, is nothing more nor less than repudiation, a disgrace to the American nation and unworthy a great Government like ours, professing to be founded on the broad and munificent principles of equal rights and equal justice to all its citizens.

This bill passed the Senate without a dissenting vote. In that body there were many members in favor of free coinage. If they were willing to vote for this bill I do not see why our friends in this House should not vote for it.

Mr. SCOTT. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BYNUM].

Mr. BYNUM. Mr. Speaker, I do not propose to occupy any more time than may be necessary to explain why I am compelled on this question to part with such excellent company as my friend from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] and my friend from Texas [Mr. LANHAM]. It is well known that I joined them in the minority report in favor of free coinage. I have concurred with the majority of the committee in recommending the passage of this bill as it comes from the Senate with the amendment reported. I am in favor of the passage of the bill in this form, because I believe that if any material amendments are made in this House they will defeat all legislation on this question.

Mr. LANHAM. Does not my friend know that the Senate passed as an amendment to the surplus resolution of last session a proposition in all respects similar to the amendment which I have offered?

Mr. BYNUM. Yes, I know that; and I know that the House refused to concur in that amendment. If that be taken as an expression of the sense of the House, the question has been already settled by this body.

Now, Mr. Speaker, by the act of February 12, 1873, the trade-dollar was made a legal tender in sums not exceeding $5. Under that act there were issued 15,631,000 of these dollars, of which there were exported 12,580,000, leaving in circulation in this country 3,051,000. No one pretends or claims but that when the Government deprived these coins of their legal-tender quality it was an act of repudiation. No one denies that it is but an act of simple justice that the Government should redeem the coins issued under the act of February 12, 1873.

In 1876 a resolution was passed depriving the trade-dollar of its legal-tender quality and providing that the holders of bullion should have the right to continue to have them coined for export. Now, the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL] says they were not coined as money, but were simply bullion. I would like to ask the gentleman where there is conferred upon this Government in the Constitution any authority to make and issue coins which shall not be money. Clause 6 of section 8, of Article I of the Constitution, empowers the Federal Government "to coin money."

Mr. DANIEL. The gentleman will allow me to remark I have never said that the Federal Government had the power referred to.

Mr. BYNUM. But the gentleman insists that these dollars were not coined as money, but simply as bullion for export.

Mr. DANIEL. I have not said that the Government had the legal power to do it.

Mr. BYNUM. I affirm that the Congress of the United States has no right to coin anything but money; and when the Government authorized the coinage of these dollars, although under the law they were not declared to be legal tender, the people had the right to presume that when the Government coined a dollar and stamped it as such, it was coined in conformity with the Constitution, and when issued was issued as money. Hence, I believe it simply good faith on the part of the Government that this coinage, now outstanding to the extent of probably $7,000,000, should be redeemed and eliminated.

The only difference between the minority and the majority of the committee on this question is as to whether these trade-dollars when recoined shall be counted as part of the monthly purchase of bullion under our present laws, or whether they shall be in addition to the same.

That is really the only difference. I am willing that these trade-dollars, when redeemed shall be counted as part of the monthly purchase of bullion, because I fear that if they be not thus counted, we shall be unable to pass this bill. I do not wish to be understood as abandoning in the least the principles I held when I advocated, upon this floor, last session, the free coinage of silver.

I am still in favor of free coinage. I am willing, however, for the time, to yield my convictions, and join with those who are extremely timid about increasing our coinage in the passage of this bill, even though the trade-dollar shall, when redeemed, be considered to the extent of $500,000 per month, a part of the monthly purchase of bullion, as required under the present law. It makes but little, if any, difference whether they are or are not so reckoned. The addition of the entire $7,000,000 of trade-dollars outstanding to our coinage would not materially increase our volume of money. I do not regard the amendment as in any wise important, and for fear that its adoption may impair the chances of the passage of the bill shall vote against it. I want to see the trade-dollar taken up. Nothing tends more to discredit our Government, in a small way, than to see a dollar, coined by the Government, containing 420 grains, selling for 71 cents, while creditors are forced to accept those containing 412½ grains at par.

Mr. SCOTT. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. HEMPHILL].

Mr. HEMPHILL. Mr. Speaker, as a member of the committee which reported this bill I desire to say a few words in reference to it.

A great deal has been said in reference to two kinds of trade-dollars issued by this Government, one of which was issued prior to July 2, 1876, which had the characteristic of legal tender given to it, and the other issued since that time, which did not have that character. And upon that there is an attempt made to draw a great distinction between the two classes of money.

Now, so far as I am able to judge, Mr. Speaker, I do not see why we should redeem one any more than the other; for, after all, the legal-tender quality is no more than the power given by the Government, through legislation, to make a circulating medium of that which otherwise would not be a circulating medium.

But the trade-dollar issued prior to July 2, 1876, had a forcing power about it which the money since that time did not have.

But those coins under the act of Congress were declared to be coins of the United States, and I can not understand how this Government can, as a matter of justice, after it has declared by its act that certain stamped pieces of money shall be coins of the United States, then refuse to receive them at the Treasury, or indeed do anything else than make them good in the hands of the people who have taken them.

It is said this money has gone into the hands of speculators, and that they are going to make profit out of it. The character of the men who hold obligations of the Government can not in any degree affect the character of those obligations when we have issued them, whether they are trade-dollars or any other kind of money. If they are in the the hands of speculators, we put it in the power of those speculators by the trickery of this Government to make money out of them. [Applause.] And I say it does not lie in our mouths to say that we shall so gerrymander the laws as to permit the people of the country to be swindled out of their money. [Applause.]

You allowed these speculators to become possessed of these trade-dollars, and then, when they have become possessed of them, you turn round and debase the obligations which we have issued, and say we will not redeem them because they have been bought up by people to whom you gave the power to get them under acts of Congress. They could get them in no other way.

There is another question, and that is whether these trade-dollars shall be counted as a portion of the bullion the Government is required to coin? My friend from Missouri (Mr. BLAND) gets mad, as he generally does, with the bondholders, and speculators, and money-brokers, and turns to abusing them. [Laughter.]

I say the gentlemen who indulge in that kind of thing ought to be exceedingly grateful to the bondholders and money-brokers for being in this country, as it affords them an opportunity to indulge in this sort of buncombe, which goes out to the country and induces their constituents to believe they are constantly working in the interest of the people. [Laughter and applause.]

What we want to do is what is honest and fair, and that is the only obligation which rests upon us. And whether the money is held by one class of individuals or another is not a matter of concern to us when we come to consider the question whether or not we shall do that which we ought to do if we are honest men.

Now, if we pass this Senate bill—and we will if we desire to do that which is fair and square—it will then become the law, and this question of repudiation will be wiped out; whereas if we attempt to add to it a provision that this shall be accounted as a part of the coinage provided for by the law, we may endanger the whole thing, and instead of doing what we ought to do we will spend our time in making the Treasury do something which it ought not to do.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. SCOTT. I now yield three minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CURTIN].

Mr. CURTIN. Mr. Speaker, as to the legislation proposed it is not of the slightest consequence where the trade-dollar is held, whether it is in the hands of the masses of the people or in the hands of speculators, or brokers, or money shavers. It is of no consequence whatever where it is. That is not the question presented here. If one man held it all it would be of no consequence to us. It is a mere question whether this Government can afford to impose upon the people of the country with the stamp of the Government a dollar which is not a dollar.

Mr. Speaker, the code of morality which would apply to an individual and not to a nation is a fraud and a delusion. The morality which governs the individual or the community should govern also the nation; and in all that has been elicited in the course of this discussion there is a patent fact arising above all, that our Government did give to the people a spurious coin, and that the people of this country in their faith in the Government accepted it, and that that coin was changed by subsequent legislation.

Now for the individual who held the coin it is one thing, but for this Government in its faith, and the faith of the people in the Government, is quite another thing.

I remember, Mr. Speaker, when the people of this country accepted the greenback because it had upon it the stamp of the Government of the United States. But still, when this Government was in the throes of agony that money was issued; and never let the time come when this great people, through their representatives in Congress, shall, after giving to the country the stamp of the Government upon paper, or upon silver, say that it does not equal what it professes to be. That trade-dollar should be redeemed to save the honor of this great country, and preserve the confidence of the people in the faith and integrity of the Government. [Applause.]

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. SCOTT. I now yield three minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL].

Mr. RANDALL withholds his remarks for revision. [See Appendix.]

Mr. SCOTT. I now yield two minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MORRISON].

Mr. MORRISON. I am opposed to the passage of this bill, but not for the same reasons that it is opposed by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. LANHAM], the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND], and others who object to its being made law in its present form. They favor the redemption of the trade-dollar at par, or dollar for dollar with other silver dollars, but upon such terms as to recoinage that the silver coinage now provided for shall be increased monthly to the extent of the trade-dollars to be redeemed and recoined. The bill as reported from the committee by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SCOTT] provides for the redemption or payment of the trade-dollar without increasing the monthly or aggregate amount of silver coinage.

Both would redeem or pay off the trade-dollar by exchanging it, or by receiving it as other silver dollars are received for taxes. I would do neither as to the larger part, much more than one-half of the trade-dollars coined. Whatever our obligations may be as to so much of the trade-dollar coin as was coined while it had the legal-tender quality and was lawful money, we are under no obligation, legal, equitable, or moral, to redeem at par or pay off that part which was coined after the legal-tender character had been taken away from it.

The whole number of trade-dollars coined is 35,995,924, nearly $36,000,000, beginning in 1873. Of this number an amount something more than 15,000,000 were coined in the years 1873, 1874, 1875, and 1876, and were by law made legal tender. Something more than 20,000,000 were afterward coined when the legal-tender quality was denied them by law. These were issued as token-money at the request of the owners of silver bullion for their sole interest and profit free of charge for coinage. They were issued for their accommodation for use in China. They were not intended for use here. The Government denied to them the legal-tender quality, and made no promise in regard to their redemption or otherwise.

In the argument it is said that most of these dollars were exported and are yet abroad. However that may be, this bill will bring them all back again, and instead of redeeming from five to seven millions, as we are told in argument here, we will be compelled to redeem from twenty to thirty millions, most of which, as I have already said, we are under no obligations to pay, and therefore have no right to pay. These dollars, or the 20,000,000 coined since 1876, so far as they are now held by our people, were taken by them, some at one and some at another price or value. Those held abroad have none but bullion value abroad; they will be brought here by foreign owners or imported by speculators and spoilsmen, who will take to themselves millions of speculative profit which this bill will take from the people's Treasury.

We are told that only five, six, or at most seven millions of these dollars will be redeemed under this law. Should the fact turn out to be, as I believe it may, that three or four times this amount will need to be redeemed, the amount wrongfully taken from our people will be at least equal to the whole number of dollars which the friends of this bill say will be presented for redemption or payment. The Government should take at par all issued and made legal tender and pay for the remainder at the highest bullion price of the year when they were coined, which is much above the present price. In that way we might rid ourselves of this vexed question and do full justice to the holders without inflicting upon those we here act for the grievous wrong which this bill will do them.

In what I have now said I but repeat the substance of some remarks on this subject which I submitted when discussing the Treasury surplus at the last session, and will add the official statement of the Director of the Mint, showing the facts as to the issue of this coin or trade-dollar.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SOWDEN] made an inquiry of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL] in which he asked if the people did not give value received for these trade-dollars, and the gentleman from Virginia replied that the Government did not receive anything for them at all; that they simply coined them. The gentleman from Virginia was correct in his answer. But under the Constitution of our country, Congress may authorize the Government to coin and stamp the value of the coins issued by the Government mints. Every trade-dollar that is now in circulation is stamped as a dollar, and has the impress of the mints of the country upon it as a dollar. If this bill becomes a law it does not take one cent out of your Treasury, but, on the contrary, it puts money into your Treasury.

When you come to talk about the equity of the redemption of these dollars because perhaps a few thousands of them or a few millions of them have gotten into the hands of speculators, you might with as much propriety go back to the period of our civil war, when the Government was selling bonds to speculators, and realizing from sixty to eighty cents of their face value on the dollar for them, and now take the position that those men who bought those bonds at sixty or eighty cents on the dollar ought not to be paid anything more than what the Government realized for them.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Will the gentleman permit me a question?

Mr. SCOTT. Yes, sir.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Did not the Government in those bonds promise to redeem them, and to redeem them in coin; and did it not promise to pay the interest in coin?

Mr. SCOTT. Now, sir, the Government bond bore on its face the assurance that the Government would pay it; and if no legal obligation rested upon us in this matter as a people, is there not an unwritten law and a moral obligation which requires that when the trade-dollar was stamped and issued as a dollar the faith of the Government was behind it; that it should be received by the Government as a dollar, or at least that it should be put on an equality with a coin which subsequently, under the act of 1878, was authorized and contained 7½ grains less silver, and was stamped and made a legal tender of the value of one dollar?

Mr. BURROWS. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. SCOTT. Yes, sir.

Mr. BURROWS. Did the Government ever pay out any of these trade-dollars after the legal-tender quality was taken away?

Mr. SCOTT. Unquestionably the Government received them through its internal-revenue department while they were a legal tender, and paid them out.

Mr. BURROWS. After that date?

Mr. SCOTT. What date?

Mr. BURROWS. After the repeal of the legal-tender clause?

Mr. SCOTT. I can not say as to that.

Mr. HALL. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. SCOTT. Certainly.

Mr. HALL. Do you hold if in any great contingency it became the policy of this Government to demonetize gold the Government would be under any obligation to pay the holders the depreciation which would follow?

Mr. SCOTT. I cannot be taken off the line of my remarks by such questions, as I have only a few minutes.

The simple question here in dispute is, what disposition shall be made of these dollars after they are redeemed if this bill becomes a law. If it is the pleasure of this House to adopt the amendments which have been offered to it, I shall make no factious opposition. But, sir, the great cry is that the people want more money. There are lying idle in your Treasury vaults to-day, or there were lying idle there on the 20th day of January last, $76,000,000 of standard dollars over and above your outstanding silver certificates. The amendment of the gentleman from Texas again puts a legal-tender value on these dollars and permits them to go into circulation. It is true that after they have once come into the Treasury the law compels their recoinage. But it is not good policy in my judgment for us, when we can require the holders of these dollars at their own expense to surrender them at the treasuries of the United States and there take standard silver dollars for them, to accept any amendment here that can put them into circulation in conflict with our standard dollars.

Another proposition involved in the gentleman's amendment is that they may be used for subsidiary purposes. We have to-day seventy-five millions of subsidiary coin and if the law is as I read it, it is twenty-five millions in excess of the amount authorized. There are to-day twenty-two millions of subsidiary coin lying idle in your Treasury vaults. There were last year thirty-two millions.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. How much gold is there? And how much debt could be paid to-morrow?

Mr. SCOTT. Now under this act, if it becomes a law, there will immediately be put into circulation standard dollars to the amount of the trade-dollars redeemed, and if the people want these standard dollars, if that is what they are crying for, there are $7,500,000 more put into circulation. If the trade-dollars redeemed are applied to the bullion fund, as this bill provides, it is saving taxation to the people of this country the equivalent of $7,500,000; which amount would otherwise be lying idle in your Treasury.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. The silver coins would buy the bullion. It does not require taxation to purchase the bullion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. SPRINGER). The time for general debate on this bill is exhausted. The first question is on the amendment reported from the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures.

Mr. BLAND. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BLAND. Is the previous question operating on the substitute and the bill both?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Upon the whole subject; and under the operation of the previous question the question is first on the amendment reported from the committee.

Mr. BLAND. How many amendments have been offered this morning?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The first amendment offered is that of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. LANHAM], reported from the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures. The next amendment is that of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WARNER], which is offered as an amendment to the substitute proposed by the gentleman from Texas. If the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WARNER] is adopted, then the question will be on agreeing to the substitute as amended. If the substitute is amended, the question will be on adopting that instead of the bill. Otherwise the question will be upon ordering the bill to be read a third time.

Mr. BLAND. I ask to have the amendments read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report first the first amendment reported from the committee.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out in line 3, of section 1, the words "until July 1, 1887," and insert in lieu thereof, "for a period of six months from the passage of this act."

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will now report the amendment submitted by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. LANHAM], and then the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WARNER].

The Clerk read the amendment submitted by Mr. LANHAM, as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause, and insert: "That for a period of six months after the passage hereof United States trade-dollars, if not defaced, mutilated, or stamped, shall be received at their face value in payment of all dues to the United States, and shall not be again paid out or in any other manner issued.

SEC. 2. That the holder of any such trade-dollars, during the period aforesaid, on presentation of the same at the office of the Treasurer, or any assistant treasurer of the United States, if said coins be not defaced, mutilated, or stamped, may receive in exchange therefor a like amount and value, dollar for dollar, in standard silver dollars, or in subsidiary coins of the United States, at the option of the holder.

SEC. 3. That the trade-dollars received by, paid to, or deposited with, the Treasurer, or any assistant treasurer or national depositary of the United States, shall not be paid out or in any other manner issued, but, at the expense of the United States, shall be transmitted to the coinage mints and recoined into standard silver dollars or subsidiary coin, at the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury.

The Clerk read the amendment offered by Mr. WARNER, of Ohio, as follows:

Add after the foregoing amendment the following:

"Provided, That the recoinage of trade-dollars recoined under this act shall not be counted as part of the silver bullion required to be purchased and coined into standard dollars as required by the act of February 28, 1878."

Mr. LANHAM. That is the intention of my substitute any way, Mr. Speaker, but I accept the amendment.

Mr. WARNER. I think that would be the effect of the gentleman's substitute, but I want to make it certain.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The amendment of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WARNER] having been accepted, the amendment of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. LANHAM] will be considered as standing with that amendment added to it. The question, therefore, is upon agreeing to the amendment of the gentleman from Texas proposed as a substitute for the bill.

The question was taken; and there were—ayes 127, noes 99.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to a third reading.

Mr. DANIEL. Mr. Speaker, I move to recommit the bill to the committee from which it came, with instructions to report the substitute which I send to the desk.

The substitute proposed by Mr. DANIEL was read, as follows:

SECTION 1. That all trade-dollars issued by the United States under the act of February 12, 1873, and prior to January 1, 1877, shall hereafter, and for a period of one year from the passage of this act, be a legal tender at their nominal value not exceeding $5 in any one payment, and shall be receivable in any amount for all taxes, imposts, or other dues to the United States. Whenever any such trade-dollars as before mentioned shall be received at the Treasury of the United States they shall not be reissued for any purpose whatever.

SEC. 2. That the holder of any such trade-dollars as before mentioned during the period aforesaid on presentation of the same at the office of the Treasurer or any assistant treasurer of the United States, if said coins be not defaced, mutilated, or stamped, may receive in exchange therefor a like amount and value, dollar for dollar, in standard silver dollars, or in subsidiary coins of the United States, at the option of the holder.

SEC. 3. That all such trade-dollars received by, paid to, or deposited with the Treasurer or any assistant treasurer or national depository of the United States shall not be paid or in any other manner issued, but at the expense of the United States shall be transmitted to the coinage mints and recoined into standard silver dollars or subsidiary coin, at the discretion of the Treasurer of the United States.

SEC. 4. This foregoing provision of this act shall not apply to any trade-dollars save those issued prior to January 1, 1877.

SEC. 5. It shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to purchase when presented at the Treasury all the trade-dollars issued on or after January 1, 1877, and to cause them when so purchased to be recoined into standard silver dollars of 412½ grains: Provided, That he shall not pay for such trade-dollars a price exceeding 2 per cent. of their value as silver bullion; And further provided, That the purchases of trade-dollars so made shall not be counted as any part of the annual purchases of silver made under existing laws.

Mr. SCOTT. I demand the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The question was taken on the motion of Mr. DANIEL to recommit with instructions, and it was declared rejected.

Mr. DANIEL called for a division, but withdrew the call before the count was completed.

The bill as amended was then read the third time, and passed—ayes 174, noes 36.

Mr. SCOTT moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BELMONT. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering general appropriation bills.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. On that I raise the question of consideration.

Mr. DINGLEY. I demand the regular order.

Mr. JAMES. I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures may be permitted to bring up two measures which will not occupy, I think, five minutes each to pass. The first relates to the minor coinage, the second to the subsidiary coinage. Their passage is asked for by the Director of the Mint and the Secretary of the Treasury. They simply change the Revised Statutes in several small particulars. They can be explained in a few moments, and the committee is a unit in regard to them.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. SPRINGER). The gentleman from New York [Mr. JAMES] asks unanimous consent that the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures may be permitted to call up the two bills he has indicated for present consideration. Is there objection?

Mr. BELMONT. I find it incumbent on me to insist on my motion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection is made.

Mr. WILLIS. I have a privileged motion. I send to the desk a proposition to change the rules, which I ask may lie over one day.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is not in order at this time, as the Chair understands, to make a motion to change the rules.

Mr. WILLIS. I am not making a motion, but simply——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The rule provides that propositions for this purpose may be introduced on Monday when the States are called, and referred to the Committee on Rules. The Chair does not understand that the rules allow a proposition of this kind to be introduced at this time.

Mr. WILLIS. The Chair will find that it is in order to give notice of a change of the rules——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman can ask unanimous consent for the purpose.

Mr. WILLIS. I am not asking any unanimous consent, but as a matter of privilege I propose to introduce a notice of a change of the rules.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair does not understand that there is any rule of the House providing for such a privilege.

Mr. WILLIS. Then I withdraw the proposition until the regular Speaker is in the chair.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York [Mr. BELMONT] moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering appropriation bills.

Mr. WEAVER, of Nebraska. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

Many MEMBERS. Regular order!

Mr. HAMMOND. I desire to inquire what has become of the morning hour. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will enforce the regular order.

Mr. BELMONT. Mr. Speaker, would it be in order now to move to dispense with the morning hour? If so, I make that motion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York moves that the morning hour for reports of committees be dispensed with.

Mr. WEAVER, of Nebraska. I hope that will not be done.

Mr. DINGLEY. Let us have reports from committees.

Mr. WEAVER, of Nebraska. I wish to inquire whether the regular order is not the call of committees for reports.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is; but the gentleman from New York [Mr. BELMONT] moves to dispense with that order.

The question being taken, there were—ayes 102, noes 87.

So (two-thirds not voting in favor thereof) the motion of Mr. BELMONT, to dispense with the morning hour for the reception of reports from committees, was not agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The business first in order is the call of committees for reports.

CONSTITUTIONAL CENTENNIAL COMMISSION.

Mr. CULBERSON, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported back as a substitute for House bill No. 10753, a bill (H. Mr. CULBERSON. I ask that the original bill for which this is reported as a substitute be laid on the table.

Mr. RANDALL. I object to that.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. At the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL], the original bill will be referred with the substitute to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BELMONT. I now renew my motion that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the further consideration of general appropriation bills.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. I wish to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. What about the consideration hour?

Mr. BELMONT. I will ask if my motion is not in order?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state, in answer to the gentleman from Iowa, that the regular order would be the consideration of business in the hour; but it is in order to move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole to consider general appropriation or revenue bills.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. It will not take over ten minutes to dispose of the bill which was under consideration in the last hour, the opposition having been withdrawn; and I hope the gentleman from New York will not insist on his motion now.

Mr. BELMONT. I am compelled to insist upon it.

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 82, noes 58.

Mr. REED. No quorum.

Mr. PAYSON. There ought to be a quorum on this vote.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The point of order being made that no quorum has voted, the Chair will order tellers.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa, and Mr. BELMONT were appointed tellers.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported 104, noes 60.

So the motion was agreed to.

MOTION TO RECONSIDER.

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from New York yields to me for a moment to enter a privileged motion.

I desire to move now to reconsider the vote by which the bill (H. R. 9930) conferring jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims and Supreme Court of the United States to finally determine the case of Charles E. Creecy, assignee in Congressional case No. 71, reported to the House of Representatives by said Court of Claims under the provisions of the act of Congress approved March 3, 1883, was rejected.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The motion will be considered as pending.

DIPLOMATIC AND CONSULAR APPROPRIATION BILL.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, Mr. BLOUNT in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole, and ten minutes of the time remain for general debate.

Mr. BELMONT. I reserve that time, and ask for the reading of the bill by sections.

The Clerk read as follows:

SCHEDULE A.—SALARIES OF MINISTERS.

Envoys extraordinary and ministers plenipotentiary to France, Germany, China, Great Britain, and Russia, at $17,500 each, $87,500.

Mr. BURNES. I rise to make a point of order against a portion of that paragraph of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BELMONT. Has not that section been passed over?

The CHAIRMAN. It had been read, and the Clerk had begun to read the next paragraph; but there was a great deal of confusion in the Hall, and the Chair hardly thinks the gentleman from Missouri should be thereby prevented from interposing the point of order.

Mr. BELMONT. I will not insist upon the point.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. BURNES. I am not aware of any law authorizing this increase in the salary of the minister to China. I believe it is in conflict with the third section of the twenty-first rule, which I cite in support of the point of order; and I also refer the Chair, so far as this item is concerned, to the Supplement to the Revised Statutes, page 400, where it will be found in a permanent law, that the salary of the minister to China is provided for and made $12,000 per annum.

Mr. BELMONT. Mr. Chairman, whatever may be the result of the discussion on the point of order, I suppose it would be useless for me to ask the gentleman to withdraw the point he makes, although the House is already informed that the interests of the United States are concerned in the recommendation which the Committee on Foreign Affairs has made to increase the salary of the minister to China.

There are obvious reasons of public policy, as well as of international courtesy, why this change should be made. The United States in its diplomatic relations with Eastern nations stands in a different relation from any other great power. We have no military or colonial policy to pursue within their borders. All the other great powers have. This gives to our representatives in those countries an influence which is yearly increasing, which is nowhere so plainly apparent as in China, and which it is greatly to the interest of the United States to encourage and develop.

The United States holds a power in the East which should be efficiently represented. To-day we have, perhaps, the best minister we have ever sent to China. We ask for him, and for the sake of the interests of this country in China, that this mission shall receive a salary at least equal to that of our minister to Russia or to Germany, where our interests are not more important.

But, sir, as to the point of order. I would refer the Chair to the original Rule 63, and the history of the various steps by which that rule has been extended, as well as to the debate which occurred with reference to it, where the Speaker of the House declared on the 17th of January, 1876, that the extension of the rule was for the purpose of increasing salaries.

The original rule, No. 63, read as follows:

63. No appropriation shall be reported in such general appropriation bills, or be in order as an amendment thereto, for any expenditure not previously authorized by law. (House Journal, Twenty-sixth Congress, page 266.)

On the 13th of March, 1838 (Congressional Globe, volume 6, page 235), this rule was amended by adding the following words:

Unless in continuation of appropriations for such public works or objects as are already in progress, and for the contingencies for carrying on the several Departments of the Government.

On the 17th January, 1876, in a debate on the construction of this rule, the Speaker directed the construction which had been placed upon it to be read by the Clerk, as follows (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, volume 13, page 445):

It has been decided that under the rule it is not in order to propose an amendment to a general appropriation bill which changes an existing law. But it was also decided that the latter branch of the rule not only permitted amendments increasing salaries, but was framed for that very purpose.

The history of the present rule, which if interpreted as the gentleman claims, it seems to me, would surrender to the Senate the regulation of all salaries in an appropriation bill, is well known to this House. As for myself, I voted for the change in the rule by which the distribution of appropriations was made to several committees. I so voted not because as a member of the Committee on Foreign Affairs I desired for that committee the disagreeable duty of preparing this bill.

There is no bill which comes before the House so unpopular as this. There is no bill which gives so pleasurable an opportunity to the demagogue, and there is no bill which can be so easily misrepresented. I desire to say on my own behalf and on behalf of the committee which has undertaken this work that we did so believing it to be our duty so to do.

Mr. STEELE. I rise to a question of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. STEELE. Is the gentleman from New York discussing the point of order or the merits of the bill?

Mr. BELMONT. What I am saying is on the point of order, because I think it is important to the House to establish what is the duty of the Committee on Foreign Affairs under the rule. The intention of the change in the rule by which this committee was charged with this particular duty was that it might report a bill that would be of some practical use to and effect upon the special service to which we are appropriating these amounts.

That we have a duty put upon us to report the estimates of the Department of State I can have no question, provided we do so under the rule. If the rule means that there shall be no regulation of amounts of salaries, it simply means that your committee should come in here with a resolution to reappropriate according to last year's appropriation bill. The Chair will find difficulty, it seems to me, in establishing what is existing law in regard to the diplomatic and consular service, because that service stands upon a different footing from any other under the Government. Before 1846 the appropriations were made in lump sums. It was only in 1856 that a regular reorganization was established by law. Then again, if, as was contended the other day, the rule adopted in the appropriation bill of 1879 is the rule to-day—if that be the law which binds us all the changes which have been made since then on appropriation bills are certainly not in accordance with the law.

The Committee of Foreign Affairs has simply followed the course hitherto taken by the Committee on Appropriations, only it has gone further in the same direction. It can hardly be expected that the gentleman from Missouri, who has served and is serving upon the Committee on Appropriations, should be satisfied with this bill. I doubt if it would be possible for a committee which under the new rule is charged with the preparation of a bill and which in the performance of its duty has incorporated certain changes not of law, but changes in the regulation of amounts of salaries—I do not think that a committee pursuing this course could by any possible means satisfy certain gentlemen on the Committee on Appropriations, from which this bill has been taken.

But as the gentleman from Missouri has referred the Chair to certain authorities for its decision I would also refer the Chair to the decision of the Supreme Court in the case of Mitchell against the United States—an appeal from the Court of Claims, 109 U. S. Reports, page 146, decided November 5, 1883. That decision, it seems to me, establishes the fact that appropriations are made for the current year only. There is only one case brought before the Court of Claims and decided according to another theory which has not been reversed by the Supreme Court, and that is the case of ex-Minister Langston, which was not appealed, or it would probably have suffered the same fate.

In every case of a claim of a diplomatic or consular officer because of the fact that Congress had not appropriated to the full amount of the appropriation of a previous year—in every such case after the decision of the Court of Claims had been in accordance with the theory of the gentleman from Missouri it has been reversed in the Supreme Court. Every one of these decisions which prove that an appropriation is the law so far as a salary is concerned during the continuance of the fiscal year for which the appropriation is made is a re-enforcement of the present position of the Committee on Foreign Affairs; and therefore a regulation by which the salary of the minister to China is put upon the same footing as the salaries of the ministers to London, Paris, Berlin, and St. Petersburg is in order.

Mr. COX, of North Carolina, withholds his remarks for revision. [See Appendix.]

Mr. BURNES. I beg to be indulged a moment while I assure my esteemed friend from New York [Mr. BELMONT] that I think there is no member of the Appropriations Committee who desires to interfere either with his bill or with his admirable management of his bill; but being in opposition to increase of salaries and increase of expenditures, and at the suggestion of other gentlemen who felt that some one must make these points of order, I have simply attempted to discharge the duty imposed on me. This, sir, is purely a question of law, and to that question I shall for a few moments, and a few moments only, strictly confine myself. I beg to read the third section of the rule alluded to:

No appropriation shall be reported in any general appropriation bill, or be in order as an amendment thereto, for any expenditure not previously authorized by law, unless in continuation of appropriation for such public works and objects as are already in progress; nor shall any provision changing existing law be in order in any general appropriation bill or in any amendment thereto.

The existing law I find in the act of January 27, 1879, which fixes the salary of the ministers to China, Japan, Mexico, Brazil, Austria, and Spain at $12,000 each. At the conclusion of that act I find the following:

That the salaries provided in this act for the offices within named, respectively, shall be in full for the annual salaries thereof from and after the 1st day of July, 1879; and all laws and parts of laws in conflict with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed.

This would seem to make a law establishing these salaries at $12,000. I will not detain you, sir, eminent in parliamentary law as I know you to be, by referring to the history of the one hundred and twentieth rule, which is now the third paragraph of our twenty-first rule. That history would carry us back to 1820 and to 1838, when the rule was amended. But there is a peculiar provision in connection with it to which I wish to call attention. The one hundred and twentieth rule is as follows:

No appropriation shall be reported in such general appropriation bill or be in order as an amendment thereto for any expenditure not previously authorized by law, unless in continuation of appropriations for such public works and objects as are already in progress, and for the contingencies for carrying on the several Departments of the Government.

That was the rule from 1838 to 1876, express authority being given to provide for the exigencies of the public service in the several departments of the Government. Prior to 1876 it had been held that salaries could be increased under the one hundred and twentieth rule, and very properly so held; but in the Forty-fourth Congress the rule was changed. It was changed, however, only in the concluding subdivision of the paragraph, not in the first portion of it. It was changed by striking out this provision expressly authorizing such legislation for the exigencies of the departments, and inserting in lieu of it the following:

Nor shall any provision in any such bill, or amendment thereto, changing existing law, be in order, except such as, being germane to the subject-matter of the bill, shall retrench expenditures.

That amendment, made in the Forty-fourth Congress, was followed by the rule which I read in the beginning of my remarks, but neither of them affected the first part of the paragraph. That has remained the same from 1820 down to the present moment; it is only the concluding portion that has been from time to time changed, and at no time has there been any pretense that under the first part of the paragraph a salary could be raised. Under Rule CXX salaries were raised, but it was done under the provision contained in the latter part of the paragraph.

Mr. BELMONT. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. BURNES. I would rather not at this moment; but if the gentleman desires, I will yield.

Mr. BELMONT. I understand the gentleman to mean that the test of the regularity, under the rule, of a provision in such a bill as this is whether or not it is in accordance with existing law, and I understand that the law upon which he would found an objection is the law of 1879.

Mr. BURNES. Undoubtedly; I rely upon the law of 1879 as the existing statute.

Mr. BELMONT. I shall not interrupt the gentleman further now, but I shall take occasion to express my dissent from that view, on account of the practice of the House since 1879, and also on account of the purpose of that law, which was to shut off claims which might be made, and which were made, for salaries which had not been provided for in appropriation bills. "In full" payment meant that the officer who received a salary under the law of 1879 should not be entitled to come into court with any further claim for an increase of salary.

But since that provision, quoted by the gentleman from Missouri, in the law of 1879, was passed, the rank and title of ten ministers, consuls-general, and consuls have been changed in appropriation bills. The salaries of eighteen diplomatic and consular officers have been increased a total of $33,000; one new secretary of legation has been created, at a cost of $1,800; twenty-four new consulates have been created, at a cost of $40,500.

On the other hand, salaries of only four diplomatic and consular officers have been reduced, a total of $4,000; and four consuls, provided by the act of 1879, have been abolished, at a total saving of $8,000.

The fact that the House has made so many changes since 1879—I have a detailed list of them here but it would take me too long at this time to enumerate them all—clearly shows, I think, that an increase of salary at this time is not different from what it was a year or two ago. If my friend relies simply upon the law of 1879, it seems to me he will not find as much fault with the committee as his remarks would have led me to believe.

Mr. BURNES. Mr. Chairman, I have indulged my friend from New York [Mr. BELMONT] with great pleasure; but I beg to answer his suggestions by a single observation. I am aware of no principle in law which justifies the conclusion that a statute is repealed by its violation. In the Forty-fourth Congress, the amendment then proposed being under consideration, many of the most eminent members of the House expressed themselves freely, fully, and clearly upon the proposition. I cite to you, sir, the thirteenth volume, page 455, of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. You will find there that Mr. Garfield, Mr. RANDALL—I speak historically of gentlemen who are now members of the House—Mr. HOLMAN, Mr. HOAR (the present Senator from Massachusetts), and other gentlemen of equal distinction, considered this proposition which had met the approbation of the eminent gentleman from New York [Mr. COX], who reported the amendment to the House.

Not a single one of those gentlemen failed to commit himself to the proposition that under the first portion of the paragraph under consideration there never had been and never could be a salary raised, but that under the concluding portion salaries had been and could be raised. Mr. HOAR, making it clearer perhaps than any of the rest, used the following decisive language, which was not disputed by any one:

Now if we strike out that sentence—

Meaning the concluding portion of Rule CXX as it existed with the amendment of 1838—

it is not in the power of the House to make any appropriation either originally reported or as an amendment to the contingencies for carrying on the several Departments of the Government, unless it is for an expenditure previously authorized by law.

Mr. Chairman, these eminent authorities are before you for your consideration. The rule has been read. The law, fixed and permanent, is before you. If a salary can be raised now on an appropriation bill there is no law to prohibit us from appropriating as we please, in violation of any statute and in violation of any rule of the House. I submit these remarks deferentially, and regret exceedingly that it has been made a part of my duty to occupy the unpleasant position, which I have not occupied before, of objecting to the legislations of a committee of this House.

The CHAIRMAN. This question has been so frequently before the House, and the ruling on the question has been so well settled that the Chair does not think it necessary to occupy time in stating the reasons for his decision. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. COWLES. I send to the desk an amendment which I desire to offer.

Mr. SPRINGER. In view of the decision just made by the Chair, the bill should be amended by striking out "China," in the twelfth line, and inserting it in the sixteenth line.

Mr. BELMONT. I was about to offer that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the amendment sent to the desk by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. COWLES].

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert after the word "assembled," in the second line, and before the word "that," in line 3, these words:

That the fees as under existing law allowed, tax collected, and paid, to all and each of the officers hereinafter named, shall be hereafter collected by each of said officers and by him reported to the Secretary of the Treasury, and paid into the Treasury of the United States; and——

Mr. HOLMAN rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Indiana raise a point of order on this?

Mr. HOLMAN. It will come in more properly at any rate in a subsequent portion of the bill. The first paragraph has been passed.

The CHAIRMAN. Unless some point of order be made, the Chair will submit the amendment.

Mr. SPRINGER. I make the point of order that it is new legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, has the first paragraph of the bill been passed?

The CHAIRMAN. It has.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I understood an amendment was pending to that paragraph.

Mr. HOLMAN. I object to going back.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. Why, I am playing your hand. I want to do some retrenchment. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. BELMONT], who desired to offer an amendment on behalf of the committee, is recognized.

Mr. BELMONT. I move to amend by striking out "China," in line 12, and inserting it in line 16.

The CHAIRMAN. The first part of the gentleman's motion is unnecessary, as the word "China" has been struck out in line 12, under the ruling of the Chair. The gentleman moves to insert that word in line 16.

Mr. BELMONT. It will be necessary to offer another amendment, because the footing of the paragraph should be reduced.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I do not want to lose my right to offer an amendment to the first paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from New York.

Mr. RANDALL. I ask for the reading of that amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 16, insert the word "China."

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I desire to move an amendment; in line 12 to strike out "$17,500" and insert in lieu thereof "$12,000."

The CHAIRMAN. If there is no objection the Chair will entertain the amendment.

Mr. CLEMENTS. That part of the bill has been passed, and the amendment is not in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The question then recurred on Mr. BELMONT'S amendment, and it was agreed to.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. Does the Chair rule my amendment out of order?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair so ruled.

Mr. BELMONT. I move that the total amount be corrected to agree with the amendments which have been adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. That will be done.

The Clerk read as follows:

Envoys extraordinary and ministers plenipotentiary to the Argentine Republic, Chili, Turkey, and Peru, at $10,000 each, $40,000.

Mr. BELMONT rose.

Mr. BURNES. The point of order is reserved on this section.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BURNES. My point of order is that the appropriation here increases the salary of the minister to the Argentine Republic from $7,500 a year to $10,000.

Mr. HOLMAN. And I raise an additional point of order.

Mr. BURNES. It also raises the salary of the minister to Turkey. The salary of that minister is provided for on page 38 of the supplement to the Revised Statutes at $7,500. It is here provided for at $10,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. BELMONT. It will be necessary to go back to line 17 and change the total.

Mr. RANDALL. The clerks will attend to that.

The CHAIRMAN. That has been already done.

Mr. HOLMAN. The clerks always make the necessary changes rendered necessary by the adoption of amendments or the ruling out of items.

Mr. BELMONT. That is all that is necessary then.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next paragraph.

Mr. BELMONT. I did not understand the amendment of the gentleman in regard to Turkey.

Mr. HOLMAN. The salary of the minister to Turkey was $7,500, but last year for the first time in our history the salary was increased to $10,000.

Mr. BELMONT. My friend is mistaken; the increase was not made last year.

Mr. HOLMAN. It was made in the Forty-eighth Congress.

Mr. BURNES. At the second session.

Mr. HOLMAN. At the last session of the Forty-eighth Congress for the first time this salary was increased to $10,000. It was a mere matter of appropriation, and not of law, fixing the salary at that amount.

Mr. BELMONT. It was not increased by the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Mr. RANDALL. The Committee on Appropriations appropriated $7,500; but they were overruled, and the salary fixed at $10,000.

Mr. BURNES. The motion was made to increase the salary from $7,500 to $10,000, but no gentleman in the House raised the point of order against it, as it was understood at the time the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] was to be appointed to that position.

Mr. BELMONT. It is simply a repetition in this bill of the sum appropriated last year. Of course, as the Chair has ruled in favor of the point of order, the committee will not desire to contest the ruling. I only wish to say that it is a repetition of former appropriations, and is not a new provision in this bill.

Mr. CLEMENTS. I desire to submit this proposition, that while the act of 1879 fixed these salaries, yet it is competent for this committee at this time to provide the sum it deems to be necessary for these ministers; in other words, that it is just as competent for this committee to move an amendment as it was competent for that committee to move an amendment to the existing law.

Mr. HOLMAN. There is no change in the law.

Mr. CLEMENTS. The point I present is this: By the appropriation bill in the Forty-eighth Congress, second session, this salary was raised to $10,000. That was a change as to that salary. In 1879 there was also a change of the law in reference to these salaries. It has been regarded as the practice of the House to change these items from year to year on appropriation bills. Is it not as competent for us to do it at this time as it was to make the changes to which I have referred?

Mr. HOLMAN. The question is so well understood I will not detain the Chair longer. But the gentleman is mistaken in reference to his understanding. The practice has always been that where a change has been made in the salary on an appropriation bill it is only regarded as the law for that year, but not as fixing the salary for the time to come. The act of 1879 fixed this salary at $7,500, and the appropriation here of $10,000 is an increase. The fact that last year $10,000 was appropriated does not change the law, which still fixes the salary at $7,500.

Mr. BRAGG. I would like to inquire of the gentleman from Indiana if the appropriation of $10,000 did not change the law so as to make the salary $10,000, how could the minister draw that pay? Again, did not the Comptroller decide that the minister was entitled to draw that pay; and is not that a declaration of fact that the law was changed in that respect? And can there be any such thing as a change of law for a year?

Mr. HOLMAN. Oh, yes.

Mr. BRAGG. Unless you specify that the other law shall be suspended for the time? If you make a new law, with a different provision in it, how are you going to say that the other law to which it applies is dead for a year and then is revived again?

Mr. BUCHANAN. It ceases to operate when the appropriation expires.

Mr. DUNHAM. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DUNHAM. I make the point of order that the Chair is to rule on the point of order raised. This debate is all out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to hear the statements of fact as bearing upon the point of order.

Mr. CANNON. May I ask the gentleman from Indiana a question?

Mr. HOLMAN. Certainly.

Mr. CANNON. I wish to ask the gentleman whether he does not think it a little cruel to make the point of order upon Turkey, when there are so many expecting to go there?

Mr. HOLMAN. Happily, there is no person there now to take offense; and whoever is appointed hereafter will know exactly what the salary is when he undertakes the duty.

Mr. BELMONT. I would like to ask the gentleman a question. Can there be a change of appropriation without a change of existing law, according to this theory?

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes, sir. That is to say, the appropriation applies for the current year; and if my friend will take the trouble to examine the case of the United States vs. Fisher, embodied in 109 United States Reports, he will find the whole subject carefully and fully presented. That was a case where in the Forty-fourth Congress the salary of the chief-justice of Wyoming Territory was reduced from $3,000, which was the sum fixed by the law, to $2,600; and every successive appropriation bill from that time to 1879 contained the usual provision, that the sum herein appropriated is to be received in full for the salary provided for in the bill.

That provision, however, was omitted from the appropriation bill for 1879. The chief-justice brought his action to recover $400 a year, being the difference between the salary fixed by the permanent law and that fixed in the appropriation bills for the years from 1876 or 1877 to 1879, and the supreme court had occasion to pass upon the subject, in which case the opinion is very instructive and interesting.

It is held there that an appropriation of money by act of Congress in such terms as indicates the purpose of Congress to fix the salary for the current year is final and conclusive; that for the time being—that is, for the fiscal year for which the appropriation is made—for the time being the salary fixed by the permanent law is suspended and that fixed by the appropriation bill is final, and that the party could recover from the Government only the sum named in the successive appropriation bills, that being the sum paid, of course. Hence there could be no recovery beyond that amount.

In that case the decision of the Court of Claims was overruled.

Mr. BRAGG. Let me ask the gentleman what language there is in the last appropriation bill that indicated to the House, or to the country, that you did not intend to pay anybody but Mr. COX the sum of $10,000?

Mr. HOLMAN. Happily in this appropriation bill, in a provision already passed and not subject to the point of order, the usual language is retained:

That the following sums be, and they are hereby, severally appropriated in full compensation for the diplomatic and consular service, &c.

So that in this instance there is no trouble as to the rule to be applied. The law as laid down by the Supreme Court is the language of the appropriation bill, and is the law for the current year, or for the time being; and is a declaration on the part of Congress, clear and distinct, that the amount is to be received in full compensation and not under the previous law; the effect being to suspend the previous law for the time covered by the bill.

Mr. OATES. Let me ask the gentleman a question. An appropriation bill is a law, and unless there is a limitation in the appropriation bill, would it cease to be a law where it had provided for a certain salary?

Mr. HOLMAN. Why, it is necessarily a limitation upon the salary for one year.

Mr. OATES. I know, for one year; but unless it so declares, that the salary shall be so much only for that year, would it not be a law still, so far as fixing the salary is concerned?

Mr. HOLMAN. No, sir; I think not. It can only operate during the current year, unless there is some legal provision, and under our rule it could not operate beyond the year. It would be subject to the point of order, because it would become permanent law. It is the law only for the current year, simply for the appropriation, and that is all.

The Supreme Court say in this decision, in reference to the effect of the statute reducing the amount of the appropriation for the salary below that fixed by the permanent law:

Not only do the words of the statute make the intention of Congress manifest, but that intention is plainly repugnant to the former statute, which fixes the salary of the Chief-Justice at $3,000. It is impossible that both acts should stand. No ingenuity can reconcile them.

That is to say the act fixing a salary at $2,600 and a statute fixing it permanently at $3,000, the former law is not repealed, but for the time being it is suspended.

Mr. OATES. That was an action where a different and smaller amount was appropriated.

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes, sir. The decision proceeds:

The later act must therefore prevail, and the earlier act must for the time covered by the appropriation acts above referred to be considered as suspended.

I am apprehensive the Chair did not in the confusion hear that vigorous language of the Supreme Court. I will repeat it:

The later act must therefore prevail, and the earlier act must for the time covered by the appropriation acts above referred to be considered as suspended.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will observe the former rulings by sustaining the point of order and holding the original act creating the salaries as not having been repealed by annual provisions in appropriation bills.

Mr. BELMONT. I move that the committee rise.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. SPRINGER having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. BLOUNT reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 10396) making appropriations for the diplomatic and consular service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and for other purposes, had come to no resolution thereon.

COURT-ROOMS AT JACKSON, MISS.

Mr. BARKSDALE. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of a matter which will not take five minutes. It involves no appropriation, and is purely a local matter. My request is that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union be discharged from the further consideration of the joint resolution (S. R. 51) authorizing and directing the Department of Justice to transfer certain rooms which have been occupied by the United States courts to the city of Jackson, Miss., and that the same be put upon its passage.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, &c., That the Department of Justice be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to transfer and relinquish to the city of Jackson, State of Mississippi, all the right, title, and claim of the United States to the rooms in what is described as the town-hall building in said city, which have been used for the United States courts and the officials thereof, under a deed executed on the 15th day of February, A. D. 1855, it having been a condition of the deed that the rooms were to be used exclusively for the purposes above specified, and the same having been entirely abandoned by the said courts and the officials thereof, a new building having been erected by the Government for the convenience and occupancy of said United States courts, and the Attorney-General having decided that the aforementioned rooms in the town hall could not be used by the Government, under said deed, for any other purposes than those specified in the grant.

Mr. BRAGG. I should like to know whether the facts set forth in the bill are sustained by proofs.

Mr. BARKSDALE. I will state that this resolution passed the Senate, after consideration, by a unanimous vote, having been unanimously reported by the committee of that body, and that it was unanimously reported by the committee of the House after a due consideration of all the facts upon the report of the Attorney-General; and I personally know that all the facts stated are correct.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope there will be some further explanation.

Mr. BARKSDALE. The bill explains itself; but the report is very short, and I ask that it be read. I am sure it will satisfy the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. HOLMAN. Let the report be read.

The report (by Mr. WADE) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the joint resolution (H. Res. 97) authorizing and directing the Department of Justice to transfer certain rooms which have been occupied by United States courts in the city of Jackson, Miss., to the said city, beg leave respectfully to report that they have duly considered the same, and recommend its passage.

On the 15th of February, 1856, the city of Jackson transferred to the United States Government certain apartments in what is known as the city hall building, for the sum of $20,000. The deed set forth that the Government was to use the rooms "exclusively" for the United States courts and the business appertaining thereto. They were used for that purpose until 1885, a period of twenty-nine years, and were then abandoned by the Government for the occupancy of a new court-house which had been erected under an act of Congress.

In a letter of October 24, 1885, to the Secretary of the Treasury, the Attorney-General states that the limitation prescribed in the deed deprives the Government of the right to use the rooms for any other purpose except the one expressly specified in the deed. In his annual report of December, 1885, the Attorney-General reiterates this opinion, and recommends that the Government make some disposition of its interest in the property. In an official letter of December 28, 1885, the Attorney-General states that the Government, by its long use of the rooms, had been reimbursed for the original outlay. They have been entirely vacant for more than twelve months. The new building affords accommodation not only for the courts, but for all the business of the Government in the city of Jackson.

In consideration of the condition of the sale expressed in the deed, and the abandonment of the apartments by the United States, the city has petitioned for the transfer of the rooms to its possession, as provided in the resolution above mentioned.

For these reasons your committee recommend the passage of the resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union be discharged from the further consideration of this joint resolution and that it be considered by the House?

Mr. STEELE. This property ought to be sold back to the city.

There being no objection, the joint resolution was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BARKSDALE moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MACKEREL CAUGHT IN SPAWNING SEASON.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I am instructed by the Committee on Ways and Means to report back the bill (H. R. 5538) relating to the importing and landing of mackerel caught during the spawning season, with amendments by the Senate. The committee recommend that the Senate amendments be non-concurred in and a conference asked. I make that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas, moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore appointed as conferees on the part of the House Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas, Mr. MAYBURY, and Mr. REED.

ISLAND IN FOX RIVER, ILL.

Mr. HOPKINS. I ask unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole House be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 10233) to convey to and confirm in the city of Aurora, in the county of Kane, and State of Illinois, a small island in Fox River, located within the limits of said city, and that the same be now considered.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the right, title, and ownership of the city of Aurora, in Kane County, State of Illinois, to the land hereinafter described are hereby confirmed, and all the right, title, and interest of the United States to said land are hereby granted and relinquished to said city of Aurora. Said land hereby granted is described as follows: Island in Fox River, lying and being in the northwest fractional quarter of section numbered 15, in township 38 north, of range 8 east of the third principal meridian, bounded and described as follows, to wit: Beginning at a stone set in the ground at the northwest corner of the northeast fractional quarter of said section 15; thence west, on the north line of said section, 5 chains and 80 links, to a point on the east bank of Fox River; thence south 15 degrees and 15 minutes west, 3 chains and 20 links across the east branch of Fox River to a point on the north end of island and place of beginning; thence south 24 degrees and 15 minutes east, 4 chains and 88 links; thence south 18 degrees and 30 minutes east, 5 chains and 45 links; thence south 12 degrees and 30 minutes east, 1 chain and 44 links; thence south 1 degree and 30 minutes east, 2 chains and 51 links; thence south 15 degrees and 30 minutes west, 92 links; thence north 36 degrees and 45 minutes west, 3 chains and 48 links; thence north 67 degrees and 45 minutes west 1 chain and 32 links; thence north 32 degrees and 30 minutes west, 3 chains and 68 links; thence north 20 degrees and 45 minutes west, 5 chains and 50 links; thence north 12 degrees and 15 minutes east, 2 chains and 40 links; thence north 64 degrees and 30 minutes east, 1 chain and 36 links; thence south 87 degrees and 30 minutes east, 1 chain and 53 links to place of beginning, containing, in all of above description, 5 $\frac{7}{100}$ acres of land; variation 5 degrees east.

SEC. 2. That upon the approval of this act the Commissioner of the General Land Office shall issue a patent for said land to said city of Aurora, and said patent shall inure to said city of Aurora and its successor forever.

Mr. McMILLIN. Let us hear some explanation with reference to this matter.

Mr. HOPKINS. This is an island in the Fox River, within the limits of the city, and containing only five acres of land. It is low, and a part of the year is covered by water. The city in establishing its waterworks erected them on the side of the river, and has two reservoirs on this island and has used the island for that purpose. A year or more ago an enterprising party undertook to get the title of that island away from the city. The Land Department refused to interfere with the city's rights. But because of the importance of the island on account of these reservoirs the citizens of Aurora desired this bill to be passed in order to settle the title.

Mr. McMILLIN. How did the city acquire the title?

Mr. HOPKINS. The city owns the land on the bank of the river, and in consequence claims title to the island. It is not worth a dollar any how.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

Mr. HOPKINS moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HERBERT. I give notice that immediately after the House shall have disposed of the consular and diplomatic appropriation bill I shall ask it to consider the naval appropriation bill.

Mr. RANDALL. Is not the legislative bill ahead of that?

Mr. McADOO. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; there being—ayes 34, noes 25.

And accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 5 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

SENATE.

MONDAY, February 14, 1887.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday last was read and approved.

ALBERT H. EMERY.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 929) for the relief of Albert H. Emery, which was in line 11, after the words "sum of," to strike out "$200,000" and insert "$63,161.62, which shall be in full of all claims against the Government on the part of said Emery for this invention;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Albert H. Emery, of Stamford, Conn., in full settlement of all claims, legal or equitable, which he has in any way against the United States on account of the cost of, and the time spent by him, and use of all patterns and inventions in designing and constructing the testing-machine built and erected by him for the United States, or otherwise, in any way, on account of said machine, the sum of $63,161.62, which shall be in full of all claims against the Government on the part of said Emery for this invention, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, which sum is hereby appropriated and made immediately available therefor. Said machine, together with the full right to the use therein of all patents and inventions used in its design and construction, shall belong to the United States.

Mr. HOAR. I move that the Senate non-concur in the amendment of the House of Representatives, and request a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate, and Mr. HOAR, Mr. HAWLEY, and Mr. BUTLER were appointed.

ALLEGED OUTRAGES IN TEXAS.

Mr. COKE. I hold in my hand a memorial to the two Houses of Congress, signed by a large number of citizens of Washington County, Texas, praying that the investigation of the charges made in the memorial recently presented by one Hackworth and others against the civil authorities and the people of that county be carried on at Brenham, in Washington County, that being the place where all the papers, records, books, and witnesses can be found, and where a more thorough investigation can be had than elsewhere.

This memorial meets seriatim the charges preferred in the Hackworth memorial. The Hackworth memorial was read at length and spread upon the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, and I ask that this memorial, with its exhibits, may also be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, so that it may go to the country with the other. It is a lengthy paper, and I do not ask that it be read; but I do ask that it be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, and be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, to be considered in the investigation now being made under the Hackworth memorial.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Texas presents a memorial, and asks that it be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. TELLER. I did not hear what the Senator said. Is it a resolution of the State Legislature?

Mr. COKE. It is a memorial by the citizens of Washington County, Texas, in answer to the memorial preferred here by one Hackworth and two others, some ten or twelve days ago, which is now being investigated by the Committee on Privileges and Elections. This memorial asks that the investigation be had in Washington County, Texas, as a point where the investigation can be more thorough and complete.

I do not ask that the memorial be read with its exhibits, because it is lengthy; but I do ask that it be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, and referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. INGALLS. Was the original memorial printed in the RECORD?

Mr. COKE. Yes, sir; it was printed at length.

Mr. TELLER. I do not object to the request of the Senator from Texas.

Mr. CULLOM. Is it proposed to print the memorial and all the other papers connected with it? It looks to be a very lengthy document.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the request of the Senator from Texas will be granted.

Mr. INGALLS. I want to know before it goes in whether it contains evidence and affidavits. Anything in the nature of a memorial of course should be printed; but if it is accompanied by a vast amount of ex parte evidence I object to it.

Mr. ALLISON. Let it be read.

Mr. INGALLS. Let it be read, if necessary. I shall object to the printing of a great mass of ex parte testimony bearing upon the subject.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair did not understand the order to include the exhibits.

Mr. INGALLS. If it is only to print the memorial, I have no objection.

Mr. COKE. It contains a number of affidavits and exhibits attached.

Mr. INGALLS. I object to its being printed without being first examined.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair did not understand the request of the Senator from Texas as going beyond the printing of the memorial.

Mr. COKE. I shall not ask to have the exhibits printed.

Mr. INGALLS. Very well.

Mr. COKE. I simply ask to have the memorial printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That order will be made.

Mr. TELLER. There is a great list of names here, and it seems to me it is hardly worth while to publish them.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The names of petitioners are not published in the RECORD under the rule.

Mr. COKE. They are not published under the rule.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The memorial and accompanying papers will be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, and the memorial without the accompanying exhibits will be printed in the RECORD.

The memorial is as follows:

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America:

At a meeting of citizens of Washington County, Texas, held in the city of Brenham on the 8th day of February, 1887, which meeting was composed of both Republicans and Democrats, the following memorial to your honorable bodies touching the petition of S. A. Hackworth, J. L. Moore, and Carl Schutze, which has lately been referred to the Senate Committee on Privileges and Elections for investigation, was unanimously adopted.

Inasmuch as the Senate has assumed jurisdiction to inquire into the administration of the local affairs of Washington County, Texas, we respectfully request that the committee having charge of said matter be sent to this county, where a full investigation can be had by an examination of all the witnesses, and an inspection of the county records.

The civil authorities of Washington County and its citizens generally are charged with the commission of grave offenses against the penal laws, including murder, election frauds, and other crimes.

Confident that a fair investigation will result in a triumphant vindication of the good name of this county and its civil authorities, and feeling assured that your honorable bodies will not be made the instruments of fastening upon innocent parties the foul aspersions brought against them by disappointed and desperate political adventurers, without a fair opportunity to be heard in their just defense, we submit the following counter-memorial, which we pray may be considered in connection with that of said Hackworth, Moore, and Schutze.

Upon analysis the petition of said parties will be found to consist, for the most part, of vague general charges against parties neither named nor identified, and without specification of times, places, or circumstances, such as to fairly entitle it to consideration at the hands of an intelligent body, or to require the parties supposed to be assailed to answer; but your memorialists earnestly hope and believe that more will not be required of them than to declare, as they do, that such general charges are wholly destitute of truth.

It is not true that there was any conspiracy to hang the negroes, usurp the offices, or to banish citizens from the county.

The remainder of the petition is devoted to: First, alleged personal grievances of the petitioners themselves; second, to alleged offenses against other persons on account of their political sentiments and affiliations; third, to alleged offenses in connection with the election of November 2, 1886; and fourth, to the alleged refusal of the local civil authorities to protect the lives and property of petitioners and others, and their alleged complicity in the crimes and offenses of their party associates. The purpose of this memorial will be to meet these issues.

The matters of personal grievances complained of by said petitioners are, many of them, untrue, and others are grossly exaggerated, and so far as they have any foundation in fact are the direct and legitimate result of the odium in which the parties are held, not because of their political sentiments, but because of their own personal misconduct as individuals.

It is not true that the petitioners are now refugees from their homes on account of political persecutions, as alleged by them.

There has been, for a long time, a strong feeling on the part of the good and law-abiding citizens of Washington County against the petitioners on account of their corrupt political methods, their dishonest administration of the affairs of the county, and their incendiary appeals to race prejudice in order to array the colored voters against the white.

For many years the tax-payers of this county have been plundered by these men and others who have been elected to office by the vote of ignorant colored men.

The petitioner, S. A. Hackworth, was for several years a justice of the peace in said county, and presiding member of the police court, which had the management of the county affairs. This court made improvident and extortionate contracts for the erection of bridges and other works with one M. M. Hackworth, who was the father of said S. A. Hackworth, and perpetrated many other wrongs upon the tax-payers in the illegal and extravagant use and conversion of funds belonging to the county. Reference is made to the report of the grand jury at the February term, 1874, of the district court of Washington County, which is hereto attached and made a part of this memorial (A) to show that the father of Hackworth profited from his son's official position. Indictments were frequently returned against Hackworth, both in the State and Federal courts, but he has always escaped conviction. Certified copies of the records from the courts are attached, which show that these indictments were generally quashed, or dismissed (B).

R. A. Harvin and C. C. Leib, who were both elected, the one as tax-collector and the other as treasurer, on the Republican ticket by the efforts of the petitioners, made default in large sums of money. Both were indicted; the indictments against Harvin were quashed, but Leib was convicted after a change of venue, and is now serving a five years' term in the penitentiary.

Hackworth by vexations and petty prosecutions, extortion in fees, in taking money to suppress prosecutions, and in many other ways while justice of the peace; Schutze by corrupt administration of his office, and oppressive use thereof in prosecutions of petty offenses to extort fees; and Moore by his arbitrary manner and bitter canvasses rendered themselves odious and obnoxious personally to many people.

The good people of Washington County, growing tired of the continuous mismanagement of public affairs, united irrespective of parties, and at the election of 1884 the Republicans were defeated for the county offices by the combined vote of Republicans and Democrats voting a people's ticket. Many colored men voted the people's ticket. Hackworth, Moore, and Schutze conducted a most bitter and outrageous canvass for the county offices in 1886; while Schutze alone was a candidate, Moore and Hackworth, as it is charged, were promised positions as deputies. Schutze made vile and infamous attacks on good citizens through his newspaper, and Hackworth, Moore and other leaders sought to array the negroes against the whites by appealing to caste prejudice and denouncing the white men supporting the people's ticket for denying them social equality. Appeals were made with the bitterness of despair.

Moore had more than ten years previously failed in business as a merchant, at which time he was a Democrat; he entered the Republican party for office, was employed as deputy county clerk, was elected district clerk in 1876, and was sheriff in 1882 and 1883. In 1884 he was defeated, and when the fall of 1886 came on he was without employment, destitute of means, and badly in debt. He had made an improvident purchase of a homestead and was utterly unable to pay a balance of purchase-money thereon.

It is not true, as alleged by him, that he "owned real and personal property in said city of Brenham to the value of $6,000; was comfortably situated, and earning a comfortable living for his family."

He sold his homestead for its full value and removed to Los Angeles, Cal.

Hackworth has been a political agitator and leader of the negroes ever since about 1869; not for their elevation and good, but for his own private ends.

He has always sought to array them against the whites, and held office until he became so offensive personally that he was defeated and his own party dared not put him up again; he has since been an office broker rather than a dealer in real estate. He is now and always has been insolvent. It is not true that he "owned real and personal property in said city of Brenham to the value of $4,000; was comfortably situated, the income from his business securing an assured support for himself and family." The affidavit of the widow of his brother, John M. Hackworth (C), who was postmaster at Brenham, which is attached hereto, will show that he not only lived upon his brother but seeks to defraud his brother's widow.

Schutze, it is believed, came to Brenham about 1871, as alleged by him. We are informed that he was the keeper of a restaurant in the city of Austin before he came to Brenham. He was there arrested under the charge of swindling, and after several weeks of imprisonment was released after being made to disgorge.

He was elected county attorney of Washington County on the Republican ticket, and was a candidate for re-election, but had become so offensive that he was defeated by his Democratic opponent in 1880.

He became so obnoxious to the colored citizens of the county for his corrupt and oppressive use of his office that his Democratic opponent defeated him in precincts where a large majority of the voters were colored. He is insolvent and worthless. His newspaper, the Staats Zietung, had a precarious existence and was mortgaged for all that it was worth. His habits are low and dissolute. He is a moral leper. It may be true that he left Brenham as alleged by him; but it is denied that he was compelled to leave, and that there was any attack upon him as he was leaving. He was in Brenham long after the election, and on several occasions used insulting language against good citizens who had opposed him during the campaign. He was in Brenham on the day that his petition to Congress was published here.

Certificates of the tax collector of Washington County, attached hereto, show how these parties appeared upon the tax rolls. (D, E, F.)

It will thus be seen that these men were personally odious and offensive, and if they received the indignities which they allege they received, which is denied, it was due to their personal characters, and not to the fact that they were Republicans.

II.

It is not true, as stated or implied in said petition, that the hanging of the parties named therein was done on account of the political affiliation of said parties or "to prevent Republicans from securing their political rights and privileges in said county."

At Flewellen's Store, an election precinct in the Washington justices' precinct, on the night of the election, as the count of the vote was progressing, M. D. Bolton, a white man, about twenty-eight years of age, married, son of the People's candidate for county commissioner in that precinct, was shot down and killed by a colored man named Polk Hill, as he was entering the door of the room. A certified copy of the evidence taken at the coroner's inquest, which is attached hereto (G), will show that Bolton was not disguised, as charged, and while one witness says he had a pistol in his hand, others stated that he was unarmed and came in a quiet manner. No one accompanied Bolton; he lived near by. Every one fled from the scene of murder except one person, who, after Bolton expired (which was almost immediately), went for assistance. At the inquest the next day the ballots were noticed lying scattered on the floor.

The negroes Alfred Jones, Shad Felder, and Stewart Jones, and five others, who were present with arms, were arrested and brought to Brenham and put in jail. Polk Hill, who did the shooting, escaped, but was afterward arrested. There was very great excitement throughout the county over the killing of Bolton, and especially in the Washington precinct, where he lived. It was ascertained that Alfred Jones and Shad Felder had, upon the advice of two white Republicans, gone through the neighborhood on the day of the election and raised an armed squad of negroes to guard the ballot-box, and that Stewart Jones was about to shoot at the other white men present, who were officers of the election, but was prevented.

The commissioner's court of Washington County fearing, on account of the excited condition of affairs arising from the killing of Bolton, that violence would be done to the negroes under arrest, ordered them to be taken to Houston, in Harris County, for safe-keeping, which was done. When Polk Hill was arrested he was taken for safe-keeping to Milam County, where he is now in jail.

After the arrest of the said Polk Hill and his incarceration in the Milam County jail, it was thought by the authorities that it would be safe to bring those in the said Harris County jail back. But soon after they were brought back Alfred Jones, Shad Felder, and Stewart Jones were taken from jail by a mob and hung. It is learned that the jailor, J. F. Estis, was induced to open the outer door, by a ruse (see his affidavit attached hereto, H). He was shoved behind the door, something thrown over his head, and guarded by two men. He recognized no one, but they were disguised, as mobs usually are.

That the prisoners were voluntarily surrendered is false. There is no ku-klux or other secret organization for the perpetration of political or other outrages in Washington County, or in the State of Texas, so far as we know or believe.

Bolton was alone, unarmed, and not disguised at the time he was killed. The killing was an atrocious murder, committed by an ignorant and brutal negro, who if not instigated was made the instrument by white men who were supporting the Republican ticket and were professed Republicans.

That a mob should have hung all the negroes who were present at the polls armed under the circumstances could not have been a great matter of surprise in any State in the Union. That the three negroes were hung to suppress their testimony, as charged, is not true; for the testimony taken at the inquest over Bolton shows that the only witness who testified that Bolton was armed was spared by the mob, although a prisoner in the jail at the time the others were taken out. All of these negroes had been offered bail by the civil authorities. They were told that their cases were bailable, and asked to procure it; but it is said that on the advice of their counsel they refused it.

III.

It is not true as stated in said petition that at the election held November 2, 1886, in Washington County, "a perfect reign of terror existed in said county, caused by armed bands of white ruffians who, by violence and by the destruction of ballot-boxes at Graball, Flewellen's, and Lott's Stores, election precincts, prevented the free and fair expression of suffrage by the citizens of said county, whereby men in whose interest these crimes were committed were declared elected who were not in fact elected, and by the most shameless and unblushing frauds the election was made a farce."

The election held in this county on November 2, 1886, was peaceable and quiet. There were two tickets in the field for county offices, the Republican and the People's ticket, the latter being composed of, and supported by, both Republicans and Democrats. It was an issue of good citizens of both parties on the one hand, who wanted an honest administration of county affairs, and political adventurers on the other, who were making strenuous efforts to recover the control of the county which they had lost two years before.

Interest in the race centered on the office of county judge, the most important office in the county. Lafayette Kirk was the People's candidate, and Carl Schutze, one of the petitioners, was the Republican candidate. Schutze was unpopular with the negroes, but great efforts were made on the part of Moore and Hackworth and other leaders to draw the color line for the negro support, and to attract as great a German vote for Schutze as possible on account of his nationality.

It is denied, however, that the return of the votes cast at all of these precincts would have changed the result as to a single office. Indeed such was the vote at Graball that it may be fairly presumed that the seizure of the box there was done in the interest of Schutze. He was defeated at that box by his Democratic opponent, A. G. Haynes, for county attorney in 1880. Judge Kirk, who was elected county judge in 1884, received 130 votes out of 345 votes cast then. And it appears from the poll-lists and tally-sheets of the election of 1886 that out of a total vote of 341 polled at this precinct 221 had been counted for county judge when the ballot-box was taken, of which Kirk had received 116 and Schutze had received 105.

Ross, the Democratic candidate for governor, had received 40 votes and Cochran, the Republican candidate for the same office, had received 184 votes. About 70 straight Democratic votes for governor were usually polled at this precinct, so the proportion was fair and indicated a majority for Kirk in this box of nearly 20 votes. It is hardly probable that the friends of Kirk, the People's candidate for county judge, would have sought to destroy the ballot-box when he had received a majority of the votes cast thereat, and at a precinct where Schutze was most unpopular among the colored voters.

IV.

It is denied that petitioners made application to the local civil authorities to protect their lives and property or the lives and property of others; and that there was any complicity whatever on the part of the local authorities in the alleged crimes and offenses of their party associates.

There will be found attached hereto the certificate of Hon. I. B. McFarland, (I) judge of the twenty-first judicial district, composed of the counties of Washington, Lee, and Burleson, and whose residence is at Brenham, that no application was made to him by either of the petitioners for protection. Judge McFarland is a Republican. There are also attached similar certificates from J. C. Muse, esq., district attorney, Lafayette Kirk, county judge, B. S. Rogers, county attorney, and N. E. Dever, sheriff. (J, K, L, and M.)

It is learned that a militia company was ordered from the town of Navasota, in Grimes County, to the Washington precinct on the occasion of an alarm a few days after the election, on application to the governor of this State, by a telegram sent in good faith by Mr. J. H. Roberts, a conservative and prudent citizen of that precinct. No such acts as are charged were committed by said State troops.

The election precincts—Graball, Lott's Store, and Flewellen's Store—are from 15 to 20 miles from the county seat at Brenham, and are situated in Washington justice precinct, the old town of Washington, on the Brazos River, giving name to the precinct. Navasota is across the river, in Grimes County, some 6 or 8 miles, and is on the Central Railroad. It is a river country, and has a large negro population; the negroes largely outnumber the whites. During the excitement following the killing of Bolton many rumors were current in the community, and although we believe there was no danger to be apprehended from the negroes, yet we also believe there was a genuine alarm, which caused an appeal from citizens in that community for aid. This was the cause of the militia company being ordered from Navasota, as we believe.

It is further denied that the citizens of the county in any manner terrorized the county, either alone or with said militia company.

A public meeting of the citizens of Washington County was held just after the killing of Bolton, and both by speakers and resolutions denounced and advised against mob violence.

It is not true that the petitioners have been compelled to leave their homes under serious threats of assassination and abandon their property or accept for it such prices as were proffered them.

The petitioner J. L. Moore was compelled to sell on account of the vender's lien on his homestead. He told Mr. A. F. Felder, the gentleman to whom he sold, that he had received no warning to leave, and that he left of his own accord. (See affidavit of A. F. Felder, attached, N.)

A day or two after the hanging of the negroes the petitioners Hackworth and Schutze approached a Democrat, Lewis R. Bryan, who was not, is not, and has never been, a member of the Democratic executive committee, and proposed to leave the county if any one would buy them out. Hackworth wanted for his homestead, the only property he had, $1,000 in cash, the purchaser to pay all taxes, amounting to about $150. The land had been sold for the taxes due thereon, as per statement hereto attached. Schutze desired that his purchaser should pay off the indebtedness on the paper and pay him about $300. A purchaser was found by Mr. Bryan for Hackworth's homestead, but no one could be found to buy out Schutze.

No member or members of the Democratic executive committee escorted Hackworth to the depot to prevent his being mobbed or murdered. No armed bands of ruffians collected in the city for the purpose of murdering him in case he should refuse to obey the demands of the Democratic executive committee, requiring him to leave the county. No such demand was ever made by the Democratic executive committee.

We deprecate and condemn lawlessness in whatever form it may appear; we offer no justification for it; but we deny that the petitioners were compelled to leave this county by any person whomsoever, although it would be unjust to hold a party or any great body of citizens responsible for the acts of a few individuals. How utterly unreliable the testimony of such men must be. That law-abiding citizens, of whatever race, color, or politics, are as safe in this county as anywhere in the United States is a fact that no fair-minded man will question upon a full and fair investigation.

Our citizens feel the gravity of the charge against them, not because of the authors, but because of the dignity that has been lent to them by the United States Senate.

We do not believe that a full investigation of the charges can be had in Washington city, and we earnestly ask (in our right as citizens of the United States) that your committee visit our county, where persons and papers can be easily had the importance of which may only occur pending examination of witnesses.

Respectfully submitted.

BRENHAM, February 8, 1887.

SIR: Your committee on memorial respectfully beg to submit herewith a draught of such memorial.

WILLIAM THOMPSON, ESQ.,

Mr. CULLOM presented a resolution adopted by the house of representatives of the Thirty-fifth General Assembly of Illinois; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

House resolution in relation to pensions for soldiers sixty years of age.

Resolved, That all honorably discharged soldiers, who have arrived at the age of sixty years, and who are dependent on manual labor for a livelihood, should be placed on the pension-list of the United States; and that a copy of this resolution be sent to each United States Senator and member of Congress from this State.

Adopted February 4, 1887.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, State of Illinois, ss:

OFFICE OF SECRETARY.

I, Henry D. Dement, secretary of state of the State of Illinois, do hereby certify that the foregoing is a true copy of a resolution adopted by the house of representatives of the Thirty-fifth General Assembly, now on file in this office.

In witness whereof, I hereto set my hand and affix the great seal of State, at the city of Springfield, this 10th day of February, A. D. 1887.

[SEAL.] HENRY D. DEMENT, Secretary of State.

Mr. DAWES presented a resolution adopted by the Legislature of Massachusetts setting forth the pressing need of legislation to eradicate pleuro-pneumonia among the cattle of the United States, and favoring the enactment of laws for that purpose; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the Massachusetts Fish and Game Protective Association, of Boston, favoring legislation for the preservation of game and fish in the Yellowstone Park; which was referred to the Committee on Fish and Fisheries.

Mr. PLUMB presented a petition of the Board of Trade of Socorro, N. Mex., favoring legislation concerning a certain unconfirmed land grant in New Mexico; which was referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

Mr. HAMPTON presented a petition of the Grand Lodge of the Independent Order of Good Templars of South Carolina, praying that the question of the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors in the District of Columbia may be submitted to a vote of the people of the District; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. TELLER presented a memorial of the Legislature of Colorado; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

House joint memorial No. 1.

To the honorable Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, and to the President of the United States and honorable Secretary of the Interior and Commissioner of Indian Affairs:

Your memorialist, the General Assembly of the State of Colorado, would respectfully represent:

That the remnant of the Southern Ute Indian tribe should, in the interest of humanity, receive early consideration at your hands and be removed to a suitable reservation beyond the boundaries of this State.

Your memorialist sets forth that these Indians continue in their predatory habits, that they continue to commit depredations upon the property and person of adiacent white settlers, insisting from time to time in placing themselves beyond control of their agent by leaving their reservation at will and devoting themselves to murder, intimidation, and theft; the destruction of dwellings, of timber, and grasses by fire; the wanton killing of cattle, and other arbitrary, aggressive, and unlawful acts. Your memorialist would respectfully submit that the continued turbulent and unsettled condition of these Indians is chiefly due to the character of their reservation, being about 90 miles long, only 15 wide, inclosed by populated and well cultivated districts, lying directly across the natural highway of a large and highly prosperous territory and being entirely devoid of game or other natural sources of food supply.

It is hopeless to expect progress or any improvement whatever in the conditions of these Indians upon their present reservation. The mechanical problem presented in irrigation precludes any possibility of advancement towards settled or agricultural methods, and it is respectfully submitted that there has been no such progress, but rather retrogression.

And it is further represented by your memorialist that the retention of the Southern Ute Indians upon their present reservation in La Plata County, in the State of Colorado, is in direct opposition to the declared wish of a majority of the individuals of this tribe.

T. B. STUART,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.
N. H. MELDRUM,
President of the Senate.
ALVA ADAMS,
Governor.

Mr. MAHONE presented petitions of citizens of Bedford, Rockingham, and Fairfax Counties, in the State of Virginia, and a petition of citizens of the District of Columbia, praying that the citizens of the District may be allowed to vote on the question of whether intoxicating liquor may be sold in the District; which were referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. GEORGE. I present a petition from a committee of colored men in Mississippi who say they represent 5,000 people, praying for the appropriation of $100 apiece to enable them to be transported to Liberia. I do not know to what committee the petition should be referred.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The petition will be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. HOAR. Ought it not to go to the Committee on Education and Labor?

Mr. ALLISON. I should think so.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Usually such petitions have gone to the Committee on Foreign Relations, but if the Senator from Massachusetts moves a reference to the Committee on Education and Labor the Chair will put the motion.

Mr. HOAR. I do not know what this has to do with our foreign relations. It is a request of some American citizens, as I understand, owing to some circumstances in their condition which make them desire to emigrate, to be aided in emigration. It seems to me that belongs to the Committee on Education and Labor, which has charge of all circumstances affecting the condition of the laborers of this country more particularly.

Mr. GEORGE. I do not care to which committee the petition is referred.

Mr. HOAR. I suppose these are laboring men and American citizens?

Mr. GEORGE. I suppose they are laborers.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reference will be made to the Committee on Education and Labor, although similar petitions have been referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. GEORGE. I wish to have it go to the appropriate committee that it may have action.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The petition will be referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. GEORGE. Since some allusion has been made to the circumstances under which these petitioners make their petition, as it is very short, I should like to have the Secretary read the printed part of it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the petition will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

To the Senate and House of Representatives in Congress assembled:

The memorial of the undersigned, citizens of the State of Mississippi, respectfully represents:

1. That we are descendants of people torn from Africa and brought to this country where, for two hundred years, their children have contributed by their labor to increase the wealth of every portion of the United States. We greatly desire now to go to the land of our forefathers and make it our home, but have not the means of paying our passage, or providing for our immediate wants on landing in Liberia.

2. Low wages and high rents, and a despair of doing better in the future, compel us to emigrate. The main reason why we should remain here is, that our labor and our votes are needed in this country, a suggestion the force of which we fail to perceive, believing the country can very well dispense even with our presence.

3. The attractions of Liberia are rich virgin lands, freedom from competition with any but our own race, and assurance of superior position. The entire continent of Africa is open to the intelligent and industrial class, and the road to useful employment, as well as to Christian enterprise and an honorable nationality, is wide and inviting.

Your petitioners therefore respectfully and earnestly ask Congress to pass a bill appropriating not exceeding $100 per capita, to be expended under the direction of the American Colonization Society, in paying the expenses of emigrants to Liberia, and the providing there of six months' shelter and support of ourselves and children.

Mr. GEORGE. I desire to call attention to the fact that the body of the petition is in print, and it seems to have emanated from a source from which similar petitions are sent to a good many of these people.

Mr. HOAR. It is impossible to hear the Senator.

Mr. MANDERSON. I present a petition of the executive committee of the national drill and encampment, praying certain action on the part of Congress, and I ask that the petition, with the accompanying exhibits, be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the papers were referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., February 11, 1887.

To the Senate of the United States:

The memorial of the national drill committee of the District of Columbia, most respectfully sets forth:

That, as within the past decade interstate competitive drills of the volunteer soldiers of the United States have been held at different points of this country, always with steadily increasing advantage to the drill, discipline, and morale of the militia, and with steadily increasing attention and interest of the general citizenship of the several States;

That, as the idea has frequently been canvassed, and the feeling over the Union has grown that a national competitive drill and encampment at the national capital would not only collect a larger body of representative soldiers of the several States, but would be of more military importance and advantage from the national character the event would necessarily attain amid national surroundings;

Therefore, impressed with the propriety and advantage of these views, some ninety citizens have raised money to the amount of $50,000 to secure payment of all prizes for excellence (to the extent of $26,500 in money, besides stands of colors, flags, trophies, medals of merit, &c., &c.), and all other expenses of the drill, and have completed all preliminary arrangements through an executive committee composed of your memorialists;

And as they have nationalized this event to the fullest extent possible to them by the issue of detailed explanation of all facts to every organized volunteer command in the United States, to which responses have been received, giving reasonable assurance of presence here in May next of, say, one hundred and ninety-three separate organizations, respresenting at least thirty-five different

States (see list herewith submitted, marked appendix A), and that there is every reason to expect that by the closing of entries on April 1, 1887, every State and Territory will be represented by at least one separate command;

Therefore, they further remind your honorable bodies that the volunteer commands, comprising the National Guard of the Union, embrace the most thoroughly representative men of each State and Territory whence they come; that the professions, trades, capital, labor, and all business interests therein are directly connected with, and in the main comprise, them; that they thus aggregate the reliance and reserve power of the entire Union in its military arm, and thus enforce practically our republican theory of a large and well-appointed militia force in lieu of an expensive standing army.

And this fact is not only recognized by the sentiment of our people and by the voice of the press, but is emphasized and encouraged to the greatest extent by the War Department itself.

Your memorialists would state that not only the military portion of the several communities of the States, but equally the citizens and their families, evince deep and growing interest in this convocation, around the Washington Monument and in the camp named "Camp George Washington," of the flower of the American volunteer system; and in the State pride and high emulation that comparison and competition call forth.

That every great railroad line of the country is lending its aid and its influence to assist the grandeur and extent of this occasion; and that it is believed that the North and the South, the East and the West, will be collected here in numbers never before equaled, and under circumstances most conducive to better knowledge of each other, to closer interchange of sentiment, and to broader fraternization.

Therefore your memorialists beg leave to suggest to your honorable bodies that but one thing is needed to complete and round this national drill to the most perfectly successful moral issue and to the highest possible usefulness on its military side. That one thing is such simple recognition by Congress as will nationalize it, as will give it the stamp of governmental countenance, with even the least possible expenditure of public money.

And to this end—having fully completed every detail and having assumed every expense possible to them—your memorialists pray the passage by your honorable body of a joint resolution, authorizing the striking by the United States Mint of one grand medal of honor and not to exceed nineteen lesser medals; the same to be designed under direction of the War Department, at a merely nominal cost in money, and to be presented to the competitors adjudged most worthy of the same by the President of the United States, as Commander-in Chief, or by such representative as he may delegate.

Your memorialists submit herewith, as part of this memorial, exhibits of the purposes and progress of this national drill, marked A, B, and C, respectively. And they will ever pray, &c.

HEADQUARTERS, No. 1300 PENNSYLVANIA AVENUE,
PIEDMONT AIR-LINE BUILDING,
Washington, D. C., December 10, 1886.

The citizens of Washington having subscribed a guarantee fund of $50,000 to insure payment of prizes and expenditures for a national drill and encampment, have organized a committee of representative citizens, of which Hon. Samuel E. Wheatley, commissioner of the District of Columbia, is chairman.

This national drill committee, having completed its organization (as per margin) and arranged preliminaries, now has the pleasure of announcing to the country that the national drill and encampment will be held at Washington city, D. C., commencing on Monday, May 23, and ending with Decoration Day, May 30, 1887.

Entries will be open to regularly organized volunteer militia of the United States for competition as regiments, battalions, or companies, in infantry, artillery, cavalry, and zouave tactics, and also to regularly organized corps of cadets from military or university schools, for the following most varied and doubly largest prizes ever offered, aggregating $26,500, with other souvenir trophies:

Ten shots each at 200, 300, 500, and 600 yards. Prizes to be awarded on best aggregate scores. Competitors restricted to use of the service Springfield breech-loader used by the regular Army, or to the rifle officially issued to the militia by the State to which competitor belongs—eight prizes—

Three prizes, silver medal and	75
Four prizes, bronze medal and	50
		525
Aggregate money prizes offered		26,500

SOUVENIR MEDALS.—It is the further intent of the committee to bestow medals of merit, in gold, silver, and bronze, according to their grading, upon all commands taking prizes at this national competition.

Comfortable quarters in camp will be furnished all competing commands free of cost.

Acceptance or rejection of any application for entry is a right reserved by the committee at its own discretion.

The object of this national drill is twofold:

First. As an incentive to advancement and proficiency in the science of arms of the citizen soldiery of the Union, through emulation and friendly competition on the common ground of the national capital.

Second. The massing of representative men, comprised in the volunteer organizations, in the fraternal associations of a camp, where they may better appreciate each other and learn mutual reliance should the national reserves ever be called to stand shoulder to shoulder in defense of their common country.

The committee confidently enumerates a few of the unequaled advantages of the national capital for holding this national competition.

Most central in the railroad travel between all sections of the country; having within a radius of 200 miles (less than half a day's travel) an aggregate population of 10,000,000; replete with historic and national associations, and the center of national curiosity; with magnificent public buildings, grand avenues, spacious parks, and splendid residences, which combine to make her the most beautiful city on the continent; with rarest facilities for camp and drill grounds, and perfection of transit from point to point at cheapest rates, Washington offers attractions far beyond all other cities for such convocation of the national guards and of the national public.

The committee assures all comers, civilian as well as military, that the trunk railroad lines and their connections will bring rates for round-trip travel within reach of the most modest purse; that every care will be taken by a specially appointed committee of citizens to furnish detailed and reliable information to visitors as to board, lodging, &c., and to guard them against every species of unfairness and extortion.

SPECIAL DAYS.—It is also the intent of the committee to arrange, during the week's encampment, a series of special days, such as "regimental day," "governor's day," "battalion day," "President's day," "chaplain's day," and to break camp on "memorial day."

Military music, in its most attractive forms, as displayed in different styles by some of the most noted bands and drum corps of the country, will constitute an important feature of this encampment.

The drills will be judged and the programmes (always a point of serious import) will be prepared by competent officers of the United States Army in the different arms of service, specially designated by the War Department for this duty.

Rules in detail to govern the entries of organizations in the above competitions and for the regulation of the encampment will be formulated and promulgated at a date sufficiently early to avoid all misunderstanding.

Commanders of regiments, battalions, and companies of all arms are meanwhile invited to correspond with this committee as to their intent of entering the competition.

By order of the committee.

SAM'L E. WHEATLEY, Chairman.
T. C. DE LEON, Managing Secretary.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. PUGH, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6663) for the relief of Thomas P. Westmoreland, reported it without amendment.

Mr. PUGH. I am also directed by the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 8751) for the relief of Samuel F. Rice, to report it with an amendment. I was requested by the chairman of the Judiciary Committee [Mr. EDMUNDS] to state that he does not join in the report of this case.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. MORRILL, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, reported an amendment intended to be proposed to the deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. MORGAN, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the joint resolution (S. R. 99) in relation to the land-grant act approved May 17, 1856, granting lands to the State of Florida for railroad purposes, reported it adversely; and the joint resolution was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, reported a bill (S. 3300) to provide for the judicial determination of the rights of the United States in lands granted to the State of Florida for the purpose of aiding in the construction of railroads under an act of Congress, approved May 17, 1856, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. MAHONE. I am directed by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1442) providing for the erection of a public building at Portsmouth, Ohio, to report it adversely, and move its indefinite postponement, and to say that a bill covering the same object has passed both Houses of Congress.

The bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. MAHONE. The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1846) to amend an act entitled "An act for the erection of a public building at Brooklyn, N. Y.," approved June 12, 1882, report in favor of its indefinite postponement for the same reason as in the other case.

The report was agreed to.

EMILE GUERIN AND CHERI P. MAJOR.

Mr. EUSTIS. I am instructed by the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6330) to confirm to Emile Guerin and Cheri P. Major title to certain lands, to report it favorably without amendment. I ask unanimous consent that the bill may be considered at this time.

Mr. INGALLS. Let it be read at length for information, subject to objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Louisiana asks unanimous consent to proceed to the consideration of the bill reported by him at this time. Is there objection?

Mr. CULLOM. I should like to hear it read first.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read at length for information.

The Chief Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That all the right, title, claim, and interest of the United States to a certain tract of land on False River, Pointe Coupée Parish, Louisiana, and described on the official maps of the General Land Office of the United States as lot or section No. 69, in township 5 south, range 10 east, southeastern district, west of the Mississippi River, Louisiana, be, and the same are hereby, confirmed to and in Emile Guerin and Cheri P. Major, holding under the original grantee or his assigns, and to and in their successors, transferees, vendees, and assignees: Provided, That this act shall have the effect only of a quitclaim of all right, title, and interest of the United States therein, not to affect any valid adverse right or title to said land, nor create any liability on the part of the United States.

Mr. INGALLS. What is the claim of the United States in this land?

Mr. EUSTIS. I will state to the Senator that the United States Government has no interest whatever in this land. It was an original Spanish grant, and under the defective registry laws of Louisiana the original grant has been lost. Those from whom these parties have acquired the land have been in possession for ninety years. In 1814 the Congress of the United States confirmed lands covered by this grant upon the ground that although the original grant was lost, yet the fact that the grant had been made was not disputed. There are no patents that ever have been issued against this land.

Mr. INGALLS. Is this confirmation to the vendors of the present occupants?

Mr. EUSTIS. Those who had the previous title.

Mr. INGALLS. What is the necessity, then, for passing another act?

Mr. EUSTIS. Because this particular section has never been confirmed. All the other sections covered by the grant have been confirmed.

Mr. INGALLS. If the original Spanish concession has been lost, how does it appear that this land was covered by it?

Mr. EUSTIS. How does it appear that it is covered by it?

Mr. INGALLS. I understood the Senator to say that this land was originally contained in a Spanish concession, which had been lost.

Mr. EUSTIS. Yes, the original grant.

Mr. INGALLS. There must be somewhere a record of it.

Mr. HARRIS. This bill was read for information subject to objection. If it is going to lead to debate, I shall object to its consideration in the morning hour.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, the bill will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. EUSTIS. I ask the Senator from Tennessee to withdraw his objection. There will be no debate.

Mr. HARRIS. If the bill can be considered without debate, I shall not object, but I reserve the right to object if it leads to debate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, the Chair feels bound to rule that the bill goes over.

Mr. EUSTIS. Does the Senator insist on his objection?

Mr. HARRIS. I will withdraw the objection if the bill does not lead to debate.

Mr. INGALLS. I feel that we ought not to be called upon to pass a bill instantaneously when reported, without some consideration. I do not object to the consideration of the bill, but I shall object unless we can have an explanation that will show why the United States ought to confer a title that it is admitted it does not possess.

Mr. EUSTIS. This land was surveyed by the United States——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair regards the debate in the nature of an objection, and will have to ask Senators to be seated. Reports of committees are still in order.

Mr. EUSTIS. I understood the Senator from Kansas to say he would not object if an explanation could be made.

Mr. INGALLS. The Senator from Tennessee objects to an explanation.

Mr. GIBSON. The Senator from Tennessee withdraws his objection to a brief explanation of the case.

Mr. EUSTIS. This land was surveyed by the United States Government and stands claimed by the legal representatives of Julian Poydras, and no confirmation found. That is shown by the survey. The confirmation has been made by the Congress of the United States with reference to all the lands covered in the grant except this one section. The bill was unanimously reported by the Committee on Private Land Claims——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Louisiana will pause. The Chair will submit the question. The Senator from Louisiana asks unanimous consent to proceed to the consideration of the bill at this time. Is there objection?

Mr. PLUMB. From what committee is it reported?

Mr. EUSTIS. From the Committee on Private Land Claims.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection to the present consideration of the bill.

Mr. EUSTIS. I repeat this was an original Spanish grant. The original title was lost; but in 1814, although these parties had been in possession only a few years, the Congress of the United States confirmed the title to the land, and it is only this section which has never been confirmed. The object of the bill is to remove the cloud upon the title of these parties. The Government of the United States has never made any claim whatever to this land, and can not make any, and does not to-day. The quit-claim of the United States is not giving away an interest in the land, because the Government has none whatever. It is simply to remove the cloud from the private title.

Mr. INGALLS. Will the Senator be good enough to explain what the cloud is? He states that there is no existing title in the United States outstanding, that the land belonged to the grantors of those who are now in possession, and yet we are asked here, upon the report of the committee, without further explanation, to quit-claim or relinquish an interest in the United States to this land which the Senator says does not exist and never did exist.

I know nothing whatever about this matter; but bills that are reported in this way by a committee without an explanation are always a little trifle suspicious, to say the least. I should like to know something about the value of this land, and why it is that after ninety years of adverse and notorious and exclusive possession we are called upon to pass an act of Congress, with all the solemnities, relinquishing the title of the United States to this property.

Mr. EUSTIS. It is asked because the parties who have been in possession have been satisfied with the title which they had; but this particular land has changed hands lately, and the money will not be paid by the purchasers because these purchasers are more particular than the previous purchasers. Therefore they require an act of Congress confirming the grant, which is nothing but what the Government of the United States has done ever since 1814.

I will call the Senator's attention to the fact that in 1814 the Government of the United States would not have confirmed the grant if the Government had had any title or interest in the ground.

Mr. INGALLS. I understand that in the treaty between the United States and France, when we acquired possession of this property, the outstanding Spanish grants, so far as they were valid, were confirmed. If this tract of land was included in any valid Spanish grant existing at the time of the transfer, then, of course, it was confirmed; but I understand the Senator from Louisiana to say that there was never any confirmation of this tract of land at all, and that there is no outstanding claim of the United States Government against it. There is something mysterious about it.

Mr. EUSTIS. There has never been any confirmation of this particular section, but there has been a confirmation of the grant, the original title of which was lost.

Mr. INGALLS. Was this tract of land included in the grant that was confirmed?

Mr. EUSTIS. This section was included in the grant, but it was omitted in the confirmation made in 1814.

Mr. INGALLS. Then it was not confirmed, I understand the Senator to say?

Mr. EUSTIS. It was not confirmed in 1814.

Mr. INGALLS. Then the Senator makes another explanation. In the first place, we are assured that the confirmation was made to this grant in 1814, and now the Senator tells us that, for some reason which is not disclosed, this particular section of land was excluded from the confirmation of the grant, and ninety years afterward we are called upon to pass an act, without explanation, confirming the present occupants of that land in their title which never was in the United States.

Mr. EUSTIS. Here is the statement made in the report of the House Committee on Private Land Claims:

Congress, by act of April 12, 1814, confirmed to the holders the title to part of the land held by virtue of the same grant on which Guerin and Major rely as the basis of their title. They hold the remainder of the land embraced in said grant. This act does for them, as to their part, only what the act of April 12, 1814 (U. S. Stat. at Large, vol. 3, p. 121), did for the holders of the other portion. Their right to ask this is fortified by the fact that their honest, uninterrupted adverse possession of said land has continued for seventy-one years longer than that of those in like case with themselves, who were relieved in 1814.

Mr. INGALLS. Will the Senator state why this land was excluded from the confirmation of the grant in 1814?

Mr. EUSTIS. It may have been some defect in the survey. I can not state what the reason was. It may have been an accident.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will again remind Senators that even if unanimous consent is given to take up a bill, under the circumstances, debate is not in order.

Mr. INGALLS. Has the Commissioner of the General Land Office been consulted about the matter?

Mr. EUSTIS. He has.

Mr. INGALLS. I should like to hear his report read.

Mr. EUSTIS. I was going to refer to it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will again ask the attention of the Senators to the fact that even if by unanimous consent a bill is taken up under the circumstances of this case, it is not subject to debate, and the question must be put without debate. The Chair only wishes to enforce the rule. The rule is made very imperative.

Mr. EUSTIS. I will simply ask that the letter of the Commissioner be read for the information of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection the letter will be read. The Chair hears none.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, GENERAL LAND OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., February 10, 1887.

SIR: Referring to your personal inquiries in relation to the subject-matter of H. R. 6330, Forty-ninth Congress, second session, entitled "An act to confirm to Emile Guerin and Cheri P. Major title to certain lands," I have the honor to inclose herein a photolithographic copy of the plat of survey of township 5 south, range 10 east, southeast district, west of the Mississippi River, Louisiana, and to state that section 69 thereon, which said act proposes to confirm to Guerin and Major, appears to have been surveyed for the legal representatives of Julian Poydras, as a claim for which no confirmation was found.

I have no data by which I can determine who the legal representatives of Poydras are; nor can I determine what title, if any, Poydras had to said lands to be transferred to his representatives; nor am I able to find any evidence on file here showing that Guerin and Major have any interest in the lands mentioned in the act as purchasers of Poydras or his legal representatives, or any other person.

The inclosed plat and a tabular statement prepared by the surveyor-general of Louisiana of surveyed but unconfirmed claims is all the evidence I can find in reference to the matters inquired about.

The tabular statement herein referred to is printed in Senate Executive Document No. 111, Forty-sixth Congress, second session. On page 14 of this executive document you will find section 69 reported as supposed to be possessed or claimed by the legal representatives of Julian Poydras.

Finding no evidence in this office that Guerin and Major have any right or interest in this land, I see no reason why said land should be confirmed to them.

As requested, I return herewith the printed copies left by you, namely: H. R. 6330 and report thereon of the Committee on Private Land Claims, No. 1011, first-session of the present Congress.

Very respectfully,

WM. A. J. SPARKS, Commissioner.

Hon. MATT. W. RANSOM,
Chairman Committee on Private Land Claims,
United States Senate.

Mr. INGALLS. If I understood the reading of that letter correctly, the Commissioner of the General Land Office says that the bill ought not to pass. His statement is that there is no evidence whatever showing that the present occupants of the land ever purchased of Poydras, the original grantee under the Spanish concession, to whom the grant was confirmed. If I understood the statement of the Commissioner correctly, he says there is no reason for the passage of this bill; in other words, that it ought not to pass.

Mr. EUSTIS. No; he says the bill ought not to pass because there is no evidence that Guerin and Major have acquired the land.

Mr. INGALLS. They are the beneficiaries of this bill, are they not?

Mr. EUSTIS. Yes. How can there be any evidence——

Mr. INGALLS. Very well; if there is no evidence at all, on what are we acting?

Mr. EUSTIS. How can there be any evidence that these parties have purchased from their vendors? Of course there would be no evidence in the archives of the Land Office? This is a private purchase made from a private individual.

Mr. PLUMB. Why should we not quitclaim to the original grantee from the crown of Spain, and let the title inure then by reason of the covenants of warranty?

Mr. EUSTIS. That has been done with reference to the entire claim. In 1814 Congress confirmed the grant. It seems this particular section was not included in that confirmation. Private owners have been in possession ever since 1790, and this is merely to give a quitclaim so far as the interests of the United States Government are concerned to this particular section, which was included in the grant but which was not included in the confirmation.

Mr. PLUMB. In regard to that point, I can only say that when it comes to a question of this kind in the Public Lands Committee the committee does not feel called upon to deal with the subject of conveyance at all, but treats the title as though it were in the hands of the original grantee, and lets the question of its passing by conveyance out of his hands to be settled in the ordinary way, so as not to run the risk of conveying the land to some one who may have a defective title.

Mr. EUSTIS. All adverse claims are reserved in the bill.

Mr. INGALLS. In view of the statement by the Commissioner of the General Land Office that the bill ought not to be passed, I will enter my objection to its further consideration this morning.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed on the Calendar.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 199) for the retirement and recoinage of the trade-dollar, with amendments, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5538) relating to the importing and landing of mackerel during the spawning season, agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, Mr. MAYBURY, and Mr. REED the managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message further announced that the House had passed the joint resolution (S. R. 51) authorizing and directing the Department of Justice to transfer certain rooms, which have been occupied by the United States courts, to the city of Jackson, Miss.

The message also announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 10233) to convey to and confirm in the city of Aurora, in the county of Kane, and State of Illinois, a small island in the Fox River, located within the limits of said city; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (S. 93) authorizing the construction of a public building for a post-office in the city of Houston, Tex.;

A bill (S. 305) for the erection of a public building at Huntsville, Ala.;

A bill (S. 542) for the relief of William Ervin;

A bill (S. 712) for the erection of a public building at Augusta, Ga.;

A bill (S. 1162) for the erection of a post-office building at Lynn, Mass.;

A bill (S. 1592) to change the limit of appropriation for the public building at Denver, Colo.;

A bill (S. 2225) to indemnify certain subjects of the Chinese Empire for losses sustained by the violence of a mob at Rock Springs, in the Territory of Wyoming, in September, 1885;

A bill (S. 2533) for the relief of E. Remington & Sons; and

A bill (H. R. 1684) to authorize terms of the circuit court of the United States for the eastern judicial district of North Carolina at the city of Wilmington, in said district.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. MORRILL introduced a bill (S. 3301) to authorize the settlement and adjustment of all claims and demands between the United States and the State of Vermont, &c.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. BLACKBURN introduced a bill (S. 3302) for the relief of the sureties on the official bond of Alexander H. Adams, late pension agent at Lexington, Ky.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. BUTLER introduced a bill (S. 3303) for the erection of a national memorial bridge over the Potomac from Washington to Arlington; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. MAXEY introduced a bill (S. 3304) to authorize the Choctaw, Chickasaw, Cherokee, Creek, and Seminole Nations of Indians, respectively, to lease lands within their respective boundaries for mining purposes, and to validate leases heretofore made for said purposes by the proper authorities of any of said nations; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. MORRILL introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 110) for the issue of subsidiary silver coin; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. VOORHEES introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 111) to provide for payment of compensation to jurors summoned in condemnation of a site for the Congressional Library; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Claims.

AMENDMENTS TO BILLS.

Mr. PLATT submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the agricultural appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. FAIR submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. HALE submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the river and harbor bill; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

SERVICES OF COUNT PULASKI.

Mr. ALLISON submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the President be, and is hereby, requested, if not incompatible with the public interest, to cause a search to be made of the files and records of the Department of State, the Department of War, and the Department of the Treasury, for information as to the services rendered by Count Casimir Pulaski, a brigadier-general of the Army of the United States in the years 1777, 1778, and 1779, and until he was killed in action, and as to any payment or compensation made to that officer for such services. Also, as to any just and proper indebtedness of the United States to General Pulaski for and on account of his expenses and military supplies furnished for troops of his command; and also, especially as to any record or documentary evidence which may show whether 100,000 gold livres or other sum of money transmitted by the friends of Count Pulaski in Europe for his personal use in the help he was giving to the United States arrived about the time he was killed in battle at Savannah, and whether such funds went into the public Treasury or were used by the authority of the Continental Congress or by authorities in the State of Georgia for the benefit of the United States, and if so used, to what amount and under what circumstances, and that the matters and facts so ascertained be communicated to the Senate.

INDEXES TO REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. MANDERSON. I am directed by the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred a concurrent resolution for the printing of indexes to the compilation of House and Senate reports of committees, to report it favorably without amendment. I ask for its present consideration.

By unanimous consent the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed the indexes to the compilation of House and Senate reports of committees provided for in public resolution 24, first session, Forty-ninth Congress.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask the Senator how many copies will be printed under that; the usual number?

Mr. MANDERSON. No; this is for the purpose of printing indexes of the committee reports under an order of the Senate at the last session. There will be as many indexes published as there are sets of committee reports, and there are as many of these reports as there are committees in both Houses. It is simply for the purpose of amending the resolution heretofore passed by correcting an error.

Mr. COCKRELL. It would be a very important document, and it seems to me there ought to be additional copies printed. The cost will be very little to add a few more copies.

Mr. MANDERSON. I do not think the Senator understands the case exactly. This is not a document that has been printed, but Captain McKee, of the document room, has gathered as many indexes as there are sets of reports of committees, and this is merely to publish the index of all.

Mr. COCKRELL. Not a general index?

Mr. MANDERSON. Oh, no.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the concurrent resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

WASHINGTON TERRITORIAL LEGISLATURE.

Mr. BUTLER. I desire to invite the attention of the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT], the acting chairman of the Committee on Territories, to the majority and minority reports from that committee presented last Saturday on the bill (H. R. 6966) to change the time of the meeting of the Legislative Assembly of Washington Territory, and to ask him if it will be agreeable to-morrow to call up that bill and have it considered. If anything is to be done by the Senate, it ought to be done promptly in order that the people of the Territory may understand exactly what they have to rely upon. I believe I am correct when I state that the understanding of the committee was that we should all unite in attempting to have early consideration of the bill.

Mr. PLATT. Owing to some confusion in the Chamber I have not been able to hear precisely what the Senator from South Carolina has been saying; but as to the subject of his remarks, the reports alluded to have only just been placed on my table. I had intended, if they had been earlier distributed, to ask to have the matter considered this morning. I am as anxious as he that it shall have early consideration. What was the suggestion of the Senator?

Mr. BUTLER. That the bill be taken up for consideration to-morrow, after the morning business.

Mr. PLATT. I will aid the Senator in that effort.

EXTRA HOURS OF CLERICAL EMPLOYÉS.

Mr. CULLOM. I offer a resolution, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be directed to inform the Senate as to what unusual necessity, if any, now exists for requiring a certain part of the clerks in the offices of the Adjutant-General and Surgeon-General to work extra hours.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to have that resolution express another inquiry, and that is, the number of hours they work, and what they call extra hours.

Mr. CULLOM. I have no objection to that, but I understand these clerks work the usual hours during the day, and then after night they go back and work two or three hours additional.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should think that when the Adjutant-General's office in the consideration of claims, under the act of June 3, 1884, have only reached those claims which were filed in October, 1884, they ought to work the clerks at night, or make them do more work in the day-time. If they do not work the eight hours which the law prescribes, I want to know the reason why the heads of Departments do not make them work those eight hours. It is an outrage that the public business should be so far behind if the clerks do not work the eight hours which the law requires.

Mr. CULLOM. As I understand, the statute already provides the number of hours that the clerks shall work, and I take it for granted they work that number of hours during the day; but a portion of the clerks in some of the bureaus of the War Department are asked to go to the office after night and work two or three hours additional, while other clerks are not asked to do so, and the clerks who do get no additional compensation. That is my information. All I desire by this resolution is to call out the facts, and if possible have these clerks all treated alike as nearly as possible.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like the Senator to show me any law fixing the exact number of hours the clerks shall work in the Departments.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. HARRIS. Let it go over.

Mr. CAMERON. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, the resolution goes over.

BONDED EXPORT WHISKY.

Mr. DAWES. I desire to make an inquiry, if I may be permitted, of the Committee on Finance. On the 8th of June last the Senate adopted a resolution calling upon the Treasury Department for information with reference to the reimportation of distilled spirits. In response to the resolution the Treasury Department communicated a document of a good deal of importance, which was referred to the Committee on Finance with instructions to examine into it and report to the Senate. I want to make an inquiry of the Committee on Finance if there is a prospect of a report on this subject being brought before the Senate, and in that connection I desire to call the attention of the committee to an article in the New York World on the 2d of this month written from this place, making statements which, if they are founded in fact, make it, as I think, the imperious duty of that committee to make the examinations suggested by that resolution.

I should like to have this communication considered in connection with the instruction of the Senate by the committee, for if it be a fact as stated here that the Government has been wronged by more than a million dollars of taxes justly its due in consequence of some strange system of export and reimportation of the same spirituous liquors, it is quite time that the attention of the Committee on Finance was not only called to it, but that they were induced to try to remedy it.

Mr. MORRILL. I will say that a subcommittee were appointed to examine that subject, and they have not yet reported.

Mr. DAWES. My inquiry was whether there was a prospect of a report before the end of the session.

Mr. MORRILL. I can not say. The committee meet to-morrow morning, and I will call the attention of the committee to the matter again.

Mr. DAWES. In that connection I hope the committee will consider the article to which I have referred.

A. L. CUTTING.

Mr. GIBSON submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the President of the United States be, and is hereby, requested, if not incompatible with the public interests, to furnish the Senate copies of all correspondence relating to the arrest, trial, and discharge of A. L. Cutting, a citizen of the United States, by the authorities of Mexico.

CORRESPONDENCE WITH MEXICO.

Mr. INGALLS. In that connection I should like to inquire if any answer has yet been received to the resolution of the Senate adopted some time last month calling for the correspondence between the State Department and Minister Jackson in Mexico?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is advised that no answer has been sent to the Senate.

WILLIAM WEBSTER.

Mr. CAMERON. On Saturday last I gave notice that to-day I would ask the Senate to take up and consider Order of Business 2195, being the bill (S. 3286) to increase the naval establishment. I now move——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Before that motion is received, the Chair is required by the rules to lay before the Senate a resolution which comes over by a unanimous order for consideration at this time.

The Secretary read the following resolution, reported by Mr. MORGAN on the 26th of January from the Committee on Foreign Relations:

Resolved by the Senate, That after due examination of the matters presented in the petition of William Webster, and the evidence brought to their attention in support of his claim for indemnity from the British Government for lands in New Zealand, purchased by him in good faith from native chiefs, and duly conveyed to him before the Government of Great Britain acquired the sovereignty over that country by a treaty made with said chiefs, the Senate of the United States consider that said claim for indemnity is founded in justice and deserves the cognizance and support of the Government of the United States. And that said claim, as a claim for money indemnity, was not presented by the United States to Great Britain prior to September, 1858.

Resolved, That the President is requested to take such measures as, in his opinion, may be proper to secure to William Webster a just settlement and final adjustment of his claim against Great Britain, growing out of the loss of the lands and other property in New Zealand of which he has been deprived by the act or consent of the British Government, and to which he had acquired a title under purchases and deeds of conveyance from the native chiefs, prior to February 6, 1840, and prior to any right of Great Britain to said islands.

Mr. MORGAN. On consultation with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS], who has some remarks to make on this resolution, he and I have united in a request that it may go over until to-morrow, retaining its place.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Alabama asks the unanimous consent of the Senate that this resolution may go over, retaining its place as an objected resolution. If there is no objection that order will be made.

VIRGINIUS INDEMNITY FUND.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate of the United States:

I transmit herewith a report furnished by the Secretary of State in response to a resolution of the Senate of January 31, ultimo, calling for particulars of the investment and distribution of the indemnity received in 1875 from Spain, and known as the "Virginius fund."

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION,
Washington, February 14, 1887.

INCREASE OF NAVAL ESTABLISHMENT.

Mr. CAMERON. I move now to take up Order of Business 2195, Senate bill 3286.

Mr. HARRIS. Regular order!

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The regular order is the consideration of the House bills on the Calendar, pending which the Senator from Pennsylvania submits his motion.

Mr. CAMERON. I ask for the immediate consideration of the bill I have named.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Pennsylvania moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 3286) to increase the naval establishment.

Mr. CAMERON. On that motion I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HALE. Let the bill which it is proposed to take up be read, so that the Senate may know what it is.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the bill will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, That the President is hereby authorized to have constructed, by contract, ten protected steel cruisers, with such armament for each as the Navy Department may deem suitable, each of said vessels to have a maximum speed of not less than twenty knots over the measured mile, such speed to be exhibited under such test or tests and conditions as the Navy Department may impose before either of said cruisers shall be accepted by the Government. The cost of all of said cruisers, in the aggregate, complete, exclusive of armament, shall not be more than $15,000,000, which sum is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

SEC. 2. That in the construction of the aforesaid vessels all of the provisions of the act of August 3d, 1886, entitled "An act to increase the naval establishment," as to material for said vessels, their engines, boilers, and machinery, the contracts under which they are built, the notice of and proposals for the same, the plans, drawings, and specifications therefor, and the method of executing said contracts, shall be observed and followed, and said vessels shall be built in compliance with the terms of said act, so far as the same relate to vessels constructed under contract.

SEC. 3. That in case either of said vessels, upon the tests or conditions heretofore provided, shall display a speed greater than twenty knots over the measured mile, a bonus shall be paid to the contractor of $200,000 for the first knot in excess of said twenty knots, and of $100,000 for the second knot so in excess, and of $100,000 for each knot beyond; and for the purposes provided in this section the sum of $2,000,000, or so much of the same as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

SEC. 4. That for the armament of the vessels hereinbefore provided for the sum of $4,800,000 is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion is that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill.

The yeas and nays were taken.

Mr. HARRIS (after having voted in the negative). Being paired with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS], and not knowing how he would vote on this question, I withdraw my vote.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. My colleague [Mr. BERRY] has left the Chamber temporarily, and is paired with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. HARRISON], my pair being transferred to him.

Mr. KENNA. I am paired with the Senator from New York [Mr. MILLER].

The result was announced—yeas 37, nays 17; as follows:

YEAS—37.

Aldrich,	Evarts,	Mahone,	Saulsbury,
Allison,	Farwell,	Manderson,	Sawyer,

So the motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read at length.

Mr. HARRIS. The bill has just been read for information.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It was read for information, and unless the reading be specially called for it will not be read again.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs with amendments in section 3, line 4, before the word "hundred," to strike out "two" and insert "one;" in line 5, after the word "knots," to strike out "and of $100,000 for the second knot so in excess;" and in line 7, before the word "hundred," to strike out "one" and insert "two;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 3. That in case either of said vessels, upon the tests and conditions heretofore provided, shall display a speed greater than twenty knots over the measured mile, a bonus shall be paid to the contractor of $100,000 for the first knot in excess of said twenty knots, and of $200,000 for each knot beyond; and for the purposes provided in this section the sum of $2,000,000, or so much of the same as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. MORGAN. I offer an amendment.

Mr. ALLISON. I think the committee should explain to the Senate about the length of time that it will require to construct these vessels.

Mr. CAMERON. There is no report with this bill. I had intended to make a few remarks, but I do not wish to consume the time of the Senate in the way of remarks.

Mr. CULLOM. We should like to hear the Senator.

Mr. CAMERON. I would rather not take up time.

Mr. VAN WYCK. May I ask the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations if this appropriation will exhaust the surplus, or will it go beyond it?

Mr. CAMERON. It will take from four to five years to expend this money.

Mr. PLUMB. I should like to ask the Senator from Pennsylvania a question. Is it absolutely under the control of the President of the United States to say what kind of vessels we shall have in the Navy?

Mr. CAMERON. It is not.

Mr. PLUMB. I should like to know wherein any power is reserved to Congress.

Mr. CAMERON. These questions come so thick and fast that probably I had better submit my remarks.

Mr. PLUMB. Will the Senator answer that question some time during his remarks?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] has submitted an amendment which will be read before the Senator from Pennsylvania proceeds.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to add as a new section the following:

In making proposals for contracts for building the vessels authorized to be constructed under this act, it shall be required that three of such vessels shall be built on or near the coast of the Pacific Ocean or the waters connecting therewith, three of them on or near the coast of the Gulf of Mexico or the waters connecting therewith, and four of them on or near the coast of the Atlantic Ocean or the waters connecting therewith, and at such places on or near such coasts or waters as the Secretary of the Navy shall provide. If it shall appear to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Navy from the biddings for said contracts when the same are opened and examined by him that said vessels can not be constructed at a fair cost on or near the coast of the Pacific Ocean or the Gulf of Mexico, he shall suspend the construction of the vessels herein required to be built on or near said coasts or either of them until further action by Congress, and shall report the reasons for such suspension to Congress with all convenient speed.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I desire to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that this is one of the most important bills of this session, and I have not been able to hear one word of the amendment read.

Mr. CAMERON. I have no objection to the amendment.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. It is in consequence of the fact that those who generally attend to the business here are doing all the talking on the floor.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Pennsylvania is entitled to the floor. The Chair will endeavor to maintain order.

Mr. CAMERON. Mr. President, this bill authorizes the President to have constructed by contract ten protected steel cruisers with such armament for each as the Navy Department may deem suitable, each of said vessels to have a maximum speed of not less than twenty knots per hour, and to be constructed in compliance with the terms of the act of August 3, 1886. They must be constructed of steel of American manufacture. The armor used is to be of the best obtainable quality and of domestic manufacture, and is to be accepted only ofter passing such tests as shall be prescribed by the Secretary of the Navy. The engines, boilers, and machinery of all the new vessels provided for in the bill are also to be of domestic manufacture. It is not necessary to further recapitulate the provisions of the act under which these vessels are to be constructed, as the Senate is already familiar with its provisions.

The object of the bill is to provide the United States Navy with ten first-class protected steel cruisers, which shall be, especially in the matter of speed, ahead of all other vessels of a similar character in the world. This important feature is emphasized by offering a liberal bonus to be paid to the contractor in case either or all of these vessels display a speed greater than 20 knots over the measured mile.

After a careful investigation of the subject, aided by the several valuable reports on the question prepared by well-known experts for the Government, the conclusion is reached that the most important object to be obtained is speed. With the guns used in modern warfare the strength of a war vessel must be secondary to its speed. The heavily armored vessels, such as are proposed in the bill introduced by the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE], are especially adapted for coast and harbor defenses, while the vessels provided for in this bill are solely for ocean service.

The passage of this bill may be looked upon as a matter of economy. Ten vessels of the speed herein provided for will be of more value to our Navy than fifty vessels of a speed of twelve and fourteen knots an hour. Other powers, as will be presently shown, have large numbers of the slower grade of vessels, and to pretend to cope with them numerically would necessitate a much larger outlay. We can arrive at our objective point much sooner by taking the road mapped out by the proposed bill. What we really need are fast cruisers, which, in case of war, could follow up and overtake the fastest merchant steamer which traverses the ocean. We have not to-day a vessel commissioned, nor a vessel in course of construction, that could give chase with the hope of overtaking the first-class merchant vessels engaged in the Atlantic trade.

In the report of the board on fortifications or other defenses appointed by the President of the United States may be found a series of tables running over sixty pages and purporting to give the characteristics of the principal foreign ships of war. These tables are very valuable, and would repay the trouble of a close examination, as they give a very good description, with explanatory remarks, of the principal ironclads of the world. From these tables has been prepared a small table showing the rate of maximum trial speed of the war vessels belonging to the different nations. For the purpose of condensation it has not been thought worth while to deal with fractions smaller than one-half a knot, and therefore the rates of speed have been classified in the column to which they most nearly approximate. For example, 14.6 knots would be classified under 14½ knots, while 14.2 would be classified under 14 knots. From this table it will be seen that the highest rate of speed has been attained by the French cruisers, while England, Italy, Chili, and Japan rank next. Should this bill become a law and the proposed vessels be built, in point of speed the American vessels of war would lead the world.

The table is as follows:

For the last five or six years we have been incessantly investigating the subject of our Navy. There are numerous reports of one kind and another on this subject. We have now all the information that it is possible to gather, and about the only thing remaining is to appropriate the money and go ahead with the work. Official reports show beyond question that we are able to manufacture our own coast defenses, and the testimony of our leading ship-builders, which has again and again been taken, together with the fact that we are building vessels first-class in every respect excepting speed, removes all doubt as to our ability to produce the best and the fastest cruisers. In this connection attention is called to a brief statement made by Mr. Charles H. Cramp, who has recently been awarded the contracts for some of the ironclads already provided for by Congress, which I find in the New York Herald:

Within the last three years our firm has built the two fastest steam-yachts in the world. I do not say this in self-glorification. It is a well-known fact. The Atalanta and the Peerless are the fastest steam-yachts afloat. Nobody on either side of the ocean disputes that. If the Government of the United States had offered us the same inducement to build cruisers that Jay Gould, and Mr. Harkness, of Cleveland, did to build yachts, we would have built for it the fastest cruisers in the world.

This bill offers that inducement, and faith in the enterprise and ability of Americans prompts the belief that the speed of these vessels will not only equal the maximum speed called for, but eclipse that yet attained by the ship-builders of other countries. If we can build the fastest yachts it is difficult to realize that we can not build the fastest cruisers.

The following is a brief summary of what has been done to the Navy:

In the summer of 1881 a naval advisory board was appointed to state the requirements of a new navy. They reported to the Secretary of the Navy that we needed for the present exigencies of the Navy, thirty-eight unarmored cruisers, estimated to cost $26,000,000, and five rams and twenty-five torpedo-boats, estimated to cost $4,000,000. They stated that heavy ironclads were needed; but they gave no estimate in regard to them, as that subject was not included within their instructions. At its next session Congress authorized the construction of two cruisers; but no contracts had been made for them when, in the spring of 1883, it authorized the construction of four vessels, three of them to be steel cruisers—two of 3,000 tons, and one of 4,500 tons—and one of them a dispatch-boat. The armament was to be from eight to twelve rifle-guns for each ship, of caliber from 6 inches to 8 inches.

The contracts were signed in July, 1883, and the new Navy was begun with the launching of the Dolphin. This vessel was completed in the summer of 1885. The Atlanta, one of the cruisers, was put in commission in the summer of 1886, for a trial trip, and the other two are not yet finished, nearly three years after the passage of the act authorizing their construction. No appropriation for ships was made during the session of 1884, but during the sessions of 1885 and 1886 authority was given for three more cruisers, two gunboats, two large armored iron-clads, one torpedo-boat, and one pneumatic dynamite-gun ship, and for the completion of five large double-turreted monitors, whose construction was commenced, under the name of repairs, during Grant's administration.

These fourteen ships added to the four authorized in 1883 make a total of eighteen modern vessels for which authority has been granted. This is the outcome of more than five years' consideration of the subject, and the practical result to date is two ships in commission, seven (including the five monitors) launched but not finished, five designed but not contracted for, and four not yet designed.

The length of time thus consumed shows how large and complicated is the problem, and how many years must elapse between granting authority for ships and seeing them in commission.

As to the value of the ships thus far acquired the only serious criticism made upon them is in regard to their speed. A cruiser which makes 15 knots an hour, when the fast passenger steamers that would be pressed into service in war make 18 to 19 knots on every voyage, is of somewhat doubtful utility.

In a report recently made by Mr. HERBERT, the chairman of the House Committee on Naval Affairs, he shows that the Navy of the United States, instead of keeping pace with the world, is not equal to our Navy of 1860. Then the fleet of the United States was composed of forty-eight sailing vessels of all classes and thirty-six steamers of all classes, making altogether eighty-four vessels. Our fleet of to-day, as shown by the Navy Register, consists of one first-rate serviceable ship, eleven second-rate ships, nineteen third-rate ships, five fourth-rate ships, and two torpedo rams.

While the United States has been investigating and printing voluminous reports, and wasting millions of dollars in repairing old vessels long since out of date, and appropriating small sums here and there for second-rate ships, at least in point of speed, the other nations of the world have been spending large sums of money in the construction of armored ships for their coast defenses and for attacking the cities on an enemy's coast. England has constructed in the last sixteen years a fleet of powerful ironclads and war ships, costing $120,000,000, and for the year 1885 appropriated $30,000,000, making a total of $150,000,000. Many of these ships cost over $3,000,000 each.

France, in the mean time, has built five ships of a very powerful class, costing $14,000,000, and sixty armored ships, at an expense of $75,000,000, or a total of $89,000,000. Russia has built five armored ships at a cost of $7,025,000, and one, the Peter the Great, cost $2,800,000. Besides, she has built twenty-five armored ships and forty-three unarmored ships and gun-boats at a cost of $35,460,000, or a total of $45,285,000. Italy has built in the Duilo class the most powerful ironclads afloat. Five of this class cost $18,500,000. She has also built ten armored ships at a cost of $9,500,000. That is a total of $28,000,000.

Germany has built five modern war ships of the King Wilhelm class at a cost of $9,330,000; ten armored ships at a cost of $9,450,000; twenty-one armored ships at a cost of $15,167,000; thirty-six unarmored ships at a cost of $12,000,000; or a total cost of $45,947,000. Austria has built thirty-two of the modern class, costing $19,000,000. Turkey has built thirteen armored and five unarmored at a cost of $17,300,000. Add together what these nations have expended for the construction of modern war ships, and it will be seen that this reaches the enormous sum of $394,532,000.

The feature of the vessels provided for in this bill is speed. If we expect to keep pace with the ships built and in course of construction by other nations, speed must be made a specialty. In a lecture delivered in London three weeks ago by W. H. White, director of naval construction and assistant controller of the British navy, on the subject of "Modern war-ships," he thus refers to the recent progress made in the speed of modern ships of war:

> Adverting to the question of speed, which, he said, was admitted to be of primary importance for all classes of ships, he showed how great had been the improvement in this respect in recent years. Fourteen knots an hour on the measured mile was almost a standard speed for large ships from 1859 to 1875. In the smaller classes of unarmored vessels speeds commonly ranged from 8 to 13 knots; and the swiftest cruisers, designed to meet the American Wampanoag class, had speeds of 15 to 16½ knots. At the present time Italian ironclads of 13,800 tons displacement had attained speeds of 18 knots per hour; and in the royal navy armored vessels of 8,000 to 10,000 tons had speeds of 16½ to 17 knots. Cruisers had speeds of 18 to 20 knots, and small torpedo craft of 19 to 25 knots. But still higher speeds were demanded, and would no doubt be attained.

One of the first authorities in the world on the subject thus gives as his opinion that a still greater speed than 20 knots is demanded. In view of this it would be unwise for us to begin to build ships of a lesser speed. Turning from England to France, we learn that the French minister of marine has recently stated publicly that the French ought to build ships with speed enough to prey on British commerce should a war occur between those powers. These facts all point to the one conclusion that the ocean warfare of the future will be largely carried on by these fast cruisers, and unless we want to be entirely behind all other nations, we should at once commence to build at least the ten provided for in this bill.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. President, this is a very important bill, indeed, and I wish to ask a question or two concerning it. I perceive that in the second section it is provided:

> That in the construction of the aforesaid vessels all of the provisions of the act of August 3, 1886, entitled "An act to increase the naval establishment," as to material for said vessels, their engines, boilers, and machinery, the contracts under which they are built, the notice of and proposals for the same, the plans, drawings, and specifications therefor, and the method of executing said contracts, shall be observed and followed, and said vessels shall be built in compliance with the terms of said act, so far as the same relate to vessels constructed under contract.

That saves the trouble of repeating in this bill the specific instructions contained in the act of last August, but I am not willing to adopt all those details as in the act of August last. The Senator from Pennsylvania asks what I object to. I object to this precisely:

> That the armor used in constructing said armored vessels and for completing said monitors shall be of the best obtainable quality and of domestic manufacture, provided contracts for furnishing the same in a reasonable time, at a reasonable price, and of the required quality, can be made with responsible parties.

I wish no proviso that will permit the purchase abroad of armor, or of shafting, or of any part thereof, for quite as important as the construction of the vessels is the securing the establishment of a plant in this country that can make vessels. The proviso leaves it perfectly open to go abroad.

Mr. CAMERON. I understand the Senator.

Mr. HAWLEY. No; the Senator does not quite understand all I am going to say, because he has not heard.

Mr. CAMERON. I understand on that point.

Mr. HAWLEY. There is another clause:

> Provided, That the Secretary of the Navy may purchase abroad only such shafting as it may be impossible to obtain in the United States in time for use in the construction of the vessels herein provided for.

We can make certain kinds of shafting to very great advantage here. What we want is the very best kind of steel shafting, such as the governments abroad require, such as the British Government requires, of compressed Whitworth forged steel. If we avail ourselves of this proviso here and think it best to contract abroad because nobody is ready to make such shafting at home, we may find ourselves with our vessels nearly ready waiting for the shafts, and Great Britain may conclude to say to Mr. Whitworth: "We will take all the shafting you have on hand: we do not choose to put the United States in a condition to fight us in the next six months." So you will be stopped from finishing your vessels and then have to go back and begin a contract with some great manufacturer in the United States for manufacturing these things.

This is precisely the same point that applies to the armor. There is no difficulty whatever in having the heaviest plates manufactured here of the very best materials if you will offer a reasonable contract to the great manufacturers.

Mr. BUTLER. May I interrupt the Senator for a moment?

Mr. HAWLEY. Certainly.

Mr. BUTLER. There is nothing in this bill or in the act of August last to which the Senator refers which prevents that being done.

Mr. HAWLEY. It does not prevent it being done, but it ought to be made mandatory that it shall be done.

Mr. CAMERON. I agree entirely with the Senator from Connecticut that this work ought to be done in this country, and if he will put his amendment in shape I will accept it.

Mr. HAWLEY. Then allow me to suggest as an amendment to section 2, in its reference to the act of August 3, 1886, providing that it shall in general govern the details, to save repeating them, the addition of the words: "Save that in all their parts they shall be of domestic manufacture."

Mr. CAMERON. Does that cover everything needed or not?

Mr. HAWLEY. That covers the point, I believe.

Mr. HALE. That covers it.

Mr. CAMERON. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. DAWES in the chair). The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAWLEY. Let me ask the Senator's attention to one more suggestion. The first words in section 5 of the act of last year are these:

> That the Secretary of the Navy shall cause one or more of the new vessels hereinbefore provided for to be constructed and one or more of the said monitors to be completed in one or more of the navy-yards of the United States.

There is nothing about that here.

Mr. CAMERON. In the first section of the bill it is provided that the vessels shall be built by contract.

Mr. HAWLEY. That takes it out of that.

Mr. CAMERON. I am willing to accept the amendment of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] also.

Mr. BUTLER. Let that be read again.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the Senator from Alabama will be read.

Mr. CAMERON. It is not necessary to read it again. I accept it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Carolina calls for the reading.

Mr. PLUMB. I should like to have the amendment read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be read.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I ask to have the whole bill reported with the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be read, and then the bill as it would stand if the amendment were adopted.

Mr. TELLER. Let us have the amendment first.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add as a new section:

> SEC. 5. In making proposals for contracts for building the vessels authorized to be constructed under this act, it shall be required that three of such vessels shall be built on or near the coast of the Pacific Ocean or the waters connecting therewith, three of them on or near the coast of the Gulf of Mexico or the waters connecting therewith, and four of them on or near the coast of the Atlantic Ocean or the waters connecting therewith, and at such places on or near such coasts or waters as the Secretary of the Navy shall provide. If it shall appear to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Navy from the biddings for said contracts when the same are opened and examined by him that said vessels can not be constructed at a fair cost on or near the coast of the Pacific Ocean or the Gulf of Mexico, he shall suspend the construction of the vessels herein required to be built on or near said coasts or either of them, until the further action of Congress, and shall report the reasons for such suspension to Congress with all convenient dispatch.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Virginia call for the reading of the whole bill?

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I am just informed that the aggregate of appropriation is not changed.

Mr. CAMERON. No.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I thought possibly some amendment might have changed the aggregate.

Mr. CAMERON. No; it is not changed.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I withdraw my call for the reading of the bill with that understanding.

Mr. PLUMB. I want to call the attention of the Senator from Pennsylvania to the very remarkable contradiction in terms between the bill and the amendment. The first section of the bill provides in the first line "that the President is hereby authorized to have constructed," &c., and this amendment leaves all that power in the hands of the Secretary of the Navy, and he becomes the medium of communication with Congress and does not act under the direction of the President in determining where these vessels shall be built nor in reporting to Congress in regard to what he is doing, either as a reason for doing or not doing.

It seems to me there ought to be some harmony between the head and the tail of this bill. Either the President ought to have this authority, or somebody else ought to have the authority, to continue through the entire operation.

Mr. HALE. That ought to be changed to conform to the original bill.

Mr. MORGAN. I hardly think the Senator from Kansas will insist on the change, considering the nature of the amendment. Of course when the President authorizes the construction of vessels of war, he does it through the Secretary of the Navy. That is the Cabinet officer who is charged with such business by law. The President is authorized to have the vessels constructed by contract. His order to the Secretary of the Navy is to have the cruisers constructed by contract. When you come to the details of construction, of course the Secretary of the Navy is the proper person to prepare the details.

My amendment relates only to the bids for the ships, and provides that in the event it is found that these vessels can not be built at a fair cost on the Pacific or on the Gulf, then he shall suspend the building of the vessels on those coasts and report to Congress the reasons for suspension.

Mr. PLUMB. I am not very apprehensive that the bill will become a law, so as to make me very particular about its terms; but at all events if it is to receive the sanction of the Senate, it ought to be harmonious in its parts to show that we are properly aware of the terms and of all the proprieties of the situation. It ought to be framed just exactly as though we were legislating with a view to action.

Mr. MORGAN. I think it is harmonious as it is; but nevertheless, if the chairman of the committee prefers the word "President"——

Mr. PLUMB. The Senator's amendment provides for a report by the Secretary of the Navy to Congress, and the President is put in the attitude of putting out contracts and having no concern about them afterward.

Mr. MORGAN. I will modify the amendment by striking out "Secretary of the Navy" and inserting "President."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alabama modifies his amendment. The question is on the adoption of the amendment as modified.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Before the money is all taken out of the Treasury by a few bills and the surplus entirely exhausted, I beg to inquire of the Committee on Naval Affairs if any provision is made in the bill introduced or is proposed to be made for war vessels on the great lakes?

Mr. HALE. The companion bill to this bill reported by the Senator from Pennsylvania was reported by me on the same day, and I gave notice then that I would call it up at an early day, which I propose to do. That bill covers the other features of floating ships or batteries, or rafts for harbor defense and of torpedo-boats for the same purpose, and torpedo appliances, and also makes provision for the building of light-draught gunboats, such as may be used on the Western Lakes. This bill deals only with the cruisers, and, as the Senator from Pennsylvania has said, largely with the view of securing the most rapid war cruisers that sail on the waters of the globe. The feature alluded to by the Senator from Nebraska is found in the bill which I reported, and which will come up at a very early day, whenever the Senate will consent to it.

Mr. BUTLER. The Senator from Maine would be justified in saying that both bills received the unanimous sanction of the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. HALE. Yes, they were considered, and it was thought better to divide the matters and put them into two bills.

Mr. VAN WYCK. How much does the bill the Senator has in charge call for?

Mr. HALE. About fifteen millions. That includes armament.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I was only getting at that with a view of ascertaining whether we can afford to appropriate quite as much as this bill of the Senator from Pennsylvania is advocating does and have anything left for the great lakes. We need protection there evidently as much as upon the coast.

We are now making provision for probably all the surplus and a little beyond, except the amusement part to which my friend from Kansas referred, for he seems to think very much of this is done for amusement. The other part is done considerably to draw money from the Treasury, the depleting process, because we find that within a few days, with scarcely a pause long enough to allow a question as to the amount of these appropriations, we are called upon to appropriate $71,000,000, which is far more, I think, than our surplus, which seems to be a sort of a nightmare, an incubus.

Mr. HAWLEY. Will the Senator be kind enough to specify the items? I do not remember them now.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I will specify. The surplus seems to rest as a sort of incubus or nightmare on statesmen in this body and out of it.

Mr. HALE. Will the Senator allow me to call his attention to one feature?

Mr. VAN WYCK. Certainly.

Mr. HALE. Supposing the bills that were passed the other day from the committee represented by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY] become laws, and this bill becomes law, and the bill that I have referred to reported by myself becomes a law, and the aggregate is $71,000,000 in all, if the Senator has figured the amount aright, let me call his attention to the fact that it is by no means an appropriation of that amount, or anything like it, for any one year.

It does not exhaust the surplus like an outright appropriation that would be spent in a year when the surplus has accumulated; but these appropriations are made in gross, because it has been learned by the experiments we have passed through that much better and cheaper contracts can be made by the Government if they have at their disposal all the money. These appropriations would run through a period ranging from three to five or six years, and would only interfere with the surplus to that extent.

Mr. VAN WYCK. The surplus is becoming somewhat problematical, because distinguished Senators on this floor have stated that it is extremely doubtful whether there will be any surplus the coming year; and with that fact staring us in the face the greatest amount of liberality in figures is indulged in just at that time.

The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY] secured the passage a few days ago of two bills—twins, I think they were called—evidently appearing about the same time and running their race about the same time; twin bills, twin in point of time and twin in amount, each $8,000,000, and twins for effecting the same object; that was to get some steel manufactories to make steel, and yet not a gun built out of the $16,000,000. True, $1,000,000 were appropriated for a gun factory and the rest for the manufacture of steel, and the manufacturers must have their plant. There was $16,000,000, and not a gun in sight.

Mr. HAWLEY. The Senator will remember that the money is to be given when the steel is produced.

Mr. VAN WYCK. But the gun is not made then.

Mr. HAWLEY. It is if the gun factory goes on.

Mr. VAN WYCK. But the million dollars is appropriated for the gun factory and the other millions for the production of steel; and after we get the steel, and the steel is a success, and the steal out of the Treasury is a success, and the manufacture is made, then they will consider the question of making the gun. It is a steal on the Government, as the Senator from Kansas suggests. [Laughter.]

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. How do you spell it?

Mr. VAN WYCK. That will be referred to the Civil Service Commission. Sixteen million dollars and not a gun, and the probability is you will not have any when the steel is manufactured. Then we voted $18,000,000 the other day in one fell swoop to repay the States of this Union the war taxes they paid a number of years ago, and now we are to vote $15,000,000 for ten vessels that will sail 20 knots an hour. So far we have $49,000,000. Then $2,000,000 for extra speed and $5,000,000 for the armament of these vessels, and that makes $56,000,000. The Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] says that his bill calls for $15,000,000 more for torpedo-boats on the lakes, making $71,000,000. That will use up the surplus.

The Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] says there is no danger of passing these bills. That undoubtedly is so. I presume these bills are not introduced and sought to be passed with any expectation, or hope, or probable desire that they should become laws. But that does not justify the passing of our time and the recklessness which we manifest in dealing with millions and millions which are not now within reach any more than the gun is within reach that is proposed to be made hereafter.

Thus is the surplus got rid of; but that is not the object. The people of this country are not complaining at the few million dollars surplus in the Treasury to-day, as I have had occasion to state once before, but they complain of the enormous taxation which draws money from their pockets, not over-well filled, and puts it in the Treasury of the United States. The people are asking that the sources shall be dried up; and not that indiscriminately and without any regard to the public interests the Treasury shall be thrown wide open and have the draining process there.

But this is done evidently with another object, that there may be no excuse to stop taxation. When the people of this country are asking to be relieved from taxation they point to the Treasury being full, full to overflowing; so that there may be some relief in internal revenues and customs duties and taxes; and the point is to stop the mouths of the people by taking away, by drying up that argument, so that they can be told "the Treasury is empty, and therefore this taxation must go on." This is the way you propose to drain the Treasury and empty it of its resources.

I desire merely to call the attention of the Senate to this matter. Then we shall be told that we shall not be able to pay the pensions to our disabled and impoverished soldiers because there is no money in the Treasury. Millions of dollars can be paid to men for steel and ships and fortifications, and then the answer will be that pensions can not be paid; we must be niggardly in paying the men who made a bulwark against those who sought to take the national life. The answer to them will be there is no money in the Treasury to pay them. The better way to make provision for the next war, come when it may, would be by a generous liberality, or rather honesty on the part of the Government toward its defenders.

I am admonished by my friend from Kansas that this is principally for amusement; but it is also for the other reasons I have suggested. I think we should pause a moment, and if this surplus is all to be taken from the Treasury we should, at least, make an honest, fair, equitable distribution among the ships, the fortifications, the steel, and the guns, because the residue is not sufficient to go round and be bestowed on all these objects.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. Mr. President, I believe I may be classified among those who endeavored to take away what is called the national life. Since the Federal Government has become a nation, I am willing to vote the money that shall make it appear so everywhere. I am a member of the committee referred to by the Senator from Nebraska, and I have been willing to vote, not the money of the State that he represents so much as I have been willing to vote the money of the State I represent, for the national defense.

I think, sir, that it is time to stop this kind of discussion when men shall be called to account on this floor for trying to take the life of the nation when it was not a nation, and when they are willing to recognize to-day the fact that it is a nation, and to protect it as such.

I would not give one Southern man to-day who is in favor of the United States Government for all the brigadier-generals of the Union army who are opposed to it. That is intended not to be personal, but to indicate what the national feeling of the Southern man is.

Every time we suggest from that committee the construction of a navy we are answered that it will take all the surplus in the Treasury. Suppose it shall, what other purpose are you going to give it for? We have tried to give it to the people of this country for educational purposes, and they have refused on the other side of this Capitol to allow us to do it. It is there and we want to give it out for some great public purpose.

I hear that we are receiving insults from a government that never was kindly to us; whose people, with a few exceptions, were never kindly to us. I can see no better use to make of that surplus than to appropriate it for the purpose of constructing a navy which will show that the United States Government is equal on the sea, as we know it is on the land, to any other government in the world.

Seventy-one million dollars is the surplus in the Treasury, we are told. How else do you propose—the Senator will allow me to address myself to him through the President of the Senate—how else do you propose to dispose of that surplus, if it be a surplus? What do you propose to do with it, Mr. President? A committee that has now for three, yes for four, years labored with this question is held here to an accountability by a Senator who has given no reason for anything except that the money comes by and through taxation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, it becomes the duty of the Chair to lay before the Senate the unfinished business, being the bill (S. 2288) to incorporate the Atlantic and Pacific Ship-Railway Company, and for other purposes.

Mr. CAMERON. I move that that be laid aside in order to continue this bill. It will take only a few minutes longer.

Mr. VEST. I hope not. Let us go on with the unfinished business.

Mr. ALLISON. I hope the Senator from Pennsylvania will allow this bill to go over until to-morrow.

Mr. CAMERON. I will not if I can help it. I move that the unfinished business be laid aside temporarily.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That requires unanimous consent.

Mr. VEST. I object.

Mr. CAMERON. Then I move that the consideration of this naval bill be continued.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Pennsylvania moves to lay aside the pending business.

Mr. HARRIS. That motion is not in order. He may move to postpone the further consideration of the unfinished business.

Mr. CAMERON. That is practically what I did, but the Chair did not put the motion as I made it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Pennsylvania moves to postpone the consideration of the pending business.

Mr. VEST. That permanently displaces the unfinished business.

Mr. CAMERON. We can take it up right away again.

Mr. HALE. Let the Senator from Pennsylvania embody with his motion an hour when it will take effect—postponement until to-morrow at 2 o'clock.

Mr. CAMERON. That will do; I put it in that form.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Pennsylvania moves to postpone the pending business until to-morrow at 2 o'clock. [Putting the question.] The noes appear to have it.

Mr. CAMERON. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HALE. Let the Chair explain what the measure is that is to be laid aside until to-morrow, not that which has been before the Senate for the last hour.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 2288) to incorporate the Atlantic and Pacific Ship-Railway Company, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is the pending business, and the motion is to postpone this pending business until to-morrow, on which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BERRY (when the name of Mr. JONES, of Arkansas, was called). My colleague is paired with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. HARRISON].

ATLANTIC AND PACIFIC SHIP-RAILWAY.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 2288) to incorporate the Atlantic and Pacific Ship-Railway Company, and for other purposes.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I believe I had the floor on the proposition that has been postponed until to-morrow by the vote just taken of 28 to 24.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator claim the floor on the pending amendment to the bill before the Senate?

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I think I will claim the floor, as I have the right to do. I addressed the Chair, and nobody else did.

I desire to say this as my parting salute to the Navy bill, that there is a record which will show that the American Senate preferred to take up the Eads ship-railway bill to doing that which American sentiment demands to-day, to wit, the construction of a navy.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST].

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, I should think it to be unjust to the public service to continue the debate on this question any longer if it could be reasonably avoided. My purpose in taking the floor this morning is to try to arrive at something a little more definite about what this plan is, and the reason for our acting upon it under the concession from the Government of Mexico.

When I called the other day upon the Senator from Missouri to put into the RECORD or give me a copy of this concession, the Senator handed me a grant that was not signed, neither had it any date. I now ask the Senator whether or not that grant is really signed in the original, or whether it was merely a concession that was proposed to be made.

Mr. VEST. I intended to answer fully the question of the Senator from Alabama when I came to discuss the amendment which he had offered; but as I did not do it before I will do it now.

The concession to which he and the Senator from Vermont referred the other day as having been signed by Porfirio Diaz, of Mexico, and Captain Eads, and copies of which had been furnished, was the original concession. After that, from time to time, amendments mere made to that concession. I have those amendments, together with the original concession, now here for the inspection of the Senator if he desires. The paper to which he refers, and which I furnished him, and he put into the RECORD, is the sum and substance, the total of all the concessions and amendments made by Mexico to Captain Eads, and that concession is now in force. The simple reason why it is not signed is that it embodies in a convenient form the original concession and the amendments, and the Senator will at once perceive that the signatures could not be put to it for the reason that the original concession was signed by Colonel Diaz and Captain Eads, and the various amendments were signed by the officers of Mexico, the president of the senate, and the speaker of the house, I believe, and the minister of foreign affairs, and by the president; by different persons from those who signed the original concession, but all of them are equally authoritative and obligatory.

Mr. MORGAN. What I wanted to know was what the original concession was. I wanted to see the paper.

Mr. VEST. The paper which is in the RECORD and which I furnished the Senate.

Mr. MORGAN. That is not signed.

Mr. VEST. I will send for all the papers if the Senator makes any point about that.

Mr. MORGAN. I want to know before I act on a concession from the Government of Mexico what it is. This, as I understand, is a mere compilation or digest made by somebody of the various concessions which have been made by the Government of Mexico to the Eads Ship-Railway Company. Whether it contains everything that is in those concessions or not, I do not know. This is the interpretation put by Mr. Eads, or by whoever made the compilation, upon what the concessions mean. The parts of the concession are arranged here in articles from 1 to 34, and now we are informed by the Senator from Missouri that in this digest is contained the substance of various concessions.

I do not wish to act upon this matter in the dark. I wish to understand our relations with Mexico precisely, for a question has been raised here whether we can afford to adopt this concession and make it a part of the legislation of the United States Government as it is spread out in the RECORD, or as it actually exists. For my part I am not willing to vote for any bill that adopts this concession so as to make it in any sense obligatory upon the United States through its acts of legislation. We should commit ourselves to doctrines or principles and results that I think would be extremely unfortunate if we should adopt the concession without any reservation of the rights of the United States Government in respect to the matters contained in it.

I supposed from the nature of this paper that it was put into the RECORD from the appearance of it here; that instead of its being the original concession, article by article, with the proper arrangement of the different articles, one following upon the other and referring to the other, it was a mere digest prepared by somebody of what he personally concluded or believed was the original concession made by Mexico to Captain Eads.

This question becomes of more importance when we consider the point that I raised the other day—whether or not the eighth article of the Gadsden treaty is now in force as between these two Governments. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR], when he was last on the floor, expressed some regret that I should have a feeling of unkindness toward Mexico to such a degree as to insist upon our rights to what he concludes is an abandoned section of the Gadsden treaty. I confess that I was taken a little surprise when the question was asked whether I had an unkind feeling or sentiment toward Mexico in this matter, for surely in no vote or speech have I ever made in the Senate of the United States an unkind reference to that republic. On the contrary, my opinions and feelings in respect to that republic are very kind.

Mr. VEST. The Senator will permit me to interrupt him. He has intimated, if not said, that the concession from Mexico is simply a digest. Here is the original concession together with the amendments translated by Señor Romero, the Mexican minister at this place, with his certificate:

I have examined the printed English translation of the contract entered into between the Mexican Government and the representative of Mr. James B. Eads, signed at the city of Mexico May 2, 1885—

That is the original concession—and the manuscript translation of the decree of the Mexican Congress of December 15, of the same year, approving said contract with some modifications and additions, and have carefully compared them with the original Spanish text of said documents hereto attached, and with the slight changes which I have made to the English translation of the same I find that they substantially agree.

M. ROMERO.

WASHINGTON, D. C., February 20, 1886.

Here are all these documents at the service of the Senate, and they show the concession to be as printed in the RECORD.

Mr. MORGAN. Shall I take the papers?

Mr. VEST. Certainly; they are at the service of the Senator and the Senate. I hand them to him.

Mr. MORGAN. The original of the first concession is here in the Spanish language, but I make a very poor hand at handling that tongue. There is a translation of the concession made May 2, 1885, signed Carlos Pacheco and E. A. Mexia, who, I suppose, were some committee or commission authorized by the Government of Mexico, General Carlos Pacheco, secretary of state to the department of public works, representing the executive of the Union of the one part, and Citizen Enrique A. Mexia representing James B. Eads of the other part. That consists of thirty-two articles. In this paper that we have here there are thirty-four. The next paper appears to be an act of the Congress of that republic. The next concession, of which there is a translation, seems to consist of sixteen articles, if I read it right, and in the digest which is put into the RECORD there are thirty-four articles. Thirty-two seem to be contained in the first concession signed by Pacheco and Mexia, and then added to them are sixteen other articles, if I get the number right; so that there are fourteen articles of the concession between Mexico and Eads that have not yet been put into the RECORD. Of course I am speaking in haste about it, having now for the first time had an opportunity of seeing the papers.

Now I will ask the Secretary to read this last concession, in order that it may go into the RECORD, the translation of it which I believe Mr. Romero certifies to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MANDERSON in the chair). The paper sent up by the Senator from Alabama will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

[Seal of the department of public works, "colonization, industry, and commerce of Mexico" repeated on each folio].

The President of the Republic has been pleased to address me the following decree:

Porfirio Diaz, Constitutional President of the United Mexican States, to the inhabitants thereof, know ye:

That the Congress of the Union has seen fit to decree as follows:

The Congress of the United Mexican States hereby decrees sole article—the contract is hereby approved which was concluded on the 2d day of May, 1885, by the citizen-general, Carlos Pacheco, secretary of state and of the department of public works as the representative of the federal executive, and Mr. James B. Eads, modifying and amplifying the contract approved by the law of May 28, 1881, for the construction of a railway for the transportation of vessels across the Isthmus of Tehuantepec, with the following modifications:

First. Article 6 is to read as follows:

"The lands comprised within the said zone, and if they are public lands they shall be ceded by the government to Eads or to the company without any remuneration whatever, and if they are not they may be purchased by the aforesaid Eads or the company, according to the laws relative to the taking of property for purposes of public utility; with the understanding that in either case they shall be devoted solely and exclusively to the service of the railway. Nevertheless, if it shall be possible, and be deemed proper to establish settlements on any portion of said lands the company may do so, by permission from the executive, provided that it conform to the rules which he shall lay down in pursuance of the laws."

Second. At the end of divisions 1 and 2 of paragraph 2 of article 10 shall be added the words "and order of that of finance."

Paragraph 3 of the said article 10 shall read as follows:

"Vessels, passengers, and merchandise passing over the railway shall be free, during the whole time for which the concession is made, of duties of all kinds, both general and local, with the exception of the transit duty, for which they shall pay, after the conclusion of the work, and during the entire period of the concession, at the rate of 15 cents per passenger on each passage collected by the company; one-half on the value of silver or gold in bars or in dust, and on that of precious stones, and 10 cents per ton on each ton on which the company collects toll."

Third. Instead of the first paragraph of article 13, the following shall be substituted:

"The enterprise shall publish and send annually to the department of public works the schedules of prices adopted by it, and it shall neither reduce nor increase such prices without previous notice to the public, which notice shall be published fifteen days beforehand in case of a reduction and two months beforehand in case of an increase."

Paragraph 2 of the aforesaid article 13 shall be reconstructed so as to read thus:

"All the prices specified in the aforesaid schedules shall be payable in gold, excepting those payable on Mexican vessels and passengers, which shall be paid in hard dollars of the national (i. e., Mexican) mintage, in order that they may enjoy a reduction equivalent to the amount of the exchange on Mexican gold or silver."

Fourth. Article 14 is to read thus:

"In the dry-docks, that may be constructed by the enterprise, the said Eads or the said company shall have the right to collect such prices as may be agreed upon from the owners of vessels who may desire to take them thither for the purpose of having them careened or repaired. The Government may make use of said docks for careening and repairing vessels belonging to it without paying any remuneration whatever. This use shall be subject to such rules as may be established by the company and as may be approved by the department of public works."

Fifth. As the third division of article 16 the following shall be inserted:

"3. If the company shall voluntarily and maliciously transport arms or munitions of war belonging to any foreign nation, without proper permission from the Government of Mexico, it shall be liable to a fine of from two to ten thousand dollars, and shall, moreover, be responsible for such damages and injuries as may be occasioned by this act, if, by reason thereof, the neutrality laws shall be violated."

Sixth. For the second paragraph of article 18 the following shall be substituted:

"The company may sell and in any manner dispose of and transfer its shares, bonds, and other obligations. The creditors of the company shall have action against its property only, and the bondholders, directors, and employés of the enterprise shall be exempt from all personal responsibility on account of the debts of the company, except in case of fraud, deception, or bribery."

Seventh. In the second paragraph of article 22 the word "may" shall be inserted, the said paragraph consequently reading as follows:

"The railway, with its works, buildings, material, equipments, and appurtenances, may be taken by the Government for two-thirds of its value, payable with the net proceeds of its working, interest being paid to the enterprise at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum on the amount due it, until the final payment shall have been made."

The last paragraph of the aforesaid article 22 is likewise reconstructed, as follows:

"The improvements in the ports, such as wharves, docks, locks, and lighthouses, shall, at the expiration of ninety-nine years, become the property of the nation, no compensation being paid therefor."

Eighth. Article 23 shall be worded as follows:

"The Mexican Government pledges itself to protect Eads or the company in the construction of all the works mentioned and in the enjoyment thereof when they shall be completed, and for this purpose it shall furnish the proper force by land or sea without any charge to the enterprise."

Ninth. In article 25, as a third cause of forfeiture, the following shall be added:

"3. Because the company, knowingly and intentionally, and not being constrained by vis major, transports by the railway vessels of war or troops of any foreign nation, without the previous constitutional permission, officially communicated by the government to the enterprise."

Tenth. Paragraph 3 of article 26 is thus reconstructed:

"If the forfeiture shall be caused by alienation, hypothecation, or transfer to a foreign government, or for having received such government as a partner, or because the company, knowingly and intentionally, and not being constrained by vis major, shall transport vessels of war or troops belonging to any foreign nation, without the previous constitutional permission of Mexico, in addition to the nullity of the act and the forfeiture of the present contract, the nation shall at once enter upon the ownership of the route, of its accessories, and lands, without the company's having any right to an indemnity of any kind."

Eleventh. For article 27 the following shall be substituted:

"ART. 27. The Government of Mexico pledges itself to furnish annually, as a loan, which is to be repaid, the amount necessary to make up, as the sixth part of the annual gross proceeds of the entire income of the enterprise, for the working of its railways, telegraphs, and docks, the sum of $1,250,000.

"This obligation shall be binding as soon as, after the completion of the ship-railway, it shall have been put in operation, and shall have transported across the isthmus, with entire safety, a vessel weighing, with its cargo, at least 3,000 tons.

"The advance or loan which the Government of Mexico binds itself to furnish to the enterprise, in order thereby to guarantee the payment of interest to the capital therein invested, shall only extend to the first fifteen years of the operation of the ship-railway, which period shall be reckoned from the day on which the first vessel weighing at least 1,000 tons shall have been transported across the isthmus, according to the terms of the foregoing paragraph."

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I understood the Secretary to read that the Government of Mexico was binding itself to pay something. Is there anything here to show that?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alabama has the floor. His attention is called by the Senator from Virginia to the matter being read.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I ask the Senator from Alabama whether there is anything here to show that the Government of Mexico binds itself to anything?

Mr. MORGAN. Yes; I understand that the Government of Mexico binds itself to make a grant of land to this railroad company.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I should like to see the paper.

Mr. MORGAN. It is being read now.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. No, sir; the paper that is being read is not one that binds Mexico.

Mr. MORGAN. It is in that paper.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. That is only a paper that binds the Government of the United States.

Mr. MORGAN. It is in that paper, Mr. President. If there is any such publication at all, it is in the paper that is being read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will proceed with the reading.

The Secretary resumed the reading, as follows:

"The Government of Mexico may, as it may elect, deliver, in cash or in special bonds issued by it and bearing interest at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum, the amount which it is annually to loan to the enterprise in virtue of the obligation contracted by it. The said bonds, if issued, shall be payable in twenty years from the date of their issue.

"The enterprise assigns exclusively, for the purpose of repaying to the Government of Mexico the sums which that government shall have advanced to it in virtue of the provisions of this article, the sixth part of the excess that may at any time accrue in its net revenue from the operation of the ship-railway and of its telegraphs and docks over and above the sum of $3,750,000 in gold in one year."

Twelfth. Paragraphs 1 and 2 of article 28 are made to read as follows:

"Eads or the company may grant a reduction amounting to 25 per cent. of the rates authorized by article 11 to the merchandise, passengers, and merchant vessels of the nation, or of foreign nations whose governments shall lend it their aid either by means of money or guarantees.

"This reduction shall last for a term of thirty years, and in all cases Mexican merchandise and passengers and the national marine shall enjoy the same franchises. The enterprise is also authorized to grant the same reduction to the war marine of said nation or nations."

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I ask again——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Virginia?

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I ask the Chair——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alabama has the floor, and the paper is being read as part of his remarks.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. Did not the Secretary read "said nation or nations?" That bill is a little too broad——

Mr. MORGAN. As I am not in charge——

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. It is a little too broad read in the way it is when we are asked to pass upon it here to-day.

Mr. MORGAN. As I am not in charge of the bill, but was arguing some reasons why the bill ought to be amended, I will refer the Senator from Virginia to the Senator from Missouri for an answer. I am not prepared to answer that proposition.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. My answer to it will be a negative vote.

Mr. VEST. This is not a bill, Mr. President. This is the concession on the part of Mexico to Captain Eads. It is not pending here. It is being read as a part of the remarks of the Senator from Alabama. We are not asked to vote on it. It is merely a concession.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. But if it is being read to give the Senator from Alabama an opportunity to make remarks we know that he does not lack much opportunity. He is always ready to make remarks, and he makes them elegantly; they are ready to go into the RECORD without even revision. But when a bill is being read of the language of this that involves a little more, in my judgment, than we seem to comprehend here, I have an apprehension that I ought to call attention to the language of it as the Secretary reads it. "Nation or nations." I am not ready to consider a bill of that sort, because if it is to come here at all in open session it should come in the way that it ought to go under this rule of the American House of Lords, to executive session, that which I despise. We have laid away to-day the very suggestion of an American navy to take up this thing that I know, or think I know, the American people will despise. It is too general in its terms. It is to all intents and purposes an extradition treaty with England, and it is brought here in open session; and yet the fact is admitted by those who bring it here, and the Senator who is a member of that committee says that the Senator from Missouri is the sponsor of the bill.

Mr. MORGAN. The Senator from Virginia is quite mistaken about my being a member of the committee. I am merely trying to find out what is in the bill and upon what it is predicated, and am therefore having a paper read that I think shows what the bill is.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. Mr. President——

Mr. MORGAN. I can not yield any longer to the Senator from Virginia to discuss the question of the bill itself, because I have the floor upon it, and the Secretary was reading the matter which I might have read myself just as well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alabama has the floor, and if he declines to yield further the reading will be proceeded with.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I beg pardon. I did not understand that the Senator declined to yield. But I never understood the Senator to have the floor when he was sitting down.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Virginia?

Mr. MORGAN. No, sir; I decline to yield any further at present.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair so understood.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alabama declines to yield the floor.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I have interrupted the reading of that bill. The Senator from Alabama does not have the floor and can not have it unless he stands and claims it, and he has disclaimed it by saying that the Senator from Missouri was the sponsor of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state to the Senator from Virginia that the Senator from Alabama had the floor and sent to the desk of the Secretary to be read a certain paper, which is being read as part of his remarks. He has the floor in his own right and declines to yield.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. Does the Chair say that I have not the right to ask the Senator——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Virginia will please suspend his remarks until the Chair has stated the position of affairs. The Senator from Alabama declines to yield further to the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. Would the Chair, or the Senator from Alabama either, say that I did not have the right to ask the Senator from Alabama and have an answer as to what is meant by the phrase "all nations" in a paper that he has produced here?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will proceed with the reading of the paper.

The Secretary resumed as follows:

But with the proviso that the transportation of vessels, troops, or munitions of war shall not be understood to have been consented to, in any case, without the express permission of the Government of Mexico officially communicated to the enterprise.

The governments granting the aforesaid aid shall have the right to be represented in the board of directors of the company, without any power save that of being present at the examination of the accounts for the purpose of receiving the share of the profits that belongs to them by two-ninths of the whole number of its members, these representatives enjoying the same emoluments and prerogatives as the other directors.

Thirteenth. For article 29 the following shall be substituted:

"When the advances made to the enterprise by the Government of Mexico and the other governments that aid it shall have been refunded, and the net earnings shall be sufficient to pay a sum equivalent to 10 per cent. in gold of the total indebtedness of the company, represented by the shares and bonds that it may have issued, the directors appointed by the Government of Mexico and by the other governments lending the aforesaid aid shall prepare a schedule of reduced prices, provided that the reduction of income that may result will permit the payment of the said 10 per cent.; and if this new schedule shall be approved by the Government of Mexico and the other governments it shall remain in force thereafter, although it may be afterward increased whenever the net earnings of the enterprise shall prove to be insufficient for the payment of the aforesaid 10 per cent., one-half of the total earnings shall, in all cases, be considered as net profits.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I ask again whether I understood the Secretary aright. Did he say "shall be approved by the Government of Mexico?"

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read again the part of the document referred to by the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I think it is only a sentence back. I want to know whether we are legislating here with the permission of the Government of Mexico.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will turn to the part mentioned and read it again.

The Secretary read as follows:

And if this new schedule shall be approved by the Government of Mexico and the other governments.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. "And if." Is that right?

The Secretary continued to read, as follows:

It shall remain in force thereafter, although it may be afterwards increased whenever the net earnings of the enterprise shall prove to be insufficient for the payment of the aforesaid 10 per cent., one-half of the total earnings shall, in all cases, be considered as net profits.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I ask again, did I understand the Secretary to read, "and the other governments?"

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The part referred to will be again read.

The Secretary again read the last clause of the thirteenth article.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reading will be proceeded with.

The Secretary resumed and concluded the reading of the paper, as follows:

Fourteenth. Article 30 is to be reconstructed so as to read as follows:

"The transit duty mentioned in article 10 shall be collected in Mexican hard dollars, in the form and on the terms that the government shall order by agreement with the enterprise; and this fund shall be appropriated, so far as may be necessary, to the amortization either of the main share of capital that shall be found chargeable to the governments as a part of the deficit referred to in article 27, or of the interest on the bonds therein mentioned, without prejudice to such other means of payment as may be provided for this purpose in the federal budget."

Fifteenth. For article 31 the following shall be substituted:

"The company may establish its board of directors in any city in the republic or in a foreign country, but in the latter case it shall be obliged to keep at this capital an attorney, instructed and paid, for the purpose of maintaining an understanding with the federal government and other authorities in all matters relating to the execution of the present contract."

Sixteenth. The enterprise shall communicate to the Government of Mexico the text of any contracts that it may conclude with foreign governments.

IGNACIO POMBO, Deputy President.
ROBERTO NUÑEZ, Deputy Secretary.
MIGUEL UTRILLA, Senator President.
GUILLERMO DE LANDA Y ESCANDON, Senator Secretary.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. What did I understand that last name to be?

Mr. DOLPH, I ask the Senator from Alabama to yield to me that I may submit a conference report.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I suppose it is perfectly apparent that I am opposed to this bill. I just wanted to know what that name was, and I believe I had the floor for that purpose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will again read the name referred to.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I wish he would, or the Senator from Alabama.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Missouri will kindly return the paper to the desk.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I want to know whether this is a treaty or a bill.

Mr. VEST. It is a concession from the Government of Mexico to Captain Eads.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. And a concession I am not ready to make.

Mr. VEST. What has been read is an act of the Mexican Congress.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will again read the name indicated.

The Secretary read as follows:

Guillermo de Landa y Escandon, senator secretary.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alabama has the floor.

Mr. DOLPH. I hope the Senator from Alabama will yield to me that I may submit a conference report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. MORGAN. Yes; for a conference report.

NORTHERN PACIFIC RAILROAD LANDS.

Mr. DOLPH. The conference committee on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (S. 2172) restoring to the United States certain of the lands granted to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company to aid in the construction of a railroad from Lake Superior to Puget Sound, and to restore the same to settlement, and for other purposes, submit a report thereon.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The report will be read.

Mr. DOLPH. I move that the Senate further insist on its disagreement, and ask for a conference.

Mr. PLUMB. Before the report is read or any motion is made by the committee of conference, I should like to inquire of the Senator from Oregon what has been the occasion for the seemingly great delay which has occurred since the time this matter was before the Senate on a former occasion? At that time we were advised that the bill had been misplaced by the House conferees and steps were taken on behalf of the House to obtain from the Senate a verified copy of the bill in order that the conference might proceed with its work. An important matter as it is and one which has been pending for a long time, I should be glad to have the Senator state what has been the occasion of this somewhat extraordinary delay.

Mr. DOLPH. I think the inquiry is a pertinent one. It was on the 4th of February that the Senate complied with the last request of the House in connection with the bill; that is, to indorse upon the substitute copy of the bill the order appointing conferees on the part of the Senate. I can assure the Senator that it has been no fault of the managers on the part of the Senate. I have been several times over to the other House. I saw two of the managers on the part of the House immediately after that action was taken by the Senate and urged that something be done. This morning the managers on the part of the Senate addressed a communication to the managers on the part of the House, which I will ask to have read, and which will explain the whole matter. I will state that within a few minutes after that letter was delivered to the chairman of the managers on the part of the House, and within the last thirty minutes, the bill was sent over to the clerk of the Committee on Public Lands.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator desire to have the letter first read?

Mr. DOLPH. Yes, sir; before the report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The letter will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

SENATE CHAMBER, Washington, D. C., February 14, 1887.

GENTLEMEN: On the 4th instant the Senate complied with the last request of the House of Representatives concerning Senate bill 2172, restoring to the United States certain of the lands granted to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company, to aid in the construction of a railroad from Lake Superior to Puget Sound, and to restore the lands to settlement, and for other purposes, by indorsing the action of the Senate agreeing to the conference asked by the House upon the amendment of the House to said bill on the duplicate and engrossed copy of the said amendment, and returning papers to the House of Representatives.

We suppose that the substitute for the original bill became shortly afterwards complete. Since then we have heard nothing officially or unofficially concerning the matter, although we immediately renewed our request for the possession of the bill to enable us to submit the conference report in the Senate. We can not comprehend the cause of delay, as we do not understand that there is any difference of opinion between the managers on the part of the Senate, and the managers on the part of the House as to what shall be done to secure the submission of the conference report. If there is any difference of opinion upon this point please inform us; if not, kindly send the bill by the clerk of the Committee on Public Lands, or adopt such other method of transmission as you are advised is proper.

Respectfully yours,

J. N. DOLPH,
H. M. TELLER,
F. M. COCKRELL,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
T. R. COBB,
H. S. VAN EATON,
L. E. PAYSON,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. PLUMB. The reason why this delay is a proper subject of suggestion and inquiry is, that all the time while this is going on the Northern Pacific Railroad Company is constructing additional mileage of road, and thereby earning, to use a phrase commonly in use in regard to such transactions, more land of the United States, and the wise and beneficent purpose of the act of forfeiture is being defeated. I have no doubt by reason of the delay that has occurred, since the last session of Congress to the present moment of time, a million acres of land have, at least measurably if not finally, passed from under the control of the Government of the United States; and whether that land has become the absolute property of the railroad company is one of those things that can not be told perhaps in advance of the decision of the court; but at all events the right of the United States has been qualified thereto. For this reason, as a matter of very great public moment, the question of delay is an exceedingly important one.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The conference report will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 2172) restoring to the United States certain of the lands granted to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company to aid in the construction of a railroad from Lake Superior to Puget Sound, and to restore the same to settlement, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have been unable to agree.

J. N. DOLPH,
H. M. TELLER,
F. M. COCKRELL,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
T. R. COBB,
H. S. VAN EATON,
L. E. PAYSON,
Managers on the part of the House.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oregon moves that the Senate further insist on its disagreement, and ask for a further conference with the House of Representatives on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the Presiding Officer was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. DOLPH, Mr. TELLER, and Mr. COCKRELL were appointed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 3160) to amend section 533 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

The message also announced that the House had passed a concurrent resolution for the printing of 15,000 additional copies of the Report on Internal Commerce, by William F. Switzler, Chief of the Bureau of Statistics, being part 2 of the Report on Commerce and Navigation; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (S. 722) for increase of pension to Mrs. Ellen M. Boggs;
A bill (S. 773) granting a pension to M. Louise Butler;
A bill (S. 1570) granting a pension to Mary Ann Vars;
A bill (S. 1673) granting a pension to Charles G. Paris;
A bill (S. 1825) granting a pension to Elizabeth Forgey;
A bill (S. 2045) granting a pension to Mrs. Sarah Hamilton;
A bill (S. 2210) granting a pension to Anna Wright;
A bill (S. 2216) for the relief of Mrs. Elizabeth Rice;
A bill (S. 2393) granting a pension to Anna M. Marshall;
A bill (S. 2708) for the relief of Maria L. Strong; and
A bill (S. 2935) granting a pension to Robert Baxter.

ATLANTIC AND PACIFIC SHIP-RAILWAY.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 2288) to incorporate the Atlantic and Pacific Ship-Railway Company, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MANDERSON). The Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] has the floor.

Mr. MORGAN. The reason why I have been so careful to have the concession between the Government of Mexico and Mr. Eads spread upon the record of our debates is that this whole bill is predicated upon that concession. The preamble to the bill recites that—

Whereas the Government of Mexico has granted unto James B. Eads, of Saint Louis, Mo., or to such company as he may organize, a concession containing certain powers, rights, and privileges in the matter of the construction and operation of a ship-railway across the Isthmus of Tehuantepec, with an accessory railway, lines of telegraph, and water approaches, and has authorized said Eads to obtain a charter for said company, either in Mexico or elsewhere: Therefore,

Be it enacted, &c.

Whenever we shall pass this bill upon that predicate we, of course, recognize that concession as being entirely consistent with the rights of the people of the United States and with the wishes and purposes of the Government of the United States.

I have argued before the Senate, much to the surprise, it appears, of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR], that we have certain existing treaty rights with the Government of Mexico which ought to be preserved in the amendment which I have had the honor to present before the Senate. The Senator takes issue with me upon the present existence of those treaty rights. Suppose he is correct in the view that we have no treaty rights under the Gadsden treaty in respect of any isthmian transit across the Isthmus of Tehuantepec, the question immediately arises, would the Government of the United States through its legislative authorities make itself a party to a concession which so radically disposes of our rights in the use of that canal in a great many particulars, and which shuts us out from all access either by treaty or otherwise hereafter, for the purpose of securing any advantages that our very near neighbor may be able to afford to countries very far distant from us and across the seas? The question only becomes so much the more important as the Senator from Massachusetts brings forward arguments of any value to show that these treaty rights are not now subsisting.

Let me call the attention of the Senate to articles 31 and 32 of the concession, and see whether we are willing to enact them in this bill to charter the railroad company. I read articles 31 and 32:

ART. 31. The company may establish its board of directors in any city in the republic or in a foreign country, but, in the latter case, it shall be obliged to keep at this capital an attorney, instructed and paid, for the purpose of maintaining an understanding with the federal government and other authorities, in all matters relating to the execution of the present contract.

ART. 32. The company shall be Mexican, even though some or all of its shareholders be foreigners, and shall be subject exclusively to the jurisdictions of the tribunals of the republic in all matters of which the cause and action may take place within its territory. The company itself, as well as all foreigners and the successors taking part in the enterprise, whether as shareholders, employés, or in any character whatsoever, shall be considered as Mexicans in all things relating to the company, nor can they even allege, with regard to title to property and other matters connected with the company, rights as foreigners, under any pretext whatsoever. They shall have those rights and the means of making them valid which the laws of the republic confer on Mexicans, and consequently not subject to interference on the part of foreign diplomatic agents.

I am glad that the Senator from Massachusetts has returned to the Chamber. When we grant this charter, in the absence of any treaty stipulation whatever, we first make it a Mexican company; we make every man who is connected with it as a stockholder, president, director, or employé, a Mexican citizen for the purposes of this grant. We give exclusive jurisdiction to the Mexican Government of all questions arising in Mexico in respect of this ship-railway, and then we prohibit that any man shall pretend or set up in any respect any right contrary to the Government of Mexico, or any right under this concession through the diplomatic agents of the country to which he may belong. I wish to know if it is possible that Senators intend to transfer Mr. Eads and this board of directors and all the employés, who may be American citizens, of this ship-railway company, and the contractors who may go there to work upon it, to Mexican citizenship by virtue of an act of the Congress of the United States?

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. MORGAN. I prefer that the Senator would not just now. I am asking the Senator a question and I want to get his answer to it.

Mr. HOAR. I was taking the Yankee fashion of answering one question by asking another.

Mr. MORGAN. I know the Yankee fashion, Mr. President.

Mr. HOAR. I will not do it if it is uncomfortable to the Senator, of course.

Mr. MORGAN. I was asking the Senator from Massachusetts and the Senator from Missouri whether in the absence of all treaty engagements between the United States and Mexico about this ship-railway (for I understand it to be the position at least of the Senator from Massachusetts that there are no such engagements existing) they intend to make, in the language of this thirty-second article, the persons concerned in the enterprise Mexican citizens, all the employés Mexican citizens, and intend to prohibit those Americans who may go there thus Mexicanized by an act of Congress from appealing through the diplomatic authorities of our Government against any wrong or injustice that may be done them?

Mr. HOAR. Does the Senator put his question as wanting an answer to it or as not seeking one now?

Mr. MORGAN. I should be very glad to have the answer now.

Mr. HOAR. I will make the answer. I think the United States should do, in this matter of granting an authority to its citizens to build a road in Mexico, exactly what it would permit Mexico to do in granting to her citizens an authority to build a railroad through the United States. I utterly repudiate the notion that the law of nations means one thing for a strong nation and another for a weak nation. When the Government of Mexico grants to American citizens the right to connect the two oceans by a railroad through Mexico, she does exactly what the United States would do if British, or French, or Mexican citizens had furnished the capital to build the Union and Central Pacific Railroads.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I wish to ask the Senator from Massachusetts——

Mr. HOAR. I have the floor.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. Will you allow me to ask——

Mr. HOAR. No, sir.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. What is meant in the bill by "all other nations?"

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts declines to yield.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I see he declines to yield, because the bill will not bear ventilation.

Mr. HOAR. I am answering the question of one Senator.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I ask what is meant by "all other nations?"

Mr. HOAR. When Mexico undertakes by her own authority to build a railroad on her own territory, or when she undertakes to define the rights that anybody else who undertakes to build that railroad shall have on her territory, does the Senator from Alabama think there is anything except strength which gives the United States a right to dictate to her the terms on which that shall be done?

Mr. MORGAN. I should like to know why it is that men are here asking for this charter. Why do they come to the Government of the United States and ask us to make them the concession of the franchise, the privilege of being an incorporated company? If Mexico is not required to have any comity with us, or accommodation with us, about this matter, why do the people who are about to engage in making this work of engineering improvement come here to ask the authority of the Government of the United States to do it? If Mexico must enjoy her own powers and privileges exclusively within her borders, as I concede she may do, why should they come to the United States to get us to make any concession whatever? When we have granted to this company this act of incorporation upon this concession, we agree that the concession imposes proper limitations upon the corporation that we thus create, one of which I have just referred to, and there are many others quite as important as that.

The Government of Mexico certainly has the right, within her own borders and in the absence of any treaty stipulations, to prescribe to the persons who shall build this work of improvement across the Isthmus of Tehuantepec the terms and conditions upon which they shall build it; but when those persons come to the United States with this concession and ask us to ratify it and make ourselves a party to it by legislation, we then concede to Mexico by our own act that she may impose these duties upon our citizens when they go there. We confer upon the people engaged in this enterprise for the benefit of Mexico all of the great powers and privileges of this act of incorporation, with the credit that we give to them, and we get nothing out of it at all, except the argument made by the Senator from Massachusetts, that Mexico has a right to regulate her internal affairs in her own way. If she has that right, as I concede, and makes no sort of concession to us, puts nothing into our power, gives us no privileges in respect of this ship-railway—I ask the question again, why are these people here asking for this act of incorporation from the United States? That would be a full answer to the entire bill.

I have gone over this concession heretofore, and I shall not, therefore, return to it for the purpose of stating the various other very important matters, in which we would yield authority and power into the hands of Mexico by our act of Congress that we by no means would yield to her in a treaty; but I believe that it is unnecessary for me to do so just now.

The question recurs, have we no relations with Mexico of a diplomatic character relating to the transit of this isthmus? I maintain that we have. The Senator from Massachusetts said that the argument I made here to sustain the proposition that the eigthh article of the Gadsden treaty was now in force would also maintain the proposition that the Clayton-Bulwer treaty was in force in respect of the rights of isthmian transit that are mentioned in that instrument. Suppose the argument did have that effect, it would certainly be gratifying to the Senator from Massachusetts, who has already announced his partiality for the Clayton-Bulwer treaty; but there is a history connected with this grant. There was a grant existing in Mexico in favor of a citizen of the United States, as I remember, though a resident of Mexico prior to 1853, when the Gadsden treaty was negotiated and ratified. It is very true that the concession which was mentioned in the eighth article of the Gadsden treaty did have reference to the then subsisting agreement or concession on the part of Mexico for the building of a railway across the Isthmus of Tehuantepec.

That instrument of concession has been kept alive in one way and another, as I understand, down to the present time, in favor of different successive persons who have endeavored to build that railway, and Mexico has built as much as 50 miles of that railway. Commencing on either shore, the Bay of Campeachy and the Bay or Gulf of Tehuantepec, Mexico has built about 50 miles, and is progressing now to build a railway. Whenever Mexico completes that railway, whether she does it under the concession to Mr. Eads or to some person else, it will be found that the advantages we gained by the Gadsden treaty, and which are not subject to be terminated on notice but are perpetual in their character, will at once attach to that railway, 50 miles of which are now built.

Those concessions I suppose no one will deny are of the highest value to the people of the United States. They include the transit of our merchandise across the isthmus, and also an acknowledged right on our part to transport our armies and munitions of war to our western possessions across that isthmus; which right, however, is made subject to further agreement between the governments, showing the perpetual character of it. But the duty of Mexico to yield to us this advantage is conceded, while the precise terms of agreement upon which we are to cross with our armies and our munitions of war were left in their details to be arranged by future negotiation between the two governments.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. Will the Senator from Alabama allow me to ask him a question, because I want the benefit of the information?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Virginia?

Mr. MORGAN. Yes.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. Does the Government that we are legislating for here own any part of the isthmus over which we propose to charter, or to make an agreement with Mexico about, this railroad company?

Mr. MORGAN. This concession relates to the Isthmus of Tehuantepec, which is entirely within Mexico.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. And we are legislating here to grant a charter over territory of which we do not own one cubic foot?

Mr. MORGAN. That is very true.

I have observed before, but I will repeat for the sake of emphasis, that the Gadsden treaty is not to be terminated on notice, but it is a treaty perpetual in its character. In the next to the last clause of the eighth article is the following:

> The two governments will enter into arrangements for the proper transit of troops and munitions of the United States which that Government may have occasion to send from one part of its territory to another, lying on opposite sides of the continent.

This concession and the act which we are asked to predicate upon it exclude us from the right, which certainly is admitted in the eighth article of that treaty. It excludes us from the right guaranteed to us under such agreement or arrangement as we may make in the future to transport our armies and our munitions of war across Tehuantepec, and leaves it, according to the terms of the concession upon which this act is to be founded, entirely in the discretion of the Government of Mexico whether we shall pass our troops or our munitions of war across that territory or not. So when we grant this charter here we Mexicanize the people whom we incorporate; we put them entirely subject to Mexican control and Mexican law; we shut out their privilege and their right of making any appeal to the diplomatic agents of this Government for protection or anything of the kind; we surrender the right contained in the Gadsden treaty to carry our armies and munitions of war across that isthmus; and what do we get for this act of incorporation? Nothing at all.

Let me ask, is it the part of wisdom in those who are controling the destinies of this country, if the question is even doubtful whether the eighth article of the Gadsden treaty is still subsisting, for us in advance to surrender it, and then go on to enact a law of this important character, conceding to Mexico these important rights in respect of our commerce and the transport of our munitions of war and our armies in the absence of any treaty stipulations at all?

Sir, there ought to be one of two provisions in the bill, either the one that I propose in the amendment I have offered to the bill, reserving to ourselves whatever rights we have under the Gadsden treaty, or there ought to be a provision that this act of incorporation shall not take effect until the two governments have arranged diplomatically between themselves as to what are their respective rights in the Isthmus of Tehuantepec; for I can conceive of nothing more fatuous, nothing more likely to embroil the two countries, nothing more likely to compromise our rights and our honor, than to be legislating in this very serious way, making concessions and admissions in favor of Mexico as to her rights upon that isthmus, when it appears according to the argument of the Senator from Massachusetts that we have not got any treaty relations with her upon the subject.

Let me ask when these treaty relations expired? When did this right to transport our armies and our munitions of war become defunct? What act has been done by Mexico or by the United States to indicate the belief on the part of either government that this treaty has expired?

Mr. HOAR. If the Senator will permit me, I can answer his proposition.

Mr. MORGAN. Yes, I should be very glad to hear the answer.

Mr. HOAR. The eighth article of the Gadsden Treaty is this:

> The Mexican Government having on the 5th of February, 1853—

Thirty-four years ago—

> authorized the early construction of a plank and railroad across the Isthmus of Tehuantepec, and, to secure the stable benefits of said transit way to the persons and merchandise of the citizens of Mexico and the United States, it is stipulated that neither government will interpose any obstacle to the transit of persons and merchandise of both nations; and at no time shall higher charges be made on the transit of persons and property of citizens of the United States than may be made on the persons and property of other foreign nations, nor shall any interest in said transit way, nor in the proceeds thereof, be transferred to any foreign government.

The rights under that treaty expired (to answer the question of the honorable Senator from Alabama) when the transit way and railroad then authorized by the Government of Mexico to be built became dead. It was given up and expired.

Mr. MORGAN. When did it die?

Mr. HOAR. It never lived; it was born dead.

Mr. MORGAN. Then it was a very poor thing——

Mr. HOAR. It died long before it was born.

Mr. MORGAN. I suggest to the Senator, if it was a dead-born child it was a very poor thing about which to be making a treaty.

Mr. HOAR. Certainly, it relates to a particular scheme which failed, and ended, and was given up, and has gone as far into the past as any scheme of the mound-builders who perished before the time of Columbus.

Mr. MORGAN. The Senator from Massachusetts is a very exact historian, and more than that a very thoroughly informed historian, yet that Senator does not seem to know that that same concession in the hands of different persons has been kept alive in Mexico; that Mexico has fallen heir to the property of the company, has created a million dollars of debt upon which she is now paying the interest, and that she is building that road.

Mr. HOAR. When that road is built we shall talk about it. We are talking about a different enterprise.

Mr. MORGAN. No, let us talk about it now. The Senator can not get out of a historical mistake in such a way as that. He talks about a something that was dead about the time the treaty was made, a something that was still-born, a dead-born child that never had any existence, that has been gone from the memory of man as long as the history of the mound-builders; and yet in 1853, a few years after the close of a great war and when we had paid $15,000,000 for a portion of Mexican territory and were knitting up and guaranteeing to ourselves and to Mexico all the rights that had been overlooked in the former treaty, the Trist treaty of Guadaloupe Hidalgo, we find ourselves dealing with this dead-born child, this railway that was of no consideration or consequence at all, these privileges that amounted to nothing in the Senator's opinion, and we find historically that after that treaty had gone into effect the concession was transferred from person to person until, after a while, the Government of Mexico finding itself involved in debt by the guarantee of the bonds of the corporation agreed to take them up, $1,000,000 for $2,000,000, and to pay 6 per cent. interest upon those bonds, and took all the iron, and all the cross-ties, and all the grading, and have them yet, and have gone on and are still going on to build the road. Now the Senator tells us it is too early to commence talking about this matter, that there is to be a resurrection hereafter when Mexico builds the road, and then will be time enough to take into consideration our rights. If it existed in 1853, and will be resurrected when the road is built, I want to know what has become of it in the meantime.

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator answer me: does he claim, as a constitutional lawyer or any other kind of a lawyer—everybody knows he is an able, a distinguished, and an eminent one—does he claim that if this ship-railway be built by Captain Eads, it will be the railroad contemplated in the Gadsden treaty, the plank and rail road thought of in 1853, in regard to which particular stipulations were then made?

Mr. MORGAN. The railroad that was predicated by Captain Eads, as I understand it, passes through the elevated ground between the two oceans at a point called El Tarife and runs down a cañon several miles through which this Mexican railroad is constructed. So it will occupy identically the same line, and whether they be the same corporation or not, the rights that we have guaranteed under this treaty of transit across the Isthmus of Tehuantepec would apply according to that extent, to say the least of it, literally and accurately to the Eads ship-railway.

Mr. VEST. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. MORGAN. Yes.

Mr. VEST. If this contention of his be correct, why is it that in 1857, four years after the Gadsden treaty, the Government of the United States, through its State Department, instructed John Forsyth, of his own State, then our minister to Mexico, to negotiate a new treaty with Mexico for securing this right of transit for other companies besides the company named in the Gadsden treaty? In that correspondence, which I have before me now, Lewis Cass, then Secretary of State, admitted that the Gadsden treaty had terminated as to the right of transit, and instructed Mr. Forsyth to negotiate a new treaty, and told him if he did he would be entitled to the gratitude of the Government of the United States for doing so.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. How do you get a treaty in here in the passage of a railroad bill?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon, in the chair). The Senator from Alabama has the floor.

Mr. MORGAN. No action of an American citizen, even no action of Mr. Cass and the State Department, is to conclude the Congress of the United States and the Mexican Government when we come to act upon what are our subsisting rights. I can show that that is not a correct interpretation of the eighth article of the Gadsden treaty by the language of the instrument itself. It is true that under the first clause of the eighth article the Mexican Government recognized the fact that on the 5th of February, 1853, it had authorized the early construction of a plank and rail road across the Isthmus of Tehuantepec; but the treaty had reference to the benefits which should be enjoyed not simply under that concession, but in the way of transit across that isthmus, whether built by that railroad company or by some other railroad company. Notice the last sentence in the first clause of the eighth article of the Gadsden treaty:

> Nor shall any interest in said transit way, nor in the proceeds thereof, be transferred to any foreign government.

Not an interest in the railroad to be built under that concession, but no interest in that transit-way, that right of transit, the way used, should be transferred to a foreign government.

Mr. HOAR. "Said transit-way?"

Mr. MORGAN. Yes; "said transit-way."

Mr. HOAR. A plank and rail road.

Mr. MORGAN. Not a railroad company, a railroad concession, or any corporation that might have been organized under it, but the transit-way, the broadway in respect of which these two governments were stipulating, each as to what the other's rights would be.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question, because I do feel some interest in this matter and I want some information?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Virginia?

Mr. MORGAN. Certainly; I will answer the Senator from Virginia if I can.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. If this be what the Senator calls a treaty, how does it come here under the guise of a railroad bill or a ship-railroad?

Mr. MORGAN. That question rather stumps me, I confess. I shall not attempt any answer.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I know; but I want the Senator to answer it, because I know he is so much more capable of doing so than I am.

Mr. MORGAN. I prefer to allow the Senator from Missouri to answer that question. He has charge of the bill and is more competent than I am to answer it.

The Senator from Massachusetts has avowed his belief that the Clayton-Bulwer treaty is still in existence. I wish to call his attention to some of the words of that treaty:

> The Governments of the United States and Great Britain hereby declare that neither the one nor the other will ever obtain or maintain for itself any exclusive control over the said ship-canal.

The Senator asked me whether the "said right of way" means the right of way granted in that concession, or whether it means the right of way that is granted in the treaty? The Senator will have an opportunity of answering whether "the said ship-canal" which is protected by the treaty of 1850 is a particular ship-canal, as Mr. Frelinghuysen contended it was, or whether it is any ship-canal that was then in contemplation or might thereafter be built. The argument goes just as strongly in one direction as in the other; and when I find that the Senator from Massachusetts with his sagacity and his ability is contending that the Clayton-Bulwer treaty is now in force, notwithstanding it uses the words of definite designation, "the said ship-canal," I think I may take warning by his conclusions and his argument, and say that the eighth article of the treaty with Mexico in regard to the transit across Tehuantepec is in force notwithstanding it said "the way of transit."

What has kept the Clayton-Bulwer treaty alive? I can think of nothing else than the wranglings over its remains that have kept it alive. I have not announced an opinion in this debate that the Clayton-Bulwer treaty was dead, but I have announced the very firm conviction, from which I think I have never swerved since I have had an opportunity of understanding what it meant and its bearings upon our country, that it ought to be abandoned, that it ought to be dispensed with; but I believe that it does exist subject to our right to declare that it has been forfeited or abandoned on the part of the Government of Great Britain.

So the eighth article of the Gadsden treaty exists possibly subject to the right of Mexico to contend that it has been abandoned or forfeited in some way; but Mexico makes no such contention and never has. She has urged no word of complaint against this Tehuantepec route; she has never given us notice that she desires its termination or that she believed in consequence of any condition of affairs since 1853 the treaty has lapsed or become ineffectual.

But the friends of this bill put themselves in a far worse category by the contention that we have no rights under the Gadsden treaty than they would by adopting my amendment, saying that we reserve to ourselves whatever rights we have under that treaty. Why should we abandon them at the demand of Captain Eads? Does he find the diplomatic relations of the United States with Mexico inconvenient to some of his private schemes and plans, and shall he come here and say that we must change our relations with that government and surrender the important vantage-ground that we occupy in respect of it upon his demand for the charter of a railroad company, when he himself has accepted a concession which makes of him and of every man connected with him a Mexican citizen from the moment that he goes there to carry his charter into effect?

Rather than create Mexican corporations and Mexican citizens I prefer to conserve the rights that we have in Mexico. If Mexico complains of any action we take here, she need not accept the corporation; she need not commit herself to accepting this simple shell built up for the purpose of attracting the confidence of the world in the credit of this scheme.

No man can claim on the floor of the Senate any advantage that is to come to the United States Government or to the corporation itself by the granting of this charter except the bare advantage of giving it credit in the markets of the world for the disposal of its bonds. That is all. When you come to the advantages to the United States Government we say we want to carry our commerce, our coastwise trade across the Isthmus of Tehuantepec on terms of equality with Mexico as is provided in the Gadsden treaty. "No," says Mexico, "you can not do that; we charge you the difference between silver dollars and gold dollars on your trade; we pay our freights with silver dollars according to this concession, and when you come to carry your coastwise trade to California you must pay your freights in gold dollars." We go there in time of war with Great Britain or with any other power when our Pacific coast is about to be attacked, and we say to Mexico, we want to send by various lines of transportation our troops as rapidly as possible to San Francisco, to the mouth of the Columbia River, to San Diego, and we wish to avail ourselves of this line across the Isthmus of Tehuantepec to carry our munitions of war and our soldiers across this railway. Mexico in this concession says that Captain Eads and his corporation agree that that shall not be done without the consent of Mexico first had and obtained. I say that under the Gadsden treaty we have the right now, and we have never abandoned it, and I do not propose to abandon it.

Shall we give up that right and put ourselves at the mercy of this very influential gentleman in respect of the right of access to the Pacific coast with our armies and our munitions of war because he may find his interest and his advantage obstructed by the terms and the provisions of a solemn treaty between the people of the United States and Mexico? Shall we as a Senate vote that there is no such treaty, and having voted that there is no such treaty thereby give emphasis to our concession to Mexican demands by saying "we will grant you as a concession from the Government of the United States all that you demand of Captain Eads as a condition upon which he shall have the privileges that he enjoys at your hands?"

Mr. President, that is going a little too far. I honor Captain Eads, but I am not his worshiper. I respect him, but I am not his follower. I would do him justice and grant him every advantage that the Government of the United States can, but I am not his slave. He, like all other citizens of the United States, must stand out of the way of the great leading policies of this country, and not come into the Senate and ask that we shall make concessions to him and to Mexico which Mexicanize him and destroy our independence of dealing and action in connection with the Mexican Government.

I confess, sir, that I am astonished at the persistence with which this amendment is resisted. I can not conceive how any set of gentlemen can get themselves so involved in devotion to any man as to come before the Senate of the United States and ask that we shall commit ourselves to the terms of a concession like that, as a great government on this continent. Mexico does not ask it. She does not expect it. I am sure of that. The honor of serving in the ranks of Captain Eads is not quite equivalent with me to the duty I feel of trying to protect the rights of American citizens in their transit across the Isthmus of Tehuantepec. It is not quite equivalent with me to a necessity to yield up these important privileges which Mexico has never raised a complaint against, which are pronounced dead by the Senator from Massachusetts and by no person else that I have ever heard speak on the subject.

The Senator from Massachusetts said, in his last debate upon this question:

Mr. President, there is no doubt of the willingness and readiness of Mexico to join in a treaty with the United States that will embody a joint protectorate of this ship-railway, and that arrangements can be made in this treaty which will practically give the United States what it wants, a prompt passage of troops for its protection, to say nothing of the movement of war vessels and munitions of war without violating the constitutional provisions of Mexico—such, for instance, as were arranged in our treaty permitting the United States to send its troops into Mexican territory in pursuit of hostile savages.

Are we to legislate here upon the mere contemplation or expectation or hope that the Mexican Government, after we have passed this bill and confirmed this charter and have committed ourselves to its principles and to its provisions, will then enter into this treaty relation which the Senator from Massachusetts seems to think is so very important? We concur in respect of the importance of these treaty stipulations between ourselves and Mexico; and the Senator felicitates himself that after all, after we have committed ourselves beyond the power of recall and denial, then Mexico will come in and negotiate doubtless a treaty with us of liberality in its terms for the transportation of our troops and munitions of war across the isthmus.

Let me ask, shall we commit our destinies to the mere vague chance that Mexico may hereafter do what the Senator from Massachusetts recognizes is so important to be done, enter into treaty stipulations with us respecting this transit? If I understand the Senator's argument he would not be willing to pass this bill except in virtue of the expectation he has that Mexico would arrange diplomatically with us for the use of this transit for the purposes that are here mentioned, the transportation of troops and munitions of war. Therefore it is an important matter, just as important now in the contemplation of the Senator from Massachusetts as it was in that of the Governments of the United States and Mexico when the treaty of Gadsden was ratified; and yet we are asked to pass this bill in view of the fact and the importance of these concessions to be made by Mexico under the mere expectation or hope that they will hereafter be made. The Senator's argument answers itself, and his objections to my amendment to the bill are overcome by all the Senator has so ably stated upon the floor of the Senate.

It is a matter of no concern to this country or to any person in the world perhaps but to myself that I should make reply also to another observation of the Senator from Massachusetts when he was on the floor recently. He said:

The Senator from Alabama, in his remarks the other day, made some statements in regard to the engineering features of the Nicaragua Canal and the ship-railway. He stated that he had never seen a close instrumental survey of the ship-railway.

I repeat that remark again this morning.

I understand that a map has been prepared showing the entire route, with a proper and accurate profile; that plans of the harbor works at the extremities have been in the possession of the Commerce Committees of the Senate and the House for more than a year, and that this profile is one such as any legislative body in dealing with the question of a domestic railroad would consider ample for all purposes of its guidance.

I think that this company has a right to complain that information has not been given to us in respect to this route, but I have not urged the complaint before the Senate in opposition to this bill because that is a question which the capitalists will concern themselves with when they come to put in their money. My objection to the bill is not that the ship-railway will cost $100,000,000, or that it will not cost more than $20,000,000. With that particular matter I have nothing to do, but still when gentlemen rise on this floor and argue with a great deal of satisfaction to themselves, and with a great deal of confidence, that this railway is capable of being built with a very small expenditure of money, I think I can appeal to several gentlemen in this Chamber to-day who understand the matter of building railways and show that when they want to ascertain what the cost of a railroad will be they do not look at the map to see the line upon which it is laid on the bosom of the earth, and the profile simply, but they want their engineers to go over it and make measurements of the cubic yards of earth to be taken out, the cubic yards of embankments, the amount of rock to be cut away, the expense of grading, of building culverts, bridges, &c., and when they have seen a tabulated statement of the cost of construction by sections they can understand what it means. But to cast your eye over a profile of a route, which is the boasted information that is brought here as having been reached in the Committee on Commerce and perhaps some other committee-rooms of the Senate for some time past, would be, at least to my mind, entirely inexperienced in engineering, very poor information in respect of the cost of such a construction as is proposed.

Opinions are urged here by eminent engineers, some of them from England, in favor of the practicability of this route, and yet opinions stand divided among the great engineers of the earth as to its practicability. Names just as eminent and just as numerous can be quoted against the practicability of building this ship-railway and making it a success as those that can be quoted in favor of it. I shall not seek to go into an examination of those names or of their statements upon this question, for as I look at the question as a mere legislative one the inquiry would not be pertinent. It is not necessary, for I am willing to put it in the power of Captain Eads to get all the money that any capitalist is willing to subscribe to his scheme if he can convince him that it is a practicable scheme.

There is one prospect, however, in which I will say that this railway, upon Captain Ead's concession, never can be of any use to the people of the United States, and that is for the transportation of men-of-war. He admits that the railroad plan which he has laid down, upon the construction of which he has bestowed so much engineering ability and labor, will not transport a vessel of more than 6,000 tons displacement loaded. That admission has been made time and again, and it will be noticed in the reports made upon this bill, or bills like it, that a vessel of 6,000 tons displacement loaded is just as heavy a ship as you can carry across that isthmus. Of what service would that be in transporting one of these heavy cruisers of ours, or a 13,000 ton ship like the Duiloo, and various others in the British, French, Italian, and German navies? It is an impossibility.

I refer to this merely to show that the Government of the United States would have no advantage in this matter except in the transportation of the very lightest class of its ships of war, the wooden ships, and only small ones at that. We should have to go around the Horn with our ships of war to get to California, and yet we are asked to make this concession because it is going to be a very great advantage to our Government. A ship not exceeding 6,000 tons loaded can be trusted upon this railroad. That would exclude all the large steamers that traffic across the ocean. It would exclude many of our coastwise steamers. It would make room only for the small vessels, whether they are steamers or sailing craft, and would cut off perhaps 20 per cent. or it may be 30 per cent. of the tonnage of the American navigators from crossing on this ship-railway. Notwithstanding that and notwithstanding the meager advantages they offer, I am still willing to vote the incorporation and give them a chance to go before the world of capitalists and engage all the money they can find to assist them in their plan, and I will not be heard to raise my voice against it; but when we have to get out of the way with the interests of this whole Government and yield them up to a private contract between Mr. Eads and the Mexican authorities, I do not propose to do it.

When we turn to Nicaragua we find that we have a treaty with that government, made since the Clayton-Bulwer treaty with Great Britain, and made under the express provisions of a clause in that treaty, which I will read:

ARTICLE VIII.

The Governments of the United States and Great Britain having not only desired, in entering into this convention, to accomplish a particular object, but also to establish a general principle, they hereby agree to extend their protection, by treaty stipulations, to any other practicable communications, whether by canal or railway, across the isthmus which connects North and South America, and especially to the inter-oceanic communications, should the same prove to be practicable, whether by canal or railway, which are now proposed to be established by the way of Tehuantepec or Panama.

There is an agreement relating to other isthmian transit schemes besides the one to which the Nicaraguan treaty in its beginning evidently alluded and referred. Now, I will read article 6 of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty:

ARTICLE VI.

The contracting parties in this convention engage to invite every State with which both or either have friendly intercourse to enter into stipulations with them similar to those which they have entered into with each other, to the end that all other States may share in the honor and advantage of having contributed to a work of such general interest and importance as the canal herein contemplated. And the contracting parties likewise agree that each shall enter into treaty stipulations with such of the Central American States as they may deem advisable for the purpose of more effectually carrying out the great design of this convention, namely, that of constructing and maintaining the said canal as a ship communication between the two oceans, for the benefit of mankind, on equal terms to all, and of protecting the same; and they also agree that the good offices of either shall be employed, when requested by the other, in aiding and assisting the negotiation of such treaty stipulations.

There is a positive right given to each of these high contracting parties that they may enter into special treaty stipulations separately with any of the Central American States for the purpose of building a ship-canal across the isthmus, or any other mode of transportation. In pursuance of that express agreement in the sixth article of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty we went on and negotiated with Nicaragua, ratified and proclaimed a treaty which gives to us the precise rights which are contained herein, the explicit right of the perfect enjoyment on terms of equality with the citizens of Nicaragua of a ship-canal across that isthmus.

In connection with the text of the treaty I have been just reading, I will read a further remark of the Senator from Massachusetts. He said:

Another suggestion made by the Senator from Alabama I think ought not to be made in the Senate of the United States without dissent, though it is one often heard. I do not conceive that there can be found any support in international law, in morals, or in national necessity for the claim that if any South American State, great or small, choose within its own territory, in its own right, and by its own authority, to construct a canal within its own dominions, whether that canal sever the continent and go from sea to sea or not, the United States have any right whatever to interfere with the process. I think such a declaration when seriously made will encounter the remonstrance of mankind, and will excite and alarm the people of the fifteen sister republics of North and South America, with whom it is to our interest to cultivate the most friendly and peaceful relations.

Now, Mr. President, does the Senator from Massachusetts intend by that statement that under the influence of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty we have no right to negotiate with Nicaragua for the construction of a canal through that territory? If he does, he violates the very language of the sixth article of the treaty, that which has been adhered to by our people under all circumstances, that by the concession made in the Clayton-Bulwer treaty we had the right to negotiate an arrangement with Nicaragua for going through there with our ships. So that, in what I have advanced here in respect of Nicaragua, I had the right not only to rely upon international law, but upon actual treaty stipulation for all that I claimed that we had a right to do.

It is very true that I gave expression to some sentiments which I by no means modify or recall which reach to this point, that the configuration of this continent laid out by the Almighty hand that created it is not to be interfered with by any power so as to alter the relations of the great seas of this country to each other without the consent of the people of the United States. If we must take the continent as we found it, and we have shaped our policies in respect of the continent as it was constructed, who ever presumes to change the construction of this continent so as to allow the seas to pass through unobstructed and ships to pass upon those seas must first get the consent of the people of the United States to that change of configuration.

That may be considered an immoral doctrine, but, if it is so, it is a doctrine of which the immorality is espoused and loved by at least sixty millions of American people, and I do not believe that, besides the Senator from Massachusetts, I have ever in my life heard of anybody who was willing to say that one of those little Central American States had the right to make such plans and purposes and arrangements in connection with foreign governments as it saw proper, to exclude us from going across the ditch that might be dug across this isthmus, or that, in the absence of such an arrangement, she could make it herself.

Mr. HOAR. To what declaration of the Senator from Massachusetts does the Senator from Alabama refer?

Mr. MORGAN. I just had the honor of reading it to the Senate from the remarks of the Senator from Massachusetts delivered in the Senate a few days ago.

Now, sir, in regard to Nicaragua we stand on the firm basis of natural right; or, if the Senator would like to have it that way, we stand upon the firmer basis of conventional or treaty rights with Nicaragua; or, if it will still suit his taste better, we stand upon the higher and broader basis that we have got the consent of Great Britain that we may do this thing of going through the Isthmus of Nicaragua with our canal or their canal—a canal under the auspices of the American people. There is no lack on our part of authority, human and divine, British and Central American, for going with our canal through the Lake of Nicaragua and floating our ships upon it.

The Senator from Massachusetts further argued that this would be a source of great embarrassment to us in our naval affairs. He seemed to imagine that it would be possible that some American admiral, with his fleet of ironclads, would be blockaded in this lake and left high and dry, closed in by the British power, or whatever power we might be at war with. Did it never occur to the Senator from Massachusetts that it would take two navies to do that of the size of the one which we had in the lake, for, while they would be blockading us on the Caribbean side, we might, perhaps, let loose the dogs of war upon Australia or the British possessions in North America; or, while they would be blockading us upon the other side, we might even take Jamaica, the Bermudas and Bahamas, and the banks of Newfoundland; or, perhaps, we might sail out and enter the Gulf of Saint Lawrence? With your navy concentrated in the vicinity of or in the basin of that lake in Nicaragua, it is obvious to any man, I think, whether he has military views or not, which I do not profess to have, that we are just as strong there with ten ships of war as we should be with twenty ships of war, if we did not have this advantage both in the protection of our Atlantic and our Pacific seaboard.

But I will not detain the Senate by arguing this military question. I have the authority of some of the highest officers of the Navy of the United States in support of the proposition that nothing could be more advantageous to the power of the American people than this fortress in the midst of the seas and of the mountains of Nicaragua, and I will venture to reassert, what I have formerly asserted, that, in my humble judgment, there is not a spot that can be pointed out on the face of this earth that furnishes either the commercial or the military power that would belong to any country which had the capacity to station a navy in and about and in juxtaposition to this canal in the Lake of Nicaragua.

Now, Mr. President, as to the engineering difficulties which the Senator from Massachusetts found in the very elaborate estimates which have been made by Mr. Menocal, I have not a word to say. The location of the Nicaragua Canal as made in 1872 and 1873, as shown in Commander Lull's report, has been changed and modified from the survey made by Mr. Menocal in 1868 in various particulars, and all to the advantage of the canal. He has reduced the distance between Greytown and Brito by this canal from 180.70 miles to 169.08 miles. The differences between the two locations are shown by this table:

Comparison of the dimensions and principal features of the location by the survey of 1872–'73, with those by the survey of 1885.

I can not afford to consume the time of the Senate and to weary its patience by going into any detailed examination of these estimates; but I wish to say now what the Senator from Massachusetts is mistaken about, that the estimates of Mr. Menocal are based upon all the work that is necessary to be done of every kind and character in the harbors of Greytown and Brito, the two harbors on the different sides of the isthmus, and here is a complete estimate on the basis of prices and by sections, commencing with the western and extending to the eastern, of every foot of cubic measurement of earth or rock to be taken out of that canal, together with every expense that can possibly be conceived of in connection with the work; and to show the minuteness and the accuracy of the survey and how perfectly it considered every expense connected with this matter, I will read from section 3:

SECTION 3.

The harbor of Greytown, restoration by diverting Rio San Juan and building artificial harbor.

	1,766,625 00

Making the whole estimate of this exact calculation $1,766,625 for the harbor of Greytown. Now, the estimate for the harbor at Brito was made with quite the same accuracy. Here is the general estimate:

Estimate of cost of Nicaragua Canal, location of 1885, on basis of prices and sections adopted for estimates in 1872-'73.

Notwithstanding the improvement in machinery and various other expedients for digging canals has been so great, Mr. Menocal, in order to be entirely right about it, makes his estimate on the "basis of prices and sections adopted for estimates in 1872-'73," and these are the estimates made by him in 1885:

Western division	$12,878,875 00
Middle division	6,197,851 00
Eastern division	19,963,408 00
Total estimated cost	39,040,134 00
Add 25 per cent. (contingencies)	9,760,033 00
Grand total	48,800,167 00
Estimated cost, location of 1872-'73	65,722,147 00
Estimated cost, location of 1885 (on same basis)	48,800,167 00
Difference in favor of location of 1885	16,921,980 00

There is a survey, there is an exposition of the facts that any engineer can take and work out. Here are the measurements given in this report, the depth and width of the cuts, the height of the dams, the description of the locks, and all that. If there is a word about this report that is not absolutely accurate from the hands of this great American engineer, there are plenty, yes, hundreds, yes, thousands of men in the United States that could and would before this have taken up these estimates and have riddled them. I would like to see an estimate of this kind on the ship-railway; but we have nothing submitted here, except the fact mentioned by the Senator from Massachusetts, that there had been lying back in some committee-room of this Senate a map of the location of that route on the face of the earth and a map of the profile. That is all we know about it. I do not care whether we have a good one or a bad one, if in voting on this you will not ask me to surrender too much. Let the capitalists of this country determine whether they want it or whether they do not want it.

I have a little complaint to make of somebody, and I suppose it is of the Public Printer—I do not know who it is—on account of the delay of this report of Mr. Menocal. It has been now very nearly a year in the hands of the Public Printer, and I had to borrow a copy from a gentleman who got it in advance in order to use it in the Senate of the United States. I think it has been kept back in some very mysterious way.

Whenever in the United States men who have the skill and ability to understand the question take up that survey and consider the geography and topography of that Nicaraguan route, they will come to the conclusion, in my judgment, that, after all, whenever we have ship transit between these oceans it will cross through the Lake of Nicaragua. Mr. Eads's effort, as I have before stated, in respect of crossing on a sea-level canal is a failure, and a confessed failure. They are now preparing, if the evidence brought to the attention of this Government can be relied upon by its officers, to put in locks to overcome 130 feet, or thereabouts, of ascent and descent across the route. Their pretense is that that is a temporary construction, in order that they may have a chance to get the Chagres River out of the way and go on and make their sea-level canal.

Once these locks are put in there and ships are carried through on that system of locks, from that time forward the sea-level canal will be abandoned. They can neither control the waters of the Chagres River when they flow down to the channel of that canal, nor can they in the dry season supply that canal with water from the mountains, for they have not got it. But here nature has made a reservoir in Lake Managua and Lake Nicaragua, which the highest and most terrible tropical rains will not raise more than 4 feet under any circumstances, which never becomes depressed so low that it does not pour a flood through the magnificent channel of the San Juan River, standing there midway between these seas, an invitation to every man in the world, it seems to me, that has any idea of engineering to come and cut the channel out to the sea on either side, and take the waters from the center and lift your ships across that peninsula without damage and without delay.

I close what I have to say, Mr. President, in regard to this measure by thanking the Senate very earnestly for the patience with which they have heard me in the great pressure of public business, and my only apology for consuming so much time is that the subject is one of immense magnitude.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I was so unfortunate as to be out of the Chamber——

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I ask the Senator from Massachusetts to allow me to move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. HOAR. I wish only to say a few words, and I should rather say what I have to say now.

I was so unfortunate as to be out of the Chamber during the early part of the remarks of my honorable friend from Alabama; but so far as I have heard them he rests the argument he has made to-day in answer to what I had the honor to submit to the Senate last week, on four principal propositions. First, he thinks, in solving the greatest commercial problem of the age, the problem in which the commercial destiny of this country is involved, upon which depends alike our dignity and rank among nations, our capacity to send the American flag into distant seas, our capacity to keep employed at good and honorable wages the workmen who are to be the support and the rulers of this country, the men upon whose prosperity the Republic must live or bear no life, he can satisfy the American Senate that it is better to select a route for commerce which is to add an average of twelve days, an average of 2,400 miles of distance to be crossed by vessels under sail, and largely through a part of the world's surface where calms prevail through a great part of the year. He proposes to select that route in comparison with the route which is proposed by the great engineer in whose interest and at whose solicitation this bill is proposed.

He proposes also that the United States shall take possession of a tropical territory, that they shall build fortresses and station troops and maintain them both in war and in peace in a tropical region, where malaria is fatal to the life of men born and bred in a northern climate, and in a spot where they are liable to be besieged and hemmed in unless the United States undertake to maintain a naval force equal to that of Great Britain.

He proposes to select for the route of transit a point already blockaded by the row of islands in the possession of our great commercial rival, commanded by Jamaica, and the Bahamas, and the Bermudas, and the Leeward and Windward Islands, commanded by the whole West India group, of which all but one of the forty principal islands are in the possession of the European powers whom we are about to challenge to this great contest for commercial supremacy. That is the proposition which lies at the foundation of the argument of my honorable friend.

Next he asserts—he must assert it in order to have his Nicaraguan scheme adopted by this Government—that a treaty which five years ago the American Government, through its Secretary of State, with the unquestioned approbation of the President, formally asserted to Great Britain was still in force (only in that respect repeating the assertion of Mr. Fish and Mr. Seward), was abrogated by the action of Great Britain thirty years ago. That is the second postulate upon which he undertakes to build up his argument.

His third proposition is that a treaty with Mexico, made in the year 1853, which I now have before me, signed on the 30th day of December in that year, which declared that a certain plank road and railroad which had been authorized by Mexico to be built on the 5th day of February, 1853, and which never has been touched from that day to this, is the same thing with the ship-railway which is proposed to be built across Tehuantepec under the magnificent conception of Captain Eads, and that an agreement between these two countries that we should have certain rights, or rather that we should be protected against certain invidious distinctions in the use of that plank road, is still applicable and gives the United States a foothold on Mexican territory when we are talking about a railroad which is to raise ships of 6,000 tons burden and carry them from sea to sea across the continent in the air. That is the third proposition of my honorable friend.

The fourth—and this statement of my friend's argument is its best refutation—the fourth proposition on which he relies, seems to me, with great respect to him, to be an utter perversion of the time-honored Monroe doctrine to which the American people, without distinction of party, is thoroughly committed. The Monroe doctrine is an assertion of a principle of public law the origin of which is in dispute between the men who write the biography of George Canning and the men who write the biography of John Quincy Adams. Mr. Canning claims, to use his sublime and oft-quoted phrase, that he called the New World into existence to redress the balance of the Old. He asserted that it should be the policy of England from that time forward that the political independence of the nations of the South American continent, strong or weak, should thereafter be respected; that they should not be the objects of the greed, of the ambition, of the lust for territory of any European power, however strong, and to that declaration the American Government not only gave its assent, but claimed that John Quincy Adams, through the medium of William Pinkney, had been the person by whom it had been suggested to the Government of Great Britain.

It was a declaration that henceforth the United States of America, as well as Great Britain, speaking through the mouth of Mr. Canning, were pledged to the doctrine that the weakest State on this continent should not be interfered with either by force or by diplomacy; that no European power should gain a foothold or should seize upon a foot of its territory whether by force or by negotiation, and that no European power should take upon itself any duties or obligations or rights as surety or as guarantor or as protector under a peaceful guise, or should by force and by war gain any rights under which it could in future interfere with the independence of the American republics.

That is the Monroe doctrine; that is the law of nations as it has been declared in regard to the Western hemisphere; and that is the doctrine to which every bayonet, every cannon, every musket, every life, every soldier, every sailor of the United States is pledged. But this new gloss and perversion which we hear from Senators on the other side of the Chamber, and I am sorry to say on this side of the Chamber, too, that the United States of America has the right to say to a weak South American republic, "You shall not deal with your own territory as you choose; you shall not build a canal or a railroad or a public work in the interest of the commerce which goes from sea to sea, unless the United States shall take upon herself the control, shall dictate the terms, shall manage the future conduct of that enterprise," is a declaration as repugnant to the law of nations, as repugnant to the purpose of George Canning and of John Quincy Adams, and as repugnant to the genius and spirit and honor of the American people as it is to sound morals or sound international law. It is a doctrine which will drive away from our side, which will alarm, which will make enemies of these fifteen South American republics, including our nearest neighbor, the Republic of Mexico, on the North American continent, whom it is our first interest to make our friend.

Now, Mr. President, I do not propose at this late hour of the afternoon to renew the debate. I expressed my views on the general question the other day; but the argument of my honorable friend from Alabama stands on these four pedestals, each one of them rotten, each one of them a pedestal of clay, none of them, it seems to me, capable of bearing the slightest examination, whether we apply to them the illustrations of American history, the doctrines of the law of nations, or the doctrine of sound morals which lies at the bottom of international law as it lies also at the foundation of the historic practice of the American people.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon, in the chair). The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST].

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, I understand that the amendment of the Senator from Missouri is to take the place of the whole bill. Am I right about that?

Mr. VEST. If that is the amendment the Chair refers to, it is a substitute for the whole bill.

Mr. HOAR. I wish to inquire if the Senator from Alabama has proposed any amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is advised that the Senator from Alabama has not submitted an amendment.

Mr. MORGAN. I have not offered it in form. I read it in my remarks, and I said I would offer it.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to have it read, if the Senator from Vermont is willing.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Yes.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. Pending that, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I have the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Vermont has the floor.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not object to the Senator's motion, but I merely wish to retain the floor on this question.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

THE TRADE-DOLLAR.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Pending that motion, the Chair will lay before the Senate the bill (S. 199) for the retirement and recoinage of the trade-dollar, returned from the House of Representatives with an amendment.

The amendment of the House of Representatives was to strike out all after the enacting clause of the bill, and in lieu thereof to insert a substitute.

Mr. MORRILL. I move that the Senate bill as it comes to us with the amendment be printed and referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. BOWEN. What is the motion?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont moves that the bill be printed with the amendment of the House of Representatives, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. BOWEN. It is not a motion for a conference?

Mr. MORRILL. No.

The motion was agreed to.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 10233) to convey to and confirm in the city of Aurora, in the county of Kane and State of Illinois, a small island in Fox River, located within the limits of said city, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

AMENDMENT TO A BILL.

Mr. CALL submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 3286) to increase the naval establishment; which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

SWITZLER'S REPORT ON INTERNAL COMMERCE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution from the House of Representatives; which was read and referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That 15,000 additional copies be printed of the report on Internal Commerce by William F. Switzler, Chief of the Bureau of Statistics, being Part 2 of the report on Commerce and Navigation, submitted by him on the 20th day of December, 1886; 10,000 for the use of the House, and 5,000 for the use of the Senate.

EXECUTIVE BUSINESS.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. The resolution just read being pending, I have an opportunity to say again what I have said before, what I mean to repeat every day, that there lies upon the executive table that which this Senate does not take up, and that which concerns the people of the State which I in part represent. I have asked that the Senate should proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. SAWYER. We are going to do it.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. For that motion I could not get a vote that would amount to a quorum. I am speaking now in open session as one of the Senators in this body. I have a right to do it, and I intend to do it.

I am told Senators will not object to the motion, but on Saturday evening, the very last thing I could do, after yielding three or four times to motions to take up bills, there was a Senator on this floor who was courteous enough to move an adjournment while my motion for an executive session was pending. If I am not capable of representing Virginia I do not want to be here, but I mean to represent her.

Now, sir, I have asked that the Senate should proceed to the consideration of executive business. I ask it again, and again I will ask it, and I am not afraid to ask it every day. I am not afraid either to criticise that conduct of the Senate which I know has subordinated that which concerns me and constituents of mine. I have now while this resolution is pending an opportunity of saying for once and for all that the Senate will proceed to the consideration of executive business only when the party whip is lashed around it. As a Republican I speak that. The boast of the Republican party is that it has emancipated the slave, and yet in this body of men that are called statesmen there is more abject slavery under the party lash than there was on the part of the negro of the South to his master.

Mr. President, I have asked only that there shall be a vote on that which is unanimously reported from a committee after weeks of consideration, and I can not get it. I do not care now whether I get it or not. I know there is manhood behind me in Virginia that will sustain me when every day I make the motion. Two years nearly have elapsed—two years since two members of the Republican State central committee of that State appealed to me to make me a better Republican—two years when I could not get a hearing in the Senate in executive session. We are in open session now. I am speaking on the resolution that has been offered, and not on my motion to proceed to the consideration of executive business lest the Chair should call me to order.

I have heard here to-day many things that I could not respond to in the little time that would have been allowed me, and I am here now to say that I characterized this as the American House of Lords. It never went down to my credit or discredit, but I did say it, and I say it again. No man has any right here who would not if he were an Englishman be entitled to be a member of the House of Lords in Great Britain.

This is not less than the second time that I have asked the Senate to go into executive session to pass upon a unanimous report from what is called the Judiciary Committee—God forbid the name—and unless I can get the consent of him who is one of those who come from Vermont I can not have a little place passed upon in a State that is older than his, that has a history; when it would take a man with a magnifying glass to find the history of the other State.

I do ask now, while I am debating this resolution, that the Senate shall consider that it has at least half the right of half a motion to go into executive session.

Mr. MORGAN. Will the Senator yield to me a moment?

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. If I do not lose the floor. I am afraid of that; I have been frightened for four years.

Mr. MORGAN. I desire to offer an amendment to the pending bill, which I ask may be printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the amendment will be received and printed.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us go into executive session.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. Will you do it?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Certainly; with pleasure.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. When the Senator from Vermont says he is ready to go into executive session, I do not know anything better that I can do than to stop.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Virginia moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After twenty minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened and (at 5 o'clock and 2 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, February 15, at 12 o'clock m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, February 14, 1887.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday was read and approved.

SECTION 533, REVISED STATUTES.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (H. R. 3160) to amend section 533 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, with the Senate amendments thereto.

Mr. DUNN. Mr. Speaker, that is a bill which involves no appropriation. It simply apportions the counties of the eastern district of Arkansas to different courts for the greater convenience of the public. I ask that the amendments of the Senate be concurred in.

Mr. HOLMAN. Let them be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 8, strike out "Desha, Chicot."

At the end of the bill add the following:

SEC. 2. That all crimes and offenses heretofore committed within either of said districts shall be prosecuted, tried, and determined in the same manner and with the same effect as if this act had not been passed.

Mr. ROGERS. Is this the House bill?

Mr. DUNN. This is the House bill with the amendments of the Senate striking out Desha and Chico.

Mr. ROGERS. I believe there is no Congressional district affected by the bill except that of my colleague [Mr. DUNN] and my own, and I see no objection to it.

Mr. DUNN. It does nothing but assign certain counties to one court, and certain counties to the other court, so as to prevent the summoning of people from remote points at great expense and inconvenience. For instance, the court sits at Little Rock and at Helena, and, as matters stand now, it sometimes happens that parties living at Helena are summoned to Little Rock, and vice versa. The bill creates no office, involves not one dollar of expenditure, and is designed merely to promote the public convenience.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the amendments of the Senate will be concurred in.

There was no objection.

Mr. DUNN moved to reconsider the vote by which the Senate amendments were concurred in; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

J. R. JONES.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (S. 603) for the relief of J. R. Jones, late postmaster at Boydton, Va.; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

PUBLIC LANDS, CALIFORNIA.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (S. 994) granting to the State of California 5 per cent. of the net proceeds of the sales of public lands in said State; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

THOMAS A. OSBORN.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (S. 2553) for the relief of Thomas A. Osborn; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

RIGHT OF WAY THROUGH FORT HALL RESERVATION, IDAHO.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (S. 2789) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to negotiate with the Shoshone and Bannock tribes of Indians for the relinquishment of their title to so much of the lands of the Fort Hall Reservation in Idaho as is required for the uses and purposes of the Utah and Northern Railway Company and the Oregon Short-Line Railway Company, either partly or conjointly.

Mr. HAILEY. I ask unanimous consent that that bill be now considered. The Committee on Indian Affairs has reported an exactly similar bill, which is on the Calendar.

Mr. COWLES. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is called for. This bill will be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

EXCHANGE OF GUNS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (S. 3170) to authorize the Secretary of War to exchange guns with the R. E. Lee Volunteer Battery, of Petersburg, Va.; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

RIGHT OF WAY THROUGH INDIAN RESERVATION, UTAH.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (S. 3184) granting to the Utah Midland Railway Company a right of way through the Uncompahgre and Uintah reservations, in the Territory of Utah, and for other purposes; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. LORE, indefinitely, on account of important business.

To Mr. WALLACE, indefinitely, on account of important business.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

By unanimous consent, the Committee on Claims was discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 3828) for the relief of C. M. Briggs, with the Senate amendments thereto, and it was referred to the Committee on War Claims.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, informed the House that the Senate had passed with amendments the bill (H. R. 367) to amend section 536 of the Revised Statutes of the United States relating to the division of the State of Illinois into judicial districts, and to provide for holding terms of court of the northern district at the city of Peoria, requested a conference with the House of Representatives upon said bill, and had appointed as conferees on the part of the Senate, Mr. PUGH, Mr. HOAR, and Mr. WILSON, of Iowa.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the bill (H. R. 10793) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, with amendments, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested.

The message also announced that the Senate non-concurred in the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 2997) granting a pension to Mrs. M. E. Wood, requested a conference upon the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed as conferees on the part of the Senate, Mr. BLAIR, Mr. SAWYER, and Mr. WILSON, of Iowa.

The message further announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendments of the House to bills of the following titles:

A bill (S. 531) to provide for the erection of a public building at La Fayette, Ind.; and

A bill (S. 1494) granting an increase of pension to Stephen D. Smith.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed the concurrent resolution requesting the President to return to the House of Representatives the bill (H. R. 5652) for the relief of James W. Goodrich.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed a bill and joint resolution of the following titles:

A bill (S. 2778) granting to the Billings, Clark's Fork and Cooke City Railroad Company the right of way through the Crow Indian Reservation;

Joint resolution (S. R. 109) authorizing the President of the United States to accept in behalf of the United States the sword of Capt. Samuel Chester Reid, tendered as a gift by his son Samuel C. Reid.

Mr. NEECE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled a bill of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. ROCKWELL, by unanimous consent, obtained indefinite leave of absence on account of sickness in his family.

SOLDIERS' HOME WEST OF THE ROCKY MOUNTAINS.

Mr. BRAGG. I ask unanimous consent that the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 2075) to provide for the location and erection of a branch home for disabled volunteer soldiers west of the Rocky Mountains be non-concurred in; and that the request of the Senate for a conference be granted.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. COWLES] demanded the regular order. Does he insist upon it?

Mr. COWLES. Yes, sir.

PENSION TO MRS. MARY A. LOGAN.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. I rise to a privileged matter.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. I call up the resolution fixing as a special order for to-morrow the bill (S. 3050) granting a pension to Mary A. Logan. I ask that the resolution be read.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee of the Whole House be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (S. 3050) granting a pension to Mary A. Logan, and that the same be made a special order for Tuesday, the 15th day of February, 1887, immediately after the reading of the Journal, and that the same be a continuing order until disposed of.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Now, Mr. Speaker, the reason why I favor this resolution——

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Is it now in order to consider and debate this resolution?

The SPEAKER. No point of order has been made.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I make the point of order.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, it is too late to make the point of order. I have entered upon the discussion of the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it is not too late; the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE] rose in time.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Yes, as soon as the paper was read I rose to inquire how it came in here, and to make the point of order.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. What is the point of order?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. That it is not in order to consider this resolution now.

The SPEAKER. This resolution was introduced, the Chair thinks, on last Monday, and has lain over until the present time. The gentleman from Iowa now calls it up and claims that it is a matter of privilege under the rules of the House. The Chair is willing to hear what any gentleman desires to say upon the question of order.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Was not this resolution referred to a committee?

The SPEAKER. It was not referred to any committee.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. It was ordered to lie over one day. Now, Mr. Speaker, the reason why I am in favor of this resolution——

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to know, before the gentleman from Iowa proceeds, whether any gentleman wishes to say anything on the question of order.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I do not.

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. I have not heard the point of order stated by the gentleman from Kentucky.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky makes the point of order that it is not in order under the rules to call up this resolution for consideration as a matter of privilege. There is some difficulty in the mind of the Chair on this question of order; but it was decided in the Forty-sixth Congress, and again in the Forty-seventh Congress, that under the rules of the House the introduction of a resolution or motion to amend the rules was a privileged matter, to lie over for one day for consideration, and that it might be called up thereafter, but what should be its privileges when called up was not then decided. Unless the Chair by some argument can be satisfied that those rulings were erroneous the Chair will of course adhere to them.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Speaker, without committing myself for or against the bill proposed to be called up under the resolution of the gentleman from Iowa——

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. I do not yield for discussion.

The SPEAKER. But the Chair desires to hear gentlemen upon the point of order.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. I supposed that the gentleman was about to discuss the merits of the proposition.

Mr. RANDALL. I wish to be heard on the point of order for a moment.

Without disclosing what may be my action upon the bill to which the order of the gentleman refers, I wish to say that the provisions of the rules as they existed in the first session of the Forty-sixth Congress are substantially different, in my judgment, from those existing and under which the House is operating to-day. At that time there was no absolute rule whereby the right was given, on a motion, to amend the rules. There now exists, however, a distinct rule, and an absolute right provided in the rules themselves for this purpose. I do not want the Chair, in determining the point of order, to lose sight of the fact that the condition of the rules in the first session of the Forty-sixth Congress was different from that which now exists in this respect, and therefore that a decision growing out of those rules should now be conclusive on a question arising under the present rules.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Speaker, I have no expectation of throwing very much light upon this question; but as I have given to it some little consideration in connection with another matter within the last few days, I may be pardoned for presenting one or two suggestions which occur to me in this connection.

I take it, sir, that there is no question of order that could be presented to this House which is more important than the one now pending. If decided in the way suggested by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] it will deprive the House of its right to change the rules, the highest right which it can claim or exercise, a right granted by the Constitution of the United States itself. That Constitution declares that Congress shall have the power to amend its rules. How? The rules provide how they may be amended. In the first place a resolution changing the rules of the House can be presented at the desk and referred, under the rules, to the Committee on Rules. But now suppose a case. Suppose that in this House of three hundred and twenty-five members there were three hundred and twenty-two who desired to consider a change of the rules, and who desired to make what they regarded as necessary amendments to the rules. The Committee on Rules, consisting of five members, opposes the change. Three of that number, a majority, constitute a quorum of the committee, and if we were compelled to rely upon the action of the Committee on Rules in the case supposable we would have the anomalous spectacle presented of three hundred and twenty-two members of this House who would be controled absolutely by the action of three members.

Contemplating such a possibility, it may be, the rules themselves have provided another way by which an amendment can be secured, and that is by an independent motion submitted in the manner prescribed by the rule; a motion which I say, and with great respect to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER], is always in order as a privileged motion, because it involves the constitutional right of the House itself to change its rules when it desires to do so. And when made, as an independent motion, the rules provide that the maker of it can ask to have it lie over a day. Why? What sense is there in saying that the proposed change or modification of the rule shall lie over a day, except it be to give to the House the power to act upon it when it does so lie over?

Now, the other method by which the rules can be amended is by introducing a notice at the desk and asking that it lie over as I have just suggested, and then call it up, whereupon, under the rules, a motion to refer to the Committee on Rules is in order; and if a majority shall refuse to send it to the Committee on Rules, it is then before the House for its consideration and action. But the gentleman from Pennsylvania says we have changed the rules. In what respect?

Why, as far back as the Forty-third Congress, it was decided that—

A resolution to amend the rules may be read and referred to the Committee on Rules during the first call of the States and Territories in the morning hour of Monday, and thus constitute notice according to the usage of the House.

Not that that was the only notice, but that it was one method of giving the notice to the House of the desire to provide the change.

Again:

Notice of an amendment to the rules is in order as an independent motion, but must lie over one day under clause 1 of Rule XXVIII. (See Journal first session Forty-sixth Congress, page 437.)

And under that it has been decided that it is a privileged question, and may be called up by the mover, subject, under the practice, to a motion to refer to the Committee on Rules; and if not referred is before the House for action.

Now, reasoning from common sense and claiming that the House has the unquestioned constitutional right to amend its rules, the only way provided when the Committee on Rules are unwilling to amend, is by giving the notice suggested and asking to have it lie over a day, then calling it up, as the gentleman from Iowa now calls up his motion, as a privileged matter involving the constitutional right of the House, and the motion to refer to the Committee on Rules being voted down, it is before the House for its action and it may determine whether it will adopt or reject it. The gentleman from Iowa, I understand, now calls up a resolution which was presented on last Monday, which he asked to have lie over, and now calls it up, no motion having been made to refer it to the Committee on Rules, and consequently it is, under the rules of the House, before the House for its adoption or rejection.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. There are two points that should be considered in this discussion. I believe it is practically admitted that under the rulings of the Forty-sixth and Forty-seventh Congresses no point of order can now lie against the consideration of this resolution at this time.

But I wish to call another matter to the attention of the Speaker. Even if the point of order would lie against this resolution when introduced on Monday upon the call of States and Territories or at any other time as the rules prescribe, still it would not lie against it now in the condition in which we find this resolution. I desire to read from the RECORD, and I think the Speaker will readily see that any objection of this kind now comes too late. Upon the call of States and Territories on Monday last, upon the call of the State of Iowa, I introduced the resolution under consideration. Here is what appears in the RECORD:

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. I submit the resolution which I send to the desk, and ask that it lie over for one day.

The Clerk read as follows:

* * * * * * *

Mr. TAULBEE. I move to refer the resolution to the Committee on Rules.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. I make the point of order that the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky is not in order at this stage. This is a privileged matter.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MCCREARY). The gentleman from Iowa has a right to ask that the resolution lie over for one day under the rules of the House. That disposition of the resolution will be made.

Now, sir, granting, for the sake of the argument, that a point of order might lie on the introduction of the resolution, in this case the point was made, was overruled, and an adjudication had upon it, and from that adjudication no appeal was taken at the only time when an appeal could be taken. So now we stand, using the terms of the law, clothed with the advantages of a res adjudicata in this case; and I submit, Mr. Speaker, that there is no power now that can defeat the consideration of this resolution, and that the only question that is in order is, first, its consideration, the question as to which may of course be raised as in regard to any other matter before the House.

I believe the proceedings taken were regular under the rules. Under the first clause of Rule XXVIII and under the decisions that have been rendered, notice of an amendment to the rules is in order as an independent motion, but must lie over for one day. But even if the point could have been made at the time when the resolution was introduced, I submit the House is now bound to consider it unless on the raising of the question of consideration another course is decided upon by the House.

The reasons for the rule as regards the privileges of the House have been set forth so clearly by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIS] that I shall not discuss that point at all.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, I would not trouble the House or the Speaker by saying anything upon this question but that it seems to me the adoption of the practice now proposed would be utterly destructive of the rights of the minority of the House as they are sought to be protected by the rules. It will be observed that in the rules there are pointed out methods of changing them either as claimed by the gentleman from Kentucky by a report from the Committee on Rules, or by the introduction at the proper time of a resolution and the necessary notice and then action upon it by the House.

The purpose of that, sir, is that the House may always have it in its power to change its rules. But now, without any regard to the merit of the proposition of my friend from Iowa, or of the proposition of my friend from Kentucky, I submit that this resolution is not to change the rules of the House. That is not the purpose of the resolution. But it is to take a particular measure from out of the operation of the rules of the House. You may reply that that is a change; but I submit that it is not a change within the purview of those parts of the rules that permit and allow a change of the rules. A rule is something that operates generally, uniformly. It is for the uniform and ordinary transaction of the business of the House. Shall it be said that a resolution that simply says Senate bill 1 shall be considered to-morrow in the House of Representatives—shall it be said that that may be justly called a change of the rule?

Mr. BURROWS. Will the gentleman allow me a moment?

Mr. CRISP. Certainly.

Mr. BURROWS. I wish to call the gentleman's attention to this ruling on page 454 of the Manual:

A resolution reported from the Committee on Rules fixing a day for the consideration of business reported from a particular committee is in order at any time as a "privileged question," for the reason that the adoption of the resolution would be pro tanto a change in the rules.

This decision was made in the first session of the Forty-ninth Congress.

Mr. DINGLEY. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP] was himself in the chair.

Mr. CRISP. I concede it has been the practice, during the present Congress at least, upon a report of the Committee on Rules to treat the resolution in that way. But I protest that it is a practice more honored in the breach than the observance. I asked the question the other day, when the Committee on Rules brought in a resolution that a certain bill should be taken from the Committee of the Whole and considered in the House on a certain day, whether it was in order or competent to do that. I admit it was done; but I do not admit it was, to my mind, justly or properly done.

There is a great difference between the change of a rule and taking a particular measure without the operation of the rules. I can conceive of cases, and I doubt not members around me can, where the taking of a particular measure without the operation of a general rule might and would be denounced as absolutely revolutionary. That thing has occurred in this House. I believe it occurred in the Forty-seventh Congress, when the rules of the House were changed as to a particular measure, and it was denounced as unjust and improper. A change of rules, as suggested by my friend from Alabama [Mr. OATES], applies to all cases pending before the House. The pending resolution is a so-called change of rule that is to apply to one particular bill, and the effect of it is not to change the rule, but to take that case from the operation of the rule.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Is not that a change of the rule?

Mr. CRISP. The rule is not changed. Except as to that particular case the rule remains the same, and the result is, if this practice is permitted, that, as to every measure or any measure which a majority of the House may desire to consider, whether one way or another, in Committee of the Whole or in the House, a majority can change the rule as to that particular bill and let it stand as to all others. Is not that a suspension of the rule as to that particular bill, and not a change of rule? Ordinarily it requires two-thirds to suspend the rules, but under that practice a majority are to have the right to suspend the rule as to a particular bill, and to do it under the claim that it is a change of the rules of the House. I protest against any such doctrine as that.

Mr. HAMMOND. Mr. Speaker, if my memory be not at fault, I opposed the ruling in the Forty-seventh Congress even upon the rules in the form in which they then were. I do not mean by that exception to say that I know that in this particular they have been changed, for I have not examined; but it seems to me that there is very little difficulty in this question, and I desire to submit a few remarks in addition to what has been so well said by my colleague [Mr. CRISP] who has just taken his seat.

Rule XXVIII declares that suspension of the rules may be had by a vote of two-thirds, and that the Speaker shall not entertain a motion to suspend the rules except at a certain time. Now, special orders are made under a suspension of the rules, as I read on page 64 of the Manual. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HENDERSON] says that because one day's notice must be given to a proposed change of rule, therefore you may call up as privileged a motion to change a rule if you give one day's notice. I think that is a clear non sequiter.

As I understand the prohibition in Rule XXVIII in that particular, it means that, however desirable it may be to charge a rule, no rule shall be changed without one day's notice. Everybody is presumed to know what is in the rule, to act upon it to arrange his business affairs accordingly; and if, when a rule is found to be in the way, three members of the Committee on Rules could step outside and report a resolution to change that rule eo instanti, we would never know where we were. Therefore, that part of Rule XXVIII is simply a declaration that, however desirable it may be to change a rule, unless it is done by unanimous consent, one day must intervene between the proposition to make the change and the making of the change. Now, that does not at all affect the point under paragraph 43 of Rule XI, that all legislation as to the rules must be referred to the Committee on Rules.

Mr. LONG. Not all legislation—all action.

Mr. HAMMOND. Yes, all action. Did I misquote it?

Mr. SPRINGER. "Legislation" is right.

Mr. LONG. No; the word is "action."

Mr. SPRINGER. My book says all proposed legislation.

Mr. HAMMOND. I will quote it correctly from the book:

All proposed action touching the rules and joint rules shall be referred to the Committee on Rules.

Therefore, what the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HENDERSON] contends is not correct—that they can take any comfort from the mere declaration that you can not change the rules without a day's notice. As I have said, it does not follow that, with a day's notice, you may change the rules. If the gentleman's construction in correct, then any member may on Monday introduce a resolution to set a day for any bill he pleases, and may claim that to be privileged question simply because he has asked to set a day for the consideration of the bill.

Now, we have another rule which declares what are privileged questions. That rule says that "questions of privilege shall be first, those affecting the rights of the House collectively, its safety, dignity, and the integrity of its proceedings."

Mr. WILLIS. Will the gentleman permit me?

Mr. HAMMOND. In a moment. The rule continues: "Second, rights, reputation, and conduct of members individually in their representative capacity only, and shall have precedence of all other questions."

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman from Georgia allow the Chair to call his attention to the distinction between questions of privilege and privileged questions. The rule which the gentleman has read relates to questions of privilege, which are quite a different thing from privileged questions.

Mr. HAMMOND. I thank the Chair for the correction.

The SPEAKER. For instance, reports from committees of resolutions calling for information present privileged questions, but they are not questions of privilege. The case is the same with motions to adjourn and various questions of that sort.

Mr. HAMMOND. I stand corrected. I simply desired to add to what my friend [Mr. CRISP] has said the proposition I make that Rule XXVIII gives no support to the construction contended for.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I am inclined to think that if this were an original proposition brought before the House for the first time, the ground taken by the gentleman from Georgia that it amounts to a suspension of the rules would be correct; but his doctrine would surely apply to every motion of similar character which comes from the Committee on Rules—that is, every motion proposing to set aside a day for the consideration of a particular subject which can not be considered under the general rules of the House on the day designated.

Mr. CRISP. I would call that a "special order," and not a change of the rules.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. Then I say a "special order" in that sense of the term is just as much a suspension of the rules, whether it comes from the Committee on Rules or from any other source.

Mr. LONG. And if it is a suspension how do you reach it?

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. If the gentleman from Massachusetts will wait a moment I will show him.

I say that the character of the proposition can not be affected by the source from which it comes. Its character depends on the form and effect of the resolution itself. Now, the practice of this House during all this session has been to treat such a resolution when coming from the Committee on Rules as a motion not to suspend, but to change the rules; and by that practice perhaps this House is to be governed.

But, Mr. Speaker, admitting for the moment that this is a motion to suspend the rules, what effect would that have on the status of the resolution presented by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HENDERSON]? It is before the House; it must be considered by the House, even though it be, as intimated by the gentleman from Georgia, a motion not to change the rules but to suspend the rules, because the only provision in the rules——

Mr. CRISP. I claim that it is not before the House.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. Allow me to insist that it is before the House, because the motion, if it be called a motion, to suspend the rules was made in an orderly manner, was entertained by the Chair, and the consideration of it was simply laid over for a day. Now the Chair might have decided, if the gentleman then occupying the chair had so believed, that this was a motion not to change, but to suspend the rules, and that he could not admit it at that time, that not being, I believe, the first or third Monday of the month. But the Chair did not so decide. He admitted the resolution; he entertained the motion, and decided that it should be laid over. It is now before the House. The gentleman from Iowa has called it up; he has the floor to discuss it. At the expiration of the time allowed him under the rules I suppose a motion might be made to refer it to any committee whatever; but until that time comes the point of order can not be made upon it, even if it should be decided to be a motion to suspend the rules.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Speaker, the great inconvenience to result from any proposed construction of the rules is a fair argument against adopting such construction. Now what would be the result in the working of the machinery of this House if we should adopt the construction of the rule as contended for by the gentleman from Iowa? That construction proposes to suspend the methods of transacting business on reports of our committees, and subject the whole machinery of this House at any time to the will of one man.

Now, the gentleman from Iowa has called up a private bill. He calls it up as a question of privilege. He undertakes to force the House, whether willing or unwilling, to test its will as to whether it will pass that bill or not. If one gentleman from Iowa can do this, all the gentlemen from Iowa can do it; and if all the gentlemen from Iowa can do it, every one of the three hundred and twenty-five members of this House can do it. Under such a construction I can come in to-morrow morning and give notice that on some designated day—the day after or two days after—I will call up some private bill affecting the interests of some constituent of mine, and whether this House be willing or not, it is compelled to consider that bill because it is a question of privilege, and I can force its consideration upon the House, though I may be the only man on this floor who is interested in it or believe the House should act on it. I can absolutely ignore the will of the whole body of this House, and by my own individual act compel the House, as it is being compelled now, to hear a question involving perhaps my interest or the execution of my will alone.

Such a rule of procedure revolutionizes the whole working machinery of this House. The House is organized to do its work as examined and reported on by committees and recommended to it for adoption. The House has adopted uniform rules affecting all measures as to when they shall be considered and how they shall be acted on. But here comes in a factor which revolutionizes the whole method of procedure in this House. It is claimed now that one member upon his mere motion can submit a proposition as a matter of privilege, calling it an amendment of the rules, and compel the House, willing or unwilling, to determine that question, ignoring all its other business in order to do it. As soon as that is done another member can get up and repeat the operation, and this may be extended through the whole time of the session. And if the proposition contended for by the gentleman from Iowa is sound, this House is without a remedy, because the privilege is claimed on the part of the individual member as a constitutional privilege. If the member has this right, he has it by virtue of constitutional guarantee, and if so the House can not take it away from him. Here, therefore, is the great inconvenience——

Mr. WILLIS. Will the gentleman allow me to ask one question?

Mr. MILLS. Certainly.

Mr. WILLIS. Does the gentleman recognize the right of the majority of this House to control its business?

Mr. MILLS. Certainly; and the majority of this House have made rules for the government of the House in the transaction of its business.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. The majority must control business under the rules.

Mr. MILLS. Yes, business must be controlled by the methods of procedure which have been adopted by the majority; and these methods, though at all times under the will of the majority, are not under the will of one man.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, as this is District of Columbia day, in accordance with the suggestion made by the Speaker, and as the questions involved here are vital and important, I will let this matter lie over until after the reading of the Journal to-morrow, which will give ample time.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that, under the decisions heretofore made, it has little doubt about the right of a member under Rule XXVIII to give the notice at any time as an independent proposition either in the technical form of a notice or in the form of a resolution. But the question upon which the Chair has grave doubt is as to the status of this matter; that is, whether it is a privileged matter when it is called up. It has been frequently decided, as first stated, that a member has the right to give notice on the floor, but the Chair has great difficulty about the question whether it is privileged after that. That is the question which the Chair desires to examine.

Mr. RANDALL. The Chair, of course, will take into consideration the forty-third clause of Rule XI, which was inserted at the second session of the Forty-sixth Congress. The decision referred to was during the first session of that Congress.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. We will let this go over until after the reading of the Journal to-morrow morning.

Mr. RANDALL. I will discuss it then; I only want to say now the decision to which reference has been made was based upon the Constitutional right each House has to determine the rules of its own proceedings. It was then contended there was no mode under the rules to execute that constitutional right; but since then there has been a method for that purpose included in the rules of the House.

The SPEAKER. It was at the first session of the Forty-ninth Congress.

Mr. RANDALL. The word "joint" was omitted from the then rule, so that a specific time could be fixed when resolutions could be introduced for reference.

The SPEAKER. The matter will go over until to-morrow morning.

Mr. SPRINGER. Does the gentleman desire to call this up to-morrow morning?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has given notice that he will call it up to-morrow morning after the reading of the Journal.

Mr. SPRINGER. Before the House passes to the regular order I desire to say just one word.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman's suggestions in the morning.

Mr. SPRINGER. The Chair, I presume by that time, will be ready to decide upon it. [Laughter.] I hope the Chair will come with a written opinion on the subject so as to cover the point.

The SPEAKER. The matter will go over until to-morrow morning after the reading of the Journal.

PRINTING OF MEXICAN PENSION BILL.

Mr. BARKSDALE, from the Committee on Printing, reported back the following resolution, submitted by Mr. MATSON, January 24, 1887, with a substitute.

Mr. MATSON'S resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That 5,000 additional copies of the bill known as the Mexican pension bill, which passed the House on January 17, 1887, be printed for the use of the House.

Resolved, That 5,000 additional copies of House bill 10457 for the relief of dependent parents and honorably discharged soldiers and sailors who are now disabled and dependent upon their own labor for support, which also passed the House on January 17, 1887, be printed for the use of the House.

Mr. BARKSDALE. Read the report of the committee.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the resolution providing for printing the Mexican pension bill, have amended the same so as to read as follows:

Resolved, That 10,000 additional copies of the Mexican pension bill, which passed the House on January 17, 1887, be printed in law form for the use of the House.

The estimated cost is $38. The Public Printer estimates the approximate cost of the amount of printing previously ordered by Congress within the present fiscal year is $134,648.02.

The committee recommend the passage of the resolution as amended.

Mr. MATSON. I understand the report of the committee provides only for the printing of additional copies of the Mexican pension bill. Copies of the bill vetoed by the President are exhaused.

The SPEAKER. That bill with the President's veto message has been ordered to be reprinted.

Mr. BARKSDALE. Reprinted and referred.

Mr. MATSON. How many copies?

Mr. BARKSDALE. The usual number.

Mr. STEELE. I ask that the resolution shall also provide for the printing of the disability bill.

The SPEAKER. The committee struck out that portion of the resolution.

Mr. STEELE. I ask that the resolution shall also provide for the printing of the bill to which I have referred.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has a right to move an amendment.

Mr. STEELE. I move then the bill and veto message be printed.

The SPEAKER. How many copies?

Mr. STEELE. Ten thousand copies, I think, will be sufficient.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I move to print the veto message and the text of vetoed bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks also to include the bill vetoed by the President.

Mr. BARKSDALE. If gentlemen will withdraw their amendments I will submit an independent resolution on that subject for reference to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. STEELE. Let us have the order entered now.

Mr. BARKSDALE. I submit to the gentleman from Indiana the reason why it is necessary. Under the law estimates should accompany the committee's report. Estimates have not been made as to the cost of printing the President's veto message. I ask the gentleman to withdraw his amendment in order that I may introduce that independent resolution.

Mr. STEELE. I insist on my amendment to print 10,000 copies of the text of the bill and the message of the President's veto.

Mr. BARKSDALE. I hope that will not be done.

The question recurred on Mr. STEELE'S amendment.

Mr. BARKSDALE. I call for a division.

Mr. DUNHAM. Did the gentleman call in time?

Mr. FARQUHAR. The call was in time, and I called for a division before the chairman of the committee.

The SPEAKER. The Chair always takes the statements of gentlemen.

Mr. STEELE. In deference to the wishes of gentlemen around me, perhaps I had better accede to the suggestion of the chairman of the Committee on Printing. [Cries of "No! No!"] Very well; then I insist upon the amendment.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 75, noes 38.

So the amendment was adopted.

The amendment reported by the committee was adopted.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

Mr. BARKSDALE moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

REPORT ON COMMERCE.

Mr. BARKSDALE. I submit another privileged report from the Committee on Printing.

The Clerk read as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, February 7, 1887.

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That 15,000 additional copies of the report on commerce by William F. Switzler, Chief of the Bureau of Statistics, be printed, 10,000 for the use of the House and 5,000 for the use of the Senate.

The Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the accompanying resolution, report the same back amended so as to read as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That 15,000 additional copies be printed of the reports on internal commerce by William F. Switzler, Chief of the Bureau of Statistics, being part 2 of the report on commerce and navigation submitted by him on the 20th of December, 1886, 10,000 copies for the use of the House and 5,000 for the use of the Senate, and to recommend the passage of the resolution as so amended.

The estimated cost is $8,384.30.

The Public Printer estimates the approximate cost of printing previously ordered by Congress within the present fiscal year at $736,331.75.

The amendment was adopted.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

Mr. BARKSDALE moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

EMPLOYÉS, ETC., AT NAVY-YARDS.

Mr. WISE. Mr. Speaker, I am instructed by the Committee on Naval Affairs to report back the following resolution of inquiry with an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, directed to furnish this House with a list of all persons employed at the several navy-yards of the United States from January 1, 1886, to January 1, 1887, with the purposes for which employed, rates of compensation, and dates of employment; also a list of all persons discharged from the several navy-yards of the United States between the dates of January 1, 1886, and January 1, 1887, with rates of compensation, purposes for which employed, and dates and reasons for their discharge.

The Committee on Naval Affairs has considered the resolution referred to it by the House, making certain inquiries concerning the navy-yards of the United States, and recommend its passage with the following amendment:

"Also that the Secretary inform the House whether any, and, if so, what, orders have been issued for the transfer of the plants and materials of certain bureaus at navy-yards to certain other bureaus, and for the disposal of the plants and materials of certain bureaus; and whether it is designed to permanently discontinue the operations of any of the bureaus at any of the navy-yards, and, if so, by what authority and in pursuance of what policy of naval administration."

Mr. MCMILLIN. Before action is taken I would like to know what is the object of this resolution. There is a great deal of information asked for which any member can obtain for himself by a mere inspection of the Blue Book.

Mr. WISE. The gentleman from Maine who introduced the original resolution can answer the inquiry better than I can.

Mr. STORM. Is debate in order?

The SPEAKER. It is, the previous question not having been ordered.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Mr. Speaker, in reply to the inquiry of the gentleman from Tennessee I would say the object of this resolution is to put the House in possession, officially, of the facts connected with the transfer of material and plants, as well as the personnel of several of the bureaus of the Navy Department at certain navy-yards to certain other bureaus, so as to enable the House to understand, when acting upon the appropriation bill which will shortly be brought before us, what the policy of the Department is with regard to the great navy-yards of the country. We are advised by the public press, and in various unofficial ways, and also by the publication of official orders which have been issued, that the Navy Department has entered upon a new system of organization at the various navy-yards, or at least at some of them.

Mr. MCMILLIN. What I was trying to get at—I can see that the amendment of the committee looks to that—but there is a great deal of information asked there which I take it is contained in the Blue Book.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I beg the gentleman's pardon; I think not.

Mr. MCMILLIN. It refers to the employés of the Department, and I take it that information is contained in the Blue Book.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Oh, no; none of them are in the Blue Book, except, of course, those that are employed in a certain class or grade.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Certainly, it contains a list of the officers of the Navy.

Mr. BOUTELLE. But not the employés.

Mr. MCMILLIN. And hence this contemplates the obtaining of information that I hold is accessible to anybody who chooses to look for it.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I will state to the gentleman that the Blue Book only gives the names of the employés of the civil establishment. This resolution is directed more particularly to the mechanics and artisans, the men who are employed to carry on the functions of the various mechanical bureaus of the Department. The object is to obtain information as to the number of men employed during the past year, the length of time they were employed, the purposes for which employed, and the transfer of numbers of them from one yard to another in connection with the transfer of various bureaus from one navy-yard to another.

Mr. SAYERS rose.

Mr. WISE. I call for the previous question.

Mr. RANDALL. I move to lay the resolution and amendment on the table.

The question being taken on Mr. RANDALL'S motion, there were—ayes 81. Before the negative vote was counted,

Mr. BOUTELLE said: I ask for the yeas and nays. If we can not get this information we want the country to know why.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. Let the resolution be reported again.

The SPEAKER. The resolution has been once reported, but if there be no objection it will be again read.

There being no objection, the resolution and amendment were again read.

Mr. REED. I think that is just to the Secretary.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 124, nays 114, not voting 80; as follows:

YEAS—124.

CONSIDERATION OF EDUCATION BILL.

Mr. WILLIS. I give notice of the resolution which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Education be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (S. 194) entitled "A bill to aid in the establishment and temporary support of common schools," and that Saturday, February 19, 1887, immediately after the reading of the Journal, be set apart for the consideration of the same in the House, no other business to be transacted until the consideration of said bill is concluded; said consideration to continue from day to day until concluded. Should the consideration of said bill be displaced on the day named, the next day shall be set apart for the same purpose, and so on until the bill shall be finally voted on as provided herein.

Mr. WILLIS. I ask that that resolution lie over for one day.

Mr. SPRINGER. I raise the question of order on this resolution; first, that it is not now in order to be introduced not being a privileged question; and, secondly, that if introduced in the call of States it must be referred to the Committee on Rules.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. I desire to make a point of order that may be slightly different; that it is not in order for the Speaker to entertain the resolution, it being a motion to suspend the rules, except on the first and third Mondays of the month.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not entertain the resolution now for the consideration of the House. If the Chair entertains it at all it would be under the first clause of Rule XXVIII, which the Chair thinks has not been abrogated by the amendment of the rule permitting the introduction of resolutions for amendments of the rules when the States are called.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. HEMPHILL. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. RANDALL. My opinion is that this matter is akin to the one which the Speaker has already under consideration, and which the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HENDERSON] has allowed to go over; therefore I suggest that this also go over, all rights of all parties being reserved.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks there are two distinct questions presented. First, as to the right of a member to give the notice under the first clause of Rule XXVIII, either by the introduction of a resolution or otherwise; and, secondly, the question as to what the privilege of such a notice or resolution may be when it next comes up. The second question the Chair has expressed doubt about in another case, and has asked that it go over until to-morrow.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Let the whole matter go over until to-morrow.

Mr. SPRINGER. I have made the point of order distinctly that that notice cannot be given at this time.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would like to hear the gentleman upon that question.

Mr. RANDALL. He can be heard upon it to-morrow in connection with the other matter, because they are kindred questions.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make my point of order distinctly now, and to reserve any remarks upon it till to-morrow. The point of order which I make is this, that it is not competent, under the clause of the rule to which the Speaker has referred, to give the notice provided for in that clause at this time, because that notice can only be given on Monday, when the States are called for the introduction of bills and resolutions, or on a report of the Committee on Rules after the order has been publicly referred to them in the House. If the Committee on Rules should bring forward an original proposition to amend the rules which had not been refered to the committee, no notice of that proposition would have been given to the House, and then this rule would apply and would require the proposition to lie over one day.

Secondly, I make the point that no such proposition for the amendment of the rules can change the provision of clause 43 of Rule XI, which provides that all proposed action touching the rules and joint rules shall be referred to the Committee on Rules.

The SPEAKER. That is a question not now involved, on the statement made by the Chair.

Mr. SPRINGER. But I make the point that the time to bring in this proposition is when the States are called for the introduction of bills and resolutions, and if the Chair entertains it now, I shall make the further point that it must go to the Committee on Rules.

The SPEAKER. But if the Chair entertains it now, it will not be for consideration, either by reference or otherwise; but merely to lie over.

Mr. SPRINGER. I make the point that it can not be introduced as a question of privilege. There is a place provided by the rules where it can come in, and when the House has provided and prescribed one way of introducing a proposition, all others are excluded. That leaves the business of the House to proceed in a regular manner. Depart from that practice in the manner proposed, and what would be the condition of things?

If this proposition is entertained now, if the House holds that the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIS] may introduce his proposition and to-morrow may call it up as a matter of privilege, and have the House adopt it by a majority vote, suppose I, to-day, offer this proposition: That Thursday next, after the morning hour, shall be set apart for the consideration of House bill 1620 to reduce tariff-taxes and to modify the laws in relation to the collection of revenue; that it shall be in order on that day to consider said bill in the House, and after thirty minutes' debate thereon the previous question shall be deemed as ordered on the bill, and the bill shall be put upon its passage, and but one dilatory motion shall be entertained until the question is put on the final passage of the bill. I might introduce that proposition, and other gentlemen might tax their ingenuity in framing similar propositions, and the result would be that the House could be kept occupied from now until the 4th of March in discussing propositions to make bills special orders and to prescribe the manner in which they should be considered.

Now, Mr. Speaker, if there ever was a time when the minority of the House of Representatives should assert its rights to have the rules enforced, this is the time. Such a departure as is here proposed would place the minority entirely at the mercy of the majority upon every bill; the majority would be able, upon one day's notice, to take out of the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, or from the Private Calendar, or from the House Calendar, any bill there pending, make it a special order by an iron-clad rule that could not be departed from, and force it to a passage, cutting off all debate and bringing the House to a direct vote. Sir, this proposition is a departure from the method of legislation which we have pursued in this country ever since the House of Representatives was organized, and if it is entertained we may give up all hope of transacting any other business during the remainder of this session, and devote ourselves to fixing special orders which can never be reached for consideration, because all the time will be consumed in making such special orders.

The SPEAKER. But the Chair thinks the question which the gentleman from Illinois is now discussing is not involved in the matter before the Chair. The simple question now before the Chair is, can the gentleman from Kentucky avail himself of the privilege permitted by the first clause of Rule XXVIII and introduce his resolution to lie over? The question is not what may be the effect of that hereafter.

Mr. SPRINGER. I make that point; and I make all other points that can be made against the proposition. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The Chair agrees with the gentleman from Illinois that if the House had provided but one way for the introduction of propositions to change or amend the rules, that would exclude all other methods. But has not the House in fact provided two ways of introducing these resolutions—first under Rule XXVIII, which provides that "no standing rule or order of the House shall be rescinded or changed without one day's notice of the motion therefor;" and then again by the amendment to clause 1, of Rule XXIV, which provides that—

Each Monday morning during a session of Congress, immediately after the Journal of the proceedings of the last day's sitting has been read and approved, the Speaker shall call all the States and Territories in alphabetical order for bills and joint resolutions for printing and reference without debate, on which call, &c.

Previous to the first session of the Forty-ninth Congress the clause of the rule which the Chair has just read provided only for the introduction and reference of bills and joint resolutions, so that by the terms of that clause resolutions to amend the rules of the House were not in order when the States were called. But as early as the Forty-third Congress it was decided by Mr. Speaker Blaine that during the call of States resolutions for the amendment of the rules might be presented and referred—presented for reference only—and that practice has been adhered to consistently since that time.

The Chair thinks, therefore, that the amendment of clause 1 of Rule XXIV does not repeal or rescind the first clause of Rule XXVIII, but that it was cumulative; that it gave to a member not only the right which he previously had to introduce resolutions upon a notice to amend the rules, to lie over one day, but also the additional right by the express terms of the rule to offer such propositions when the States and Territories are called. But if offered during the call of States, they are offered for immediate reference only; whereas if offered under the first clause of Rule XXVIII they are offered to lie over.

Now, the question as to what the status of the gentleman's resolution will be to-morrow or the next day, or any other day when it may be called up, the Chair is not deciding, but is simply deciding that the gentleman has the right to submit the proposition for such action as may be proper under the rules hereafter.

Mr. WILLIS. That is all I desire.

Mr. DINGLEY. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Does the Chair rule that a resolution setting apart a particular day for the consideration of a bill is a "rule" within the proper meaning of that term?

The SPEAKER. That is one of the questions which the Chair will consider in connection with this resolution hereafter.

Mr. DINGLEY. If it is not a "rule," then notice of it can not be given.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Mr. Speaker, one point which I desire to reserve is that this proposition of the gentleman from Kentucky does not involve a change of the rules of the House, but is simply an effort to consider one bill, leaving every rule of the House as it is with regard to all other bills, even bills of a similar class.

The SPEAKER. That point has been made, and is one of the points which the Chair will consider in connection with the question which has gone over until to-morrow morning.

Several MEMBERS. Regular order!

Mr. SPRINGER. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Did the Speaker decide that the gentleman from Kentucky might, under clause 1 of Rule XXVIII, give this notice at this time?

The SPEAKER. The Chair did so decide.

Mr. SPRINGER. Then, while protesting against the ruling of the Chair, I desire to send up a resolution to be considered under the same ruling.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. The State of Illinois is not on call, I believe. I make that point of order.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That Thursday next, after the morning hour, shall be set apart for the consideration of House bill 1620, to reduce tariff-taxes and to modify the laws in relation to the collection of the revenue; that it shall be in order on that day to consider said bill in the House; and after thirty minutes' debate thereon, the previous question shall be deemed as ordered, and the bill shall be put on its passage; and but one dilatory motion shall be entertained until the question is put on the final passage of the bill.

The SPEAKER. This resolution will lie over.

Mr. DINGLEY. I wish to make the point of order that this resolution is not a "rule," and is not a matter of which the gentleman can give notice.

The SPEAKER. That is the same point which was made in the other case, and will come up for determination hereafter.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MCMILLIN). The Chair will state that the reading of the resolution is in order, but not the reading of the article.

Mr. LAWLER. I ask the article also be read.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I object.

Objection was subsequently withdrawn, and the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. LAWLER submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs:

Resolved, That the Secretary of State be, and is hereby, requested to inform the House whether the terms of the treaty of Ghent, by which peace was consummated between the United States and Great Britain in December, 1814, and ratified by the Senate in February, 1815, are construed to inhibit the United States from maintaining an effective navy on the Northern lakes bordering the Dominion of Canada; and also whether the construction by Great Britain of the Welland Canal is not in effect a violation of the treaty of Ghent, and in case of war with that country a menace to the safety of our lake-board cities.

The article referred to is as follows:

IN CASE OF WAR—HOW BRITISH GUNBOATS WOULD DEVASTATE OUR LAKE CITIES—AN ENGLISH VIEW OF TWENTY-FIVE YEARS AGO.

[London Times, January 7, 1862.]

Many people may be surprised to learn that, in the event of an American war, the safety of Canada is likely in the first instance to be threatened by water and not by land. Such, however, in some sense, is really the fact, and a glance at any ordinary map of North America will show from what geographical conditions the anomaly arises. The richest and most populous territories of Canada lie on the banks of a mighty river and the shores of vast inland lakes.

It was found, in the campaign of 1813, that these lakes became the scene of the most decisive conflicts, and two victories, which were successively gained by the American flotillas, led, not indeed to the meditated conquest of Canada, but to the temporary ascendancy of our enemies in these internal waters. It was not until we acquired a superiority on Lake Ontario that the Americans relinquished these hopes of Canadian conquest. At the conclusion of the war both belligerents were busily engaged in building ships for future battles, so that great naval arsenals were actually established in the middle of a continent, and at a great distance from the sea. The treaty of peace, however, terminated this rivalry, and a principle, which has vainly been recommended in European negotiations, was practically recognized in the case before us. The two rival powers on the two shores of the lakes, instead of running a race against each other, decided that there should be no race at all.

Instead of building ship against ship and frigate against frigate they agreed to build in time of peace no vessels of war whatever; and at this moment there lies in one of the American harbors an eighty-four-gun ship, which, after being commenced in 1844, was left, in virtue of these stipulations, to remain unfinished up to the present day. In the event, however, of a renewal of such hostilities as were terminated by the treaty of Ghent, there would be a renewal of course of operations on these inland seas; for the command of the water which separates Upper Canada from the Federal territories would be equivalent to a command of the field. It becomes a question, therefore, of great interest to ascertain how this superiority is likely to be determined, and we publish this evening a detailed statement of the various conditions by which the result will be governed. It will be seen that the matter divides itself into two periods, of which the first would be the most critical for England.

Up to the month of April next the lakes may be regarded as inaccessible from the sea, and therefore whatever force is created there must be created on the spot. The Americans would build and launch their gunboats and their rafts, and so could we. Not much could be done, probably, on either side, as all the vessels must be extemporized from materials actually at hand. On both shores there are railways leading up to the water's edge, but the Americans have the advantage in population and resources at the critical points, and Sackett's Harbor, their arsenal on Lake Ontario, is an establishment for which we have no match. Still, timber is plentiful; guns, munitions, and steam machinery could be transported by railway; and so widely has the country been civilized since the last war that some of the most important towns of the Federal States, such as Milwaukee and Chicago, have risen on the shores of these once remote waters, and are, consequently, exposed to the attacks of our squadrons. The risks, therefore, are divided, and the opportunities for inflicting mischief are divided also. It may, perhaps, be admitted that for the next three months the Americans being more numerous and powerful than the Canadians, might succeed in placing on these inland seas a larger flotilla than could be launched in the same time by the colonists; but it must be remembered that this flotilla must, in any case, be rudely extemporized, and that earthworks, judiciously constructed and well armed, would suffice for the effectual protection of the menaced points against such feeble assailants.

As soon, however, as the Saint Lawrence is opened again there will be an end of our difficulty. We can then pour into the lakes such a fleet of gunboats and other crafts as will give us the complete and immediate command of these waters. Directly the navigation is clear we can send up vessel after vessel without any restrictions, except such as are imposed by the size of the canals. The Americans would have no such resource. They would have no access to the lakes from the sea, and it is impossible that they could construct vessels of any considerable power in the interval that would elapse before the ice broke up. With the opening of spring the lakes would be ours, and if the mastery of these waters is indeed the mastery of all, we may expect the result with perfect satisfaction. On the whole, therefore, the conclusion seems clear that three months hence the field will be all our own, and that in the mean time the Americans, if judiciously encountered, would not be able to do us much harm.—Buffalo Advertiser, February 4, 1887.

Mr. MORRILL. I ask that these resolutions be printed in the RECORD.

There was no objection.

The resolutions are as follows:

House concurrent resolution memorializing Congress upon the subject of pensions.

Whereas the arrears-of-pension act of Congress of March 8, 1879, provides that all pensions granted on application filed on or after July 1, 1880, shall commence from that date; and

Whereas many brave and disabled soldiers were denied arrears under this act, and without any cause for this exclusion; and

Whereas pensions granted should be commensurate with the period of disability: Therefore,

It is resolved by the house of representatives of the State of Kansas (the senate concurring therein), That Congress be requested to repeal so much of the act of 1879 as relates to the arrears limit, and the act be so amended as to extend such limit as follows: 1. To continue pensions to all widows and dependent relatives without demanding proof that the pensioner's death was caused by his service. 2. To pension the dependent parents when the pensioner leaves neither widow nor orphan. 3. To pension survivors of rebel prisons without requiring proof that the disability resulted from their imprisonment. 4. To pension all honorably discharged Union soldiers and sailors who are now dependent upon their own labor for support or who are 55 years old.

And it is further resolved, That our Representatives in Congress be, and are hereby, requested to use all proper and honorable means to secure legislation in accordance with the sentiment herein expressed.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I ask unanimous consent that these resolutions be printed in the RECORD, the document not being long.

There was no objection.

The resolutions are as follows:

House concurrent resolution No. 12.

Whereas liberal grants of land have heretofore been made by Congress to aid in the construction of railroads within the State of Kansas; and

Whereas it has been officially reported, and is generally believed, that in the administration of said grants great injustice has been done to the State and people of Kansas;

That lands within the State have been patented to the railroad companies, which lawfully belonged to settlers and citizens of the State:

That lands have been patented to said companies in excess of the amount to which they were lawfully entitled;

That lands have been withdrawn, and are now withheld from market for the benefit of said companies, "by order of the Secretary of the Interior," without authority, and in violation of law;

That parts of the lines of definite location of said roads have been abandoned, and the grants floated and made to conform to new and widely different lines, in violation of law;

That the railroad companies have sold lands to citizens of the State who were lawfully entitled to such lands under the homestead and pre-emption laws;

That there have been patented to said companies lands which lie outside and beyond the limit of the grants;

That indemnity lands have been patented to certain railroad companies, in lieu of lands occupied by homestead and pre-emption settlers, and subsequently the rights of such settlers have been contested, their entries canceled, and their lands patented to said companies without authority, and in violation of law: Now therefore,

Be it resolved by the house of representatives of the State of Kansas, That our Senators in Congress be instructed, and our Representatives requested, to support and use their influence in favor of such legislation as will secure a speedy and lawful adjustment of each and all of said grants. Also, that they use their influence before the proper executive departments of the Government at Washington, in furtherance of such an adjustment, to the end that the rights of the State and citizens of Kansas may be secured and protected.

Resolved, That a certified copy of these resolutions be forwarded by the secretary of state to each of the Kansas Senators and Representatives in Congress, and also a copy each to the Secretary of the Interior and President of the United States.

I, E. B. Allen, secretary of state of the State of Kansas, do hereby certify that the foregoing is a true and correct copy of the original resolution now on file in my office.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto subscribed my name and affixed my official seal. Done at Topeka this 5th day of February, A. D. 1887.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

The paper is as follows:

[Seventeenth session of the Legislative Assembly of the Territory of Dakota.]

Joint resolution and memorial for the passage of the Dawes bill, opening a portion of the Sioux Indian reservation.

A joint resolution and memorial to the Congress of the United States praying the passage of what is known as the Dawes bill, which provides for opening a portion of the Sioux Indian reservation in Dakota.

To the honorable the Congress of the United States:

The Legislative Assembly of the Territory of Dakota respectfully represent:

That the people of this Territory most earnestly desire and petition the passage of the bill known as the Dawes bill, now pending in the House of Representatives of the United States, providing for the opening of a portion of the Sioux Indian reservation in the Territory of Dakota.

That we believe such an act would result in justice to all persons; and the following are among some of the reasons therefor:

That this reservation separates the eastern portion of the Territory, with its large population, but without coal or wood, from the western or Black Hills part, which is supplied with wood and coal; that the opening of a portion of this reservation would give a more direct and much shorter route between the peopled eastern part of the Territory and the forest and coal-fields of the Black Hills and Montana, thereby, as we believe, give us cheaper fuel, which our people very much need.

That this reservation is composed almost entirely of prairie land, the wild grasses of which mature early in the crop season, and is allowed to burn off early every year, tending much toward the scarcity of rainfall and increase of hot winds, which have so often proved disastrous to our agricultural interests in the eastern portion of the Territory, and particularly to that part lying near the reservation.

That we believe the Indian now occupying this reservation would be bettered in his condition by a proper and judicious use of the revenue to be derived from these lands.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA.

TERRITORY OF DAKOTA, Secretary's Office:

I, M. L. McCormack, secretary of the Territory of Dakota, do hereby certify that I have carefully compared the foregoing copy of a joint resolution and memorial for the passage of the Dawes bill, opening a portion of the Sioux Indian reservation, with the enrolled original now on file in this office, and that the same is a correct transcript therefrom, and of the whole thereof.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the great seal of the Territory of Dakota, at Bismarck, this 5th day of February, 1887.

[SEAL.] M. L. McCORMACK,
Secretary of Dakota Territory.

OPENING OF CŒUR D'ALENE INDIAN RESERVATION.

The memorial is as follows:

House joint memorial No. 3.

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

Your memorialists, the council and House of Representatives of the fourteenth session of the Legislative Assembly of the Territory, respectfully represent:

That the best interests of government in this Territory would be subserved by so amending the law of Congress which prescribes the number of members of the Territorial Legislature, that each branch of the Legislative Assembly of this Territory may be composed of an odd number of members.

That the rapid settlement of new country now taking place, the great annual increase in our agricultural and mineral wealth, and a proper protection and encouragement of the Territory's every industry demand that the biennial session of sixty days allotted by Congress be entirely devoted to the people's interest and not wasted in the attempt to secure political advantages in the organization of either body as is so frequently the case.

That the House of Representatives of the tenth session of the Idaho Legislative Assembly remained in a "deadlock" for twenty-three days over its election of permanent officers, necessitating thereby the too hasty enactment of laws and the useless expenditure of thousands of dollars of the public money.

That in the council of the twelfth session a "deadlock" occurred and six days elapsed before an organization could be perfected:

That ten days were spent in effecting the organization of the present session owing to the fact that the House of Representatives is composed of an equal number of the two political parties.

Your memorialists would therefore pray that Part 10, section I, chapter 329, Supplement Revised Statutes of the United States be so amended that the council of this Territory shall be composed of thirteen members, and the House of Representatives shall be composed of twenty-five members. And your memorialists will ever pray.

That the secretary of the Territory be, and is hereby, instructed to transmit certified copies of this memorial immediately upon its adoption, to the Secretary of the Interior and to our Delegate in Congress, the Hon. JOHN HAILEY.

Passed the house of representatives January 26, A. D. 1887.

WM. B. THEWS,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

Passed the council January 26, A. D. 1887.

ALEXANDER E. MAYHEW,
President of the Council.

OFFICE OF CHIEF CLERK, HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

I do hereby certify that the within memorial originated in the house of representatives of the fourteenth session, and is entitled "House joint memorial No. 3."

Attest my hand this 31st day of January, A. D. 1887.

B. N. HILLARD, Chief Clerk.

TERRITORIAL SECRETARY'S OFFICE, IDAHO, BOISE CITY.

I, Edward J. Curtis, secretary of Idaho, do hereby certify that the foregoing house joint memorial No. 3 passed the Legislative Assembly on the 26th day of January, 1887, and is now on file in my office.

In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the seal of the Territory this 1st day of February, A. D. 1887.

V. Wright, J. W. Daniels, and C. F. Larabee, appointed by the honorable Secretary of the Interior to negotiate and treat with the various tribes of Indians of Northern

Montana, under the provisions of an act of Congress entitled "An act making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, for the year ending June 30, 1887, and for other purposes," approved May 15, 1886, have, as your memorialists believe, performed their duties with much success, and are about to depart from Montana.

That, as your memorialists believe, it was the intent of said act to include the Crow Indians "situated south of the Yellowstone River, in Montana," among the tribes to be treated with by said commissioners on the subjects mentioned therein, but by a strict construction thereof said commission feel unauthorized to treat with said tribe.

That by the allotment of lands in severalty to the said Crow Indians a large tract of their reservation lying west of the Big Horn River, comprising agricultural, grazing, and mineral lands, is wholly unnecessary for the use of said tribe, and should be opened to settlement by citizens of the United States.

Wherefore your memorialists urgently pray that your honorable bodies enact such measure as necessary to enable said commissioners to treat and negotiate with the said Crow Indians before leaving Montana.

And your memorialists, as in duty bound, will ever pray.

F. H. ARMSTRONG,
Speaker of the House.
R. O. HICKMAN,
President of the Council.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has now gone through the call of States and Territories; but, if there be no objection, the Chair will recognize gentlemen who were not in their seats when their States were called.

Mr. BARBOUR. I demand the regular order of business.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman insist on his demand for the regular order of business?

Mr. BARBOUR. Yes, I insist on the regular order of business.

OKLAHOMA.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. I desire to introduce a resolution and to have it lie over.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The resolution will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That Friday, February 18, 1887, immediately after the reading of the Journal, shall be set apart for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7217) for the organization of the Territory of Oklahoma; and the consideration of said bill shall continue from day to day, and no other business shall be transacted until said bill be disposed of. That the said bill shall be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The resolution will lie over one day.

Mr. BARBOUR. I demand the regular order of business.

Mr. LONG. I reserve all questions of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order is a bill coming from the Committee on the District of Columbia.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. PEEL. I am instructed by the Committee on Indian Affairs to report back the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10394) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with the various Indian tribes for the year ending June 30, 1888, and for other purposes, and to move that they be non-concurred in, and a conference be requested on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BARBOUR. I renew the demand for the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. There are gentlemen seeking to introduce bills who were not in their seats when their States were called. Does the gentleman desire to cut them off from that privilege?

Mr. BARBOUR. So much time has been taken up this morning that I think the Committee on the District of Columbia should be entitled at least to the remainder of the day.

Mr. HENLEY. I give the gentleman notice that by calling a quorum and other motions he will probably lose more time by refusing to permit a few gentlemen to be recognized than he will gain by insisting upon the demand.

Mr. BARBOUR. I shall not insist.

IMPROVING HUMBOLDT BAR.

Mr. HENLEY submitted a resolution of the Legislature of the State of California, relative to the matter of securing an appropriation for the purpose of improving Humboldt Bar; which was referred to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

SALE OR GIFT OF INTOXICATING LIQUORS, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. SESSIONS introduced a bill (H. R. 11189) to prevent the selling or giving away of intoxicating liquors in the District of Columbia except for medicinal purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

COAST DEFENSES.

Mr. JOHNSON, of New York, submitted resolutions of the State of New York favoring coast defenses; which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. JOHNSON, of New York. I ask unanimous consent that the resolutions be printed in the RECORD.

There was no objection.

The resolutions are as follows:

STATE OF NEW YORK, IN ASSEMBLY,
Albany, February 3, 1887.

Mr. Crosby offered:

Whereas the progress made by other nations in the means of naval warfare and the failure of the United States to provide proper defensive works exposes all our principal sea and lake ports to capture even by any third-rate power piratically inclined; and

Whereas the great commercial metropolis of the United States, the city of New York, is in especial danger, on account of its enormous wealth, the excellence of its harbor, and the facilities of approach both by the Sandy Hook entrance and by the entrance at the east end of Long Island Sound: Therefore,

Be it resolved (if the senate concur), That the Legislature of the State of New York earnestly recommends to Congress the adoption of measures necessary in order to protect and fortify the seaports of our country, and for that purpose to make adequate appropriations, so that the work may be begun at the earliest practicable moment.

Resolved, That the attention of Congress is especially invited to the exposed condition of the harbor of New York and to the need of defensive works at the Sandy Hook entrance and at the entrance at the east end of Long Island Sound.

Resolved, That so much of the late message of the President of the United States, and of the annual reports of the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy, as relates to the subject of seacoast defense and the rehabilitation of our Navy, meets the hearty concurrence of the Legislature.

Resolved, That the Senators and Members of the House of Representatives from the State of New York be requested to use their influence and to put forth their earnest efforts toward securing appropriations for the continuance of work at the entrance of the harbor of the port of New York at Sandy Hook and for all other needed means of coast defense.

By order of the assembly,

C. A. CHICKERING, Clerk.

IN SENATE, February 2, 1887.

Concurred in by order of the senate.

JOHN W. VROOMAN, Clerk.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order of business is the consideration of bills reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. BARBOUR. I move that the House now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole to consider the Private Calendar.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, Mr. CRISP in the chair.

TAXATION OF LOUISE HOME.

Mr. BARBOUR. I ask now to call up the bill (S. 1429) to exempt from taxation all property held by the trustees of the Louise Home, and for other purposes.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That all property held as endowment fund by the trustees of the Louise Home, in the city of Washington, D. C., for the purpose of revenue to support said institution, shall be, and the same is hereby, declared exempt from all taxation and assessments by the municipal authorities or by the United States so long as the same shall be so held; and all taxes and assessments made or imposed upon any of the property of said trustees subsequent to the 21st day of November, 1869, whether real, personal, or mixed, be, and the same are hereby, released: Provided, That real estate heretofore purchased by said trustees in the management of the endowment fund shall be exempt from taxation only while so held, and not to exceed five years from the passage of this act.

Mr. ROWELL. I move that this bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. This, Mr. Chairman, is the same question that was up before, whether property held as an investment by a charitable institution shall be exempt from taxation by law in the District of Columbia.

The House will remember that it is at least an unusual thing. The House will remember that in almost all of the States property held for the actual purposes of a charitable organization is ordinarily exempt from taxation, but that held by such organizations as an investment fund is not so exempt, and I know of no reason why any other rule should be applied in the District of Columbia. Indeed, Mr. Chairman, I think we should be all the more careful when we are relieving certain property in this District from taxation, and thereby imposing additional burdens upon other property-owners, for the reason that they have no right to be heard in their own behalf. I believe that, if this becomes a general rule, all charitable organizations will be induced to invest their endowment funds here instead of elsewhere, and the result will be that a very great bulk of property will be held in the dead hands of charitable organizations and free from tax.

I say nothing against this magnificent charity. We should go to the extent of giving it all the privileges that a proper regard for the welfare of the citizens generally, founded upon public policy, would permit us to go, but no further. We should not make this an exception to the general rule, which ought to prevail here as it prevails in the States of the Union, that that property and that only which is held by churches or charitable organizations for the actual purposes of charity should be exempt from taxation, while that property which is held for purposes of profit, however charitable the purposes to which the proceeds of that fund shall be applied, is to be compelled to pay and should be subjected to the same rule of taxation as is the case with reference to all other property.

Mr. BARBOUR. It seems to me that this is a very plain question. It was considered in the other bill which was pending before the House on the last District day.

As the gentleman from Illinois says, the question really is confined to the endowment fund, Congress having heretofore relieved this Louise Home from taxation. It seems Mr. Corcoran donated so much real estate and so much money, estimated in the report at $200,000 real estate and upward of $300,000 in money. The money had to be donated for an endowment fund, and had to be invested as an endowment fund. In making this investment the money was loaned by the trustees upon mortgages secured upon real estate; but owing to the difficulty of making collections, the parties not being able to pay the mortgages, the trustees of this endowment fund had to buy in the property in order to save the debt. Now I cannot see for myself why an endowment fund set apart for this charity, for those old ladies who have been reduced to indigence and poverty, why this fund should be reduced or crippled by the assessment of it for taxation.

I understand also that in making that investment for this charity the trustees lost a considerable amount of money; and I understand also that a good deal of money, as set out in the report, was lost by the charges made for the special improvements in that part of the city where the Louise Home is located.

This is nothing but a charity, a charity which is open, as I understand, to the women of the country from every section of the United States.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I understand that not to be the case.

Mr. BARBOUR. I heard that stated here the other day informally in a private conversation, and I asked Mr. Corcoran himself what were the facts. He said the very first three persons admitted into that asylum were two from Boston and the other from Pennsylvania. I know very little personally about this matter, but it strikes me if the property of this institution, dedicated as it is to this great charitable purpose, if the real property and other property should be exempt from taxation the endowment fund ought to be treated in the same way.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Are the nature and character of the charities set out in the report?

Mr. BARBOUR. Yes, sir; and the legislation in regard to it. Congress in 1869 chartered this corporation, and in 1879 exempted its property from taxation.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. Then that has been already done.

Mr. BARBOUR. That has been done; but what they want now is that the endowment fund should not be curtailed by taxation.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Would it not be better to have the report read?

Mr. ROWELL. The report is somewhat lengthy.

Mr. BARBOUR. The taxation that would be realized by this bill amounts, I think, to $4,200 with interest at 10 per cent.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. In all that the gentleman from Virginia has said in favor of this institution, I heartily concur. But why should we infer, because of the merit of the institution, that we have the right, for the benefit of that institution, to impose an additional tax upon every property-holder in this District? Yet every one will see on a moment's consideration that that is the effect of this bill; and that it is simply to support this institution to a larger extent by taxation than it would be supported if this bill did not pass.

Now we pay money out of the general Treasury, and we also collect money from the pockets of the property-holders of the District for public purposes. If this is a worthy object, and I certainly agree that it is, I am willing, if it is necessary, to vote to pay this additional money out of the Treasury of the United States rather than vote to pay it out of the pockets of the tax-payers of the District who have no representative on the floor of this House.

Mr. HEMPHILL. This bill proposes to exempt from taxation certain investment property devoted to the maintenance of the Louise Home. The gentleman who has last addressed the committee says he is willing to vote certain sums of money out of the public treasury, if necessary, for this purpose.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. What I said was that it would be more just for us, representing the people of the United States, to vote to pay the money of the people of the United States for such a purpose than to vote to pay for it the money of those who have no representative on this floor.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I understand we all represent the good people of the District of Columbia, and that we have as much right to legislate for them as for anybody else. And it must be manifest to the members of this House that if there was any disposition on the part of anybody in the District of Columbia to oppose this bill they would have entered some protest or made some objection to the committee which has had it in charge. The bill has passed the Senate, having been reported favorably by the committee of the Senate. It has been to the committee of the House, and is reported favorably by that committee; and so far as I know not a single person in this District has made the slightest objection to this. And I do not see well how any person in the District of Columbia, who has any sense of propriety, would object to exempting this property from taxation.

Mr. DINGLEY. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. HEMPHILL. Yes, sir.

Mr. DINGLEY. Is it not true that the benefits of this institution inure almost entirely to the people of this District?

Mr. HEMPHILL. I am not able to say where these good ladies come from. There are over forty of them in that institution who are not now able to make a living for themselves; they are people who have been in better circumstances in former years, but the tide of life has turned against them and they are too old to work, too honest to steal, and too proud to beg; and it is simply a question whether the Congress of the United States will give any recognition whatever to an institution which has so much of humanity in it.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. Congress has already exempted the property held by the institution from taxation.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Yes; Congress exempted the real estate from taxation by the charter of the institution. This bill has reference to the endowment fund, which yields $15,000, as I am told, devoted to the support of forty or fifty ladies, and as a mere matter of money calculation it is cheaper to exempt this property from taxation and allow these people to have it than it is to take charge of them and support them at any other of the institutions in this District. As is well known, all or most of the charitable institutions of the District are not only exempt from taxation, but Congress annually makes appropriations in aid of their support. This institution does not ask for anything except to be exempted from taxation.

It may be said properly too and truthfully that this building was erected by private munificence. And not only was the building erected, but the paving of the streets, the water-works, the sewers, gas, and everything of that kind were all provided by this institution out of its own private funds.

The District commissioners afterward changed the level of Massachusetts avenue and the streets around there and put this institution to an expense of between $12,000 and $15,000, every cent of which was paid out of the funds of the institution. All that has ever been paid back was the pittance of $400; whereas private owners and other institutions in that portion of the city have been reimbursed for the damages that they have suffered, and the actual expense they have incurred has been refunded to them.

Mr. REED. Do you think that their having suffered damage for another cause is a reason for passing this bill?

Mr. HEMPHILL. I think this about it, that it shows a generous and humane disposition upon the part of the managers of this institution to pay out of their own funds that which they might have had a right to compel the tax-payers of this District to pay, and if they have been fair and honest in dealing with the tax-payers, and have pocketed a loss of between $12,000 and $15,000, it seems to me that a spirit of kindness, justice, and reciprocity should induce the tax-payers of the District to exempt them from this taxation.

Mr. LONG. Why should there not be a general law applying to all charitable institutions?

Mr. HEMPHILL. I do not see any objection to that if anybody had introduced such a measure, but it would be very unfortunate for this bill if it should be slaughtered now at the end of a session of Congress simply because a general bill has not been introduced. So far as I am concerned, I am in favor of putting everybody on the same level in this matter.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. Is there a like law anywhere?

Mr. HOLMES. Is there any law of this kind for the exemption of the personal property of any charitable institution?

Mr. HEMPHILL. I do not know, of course, about the laws of all the States in the Union; but if you wish to do a matter of justice, I do not think that you need any precedent.

Mr. HOLMES. I mean so far as Federal legislation is concerned.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I do not know about that. Now, Mr. Chairman, I think the House understands the question, and, unless further discussion is desired, I would like to have a vote.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, if I understand this bill (and if I do not I hope the gentleman will correct me), it proposes that in the event of this endowment fund being invested in other real estate, such real estate shall hereafter be exempt from taxation.

Mr. HEMPHILL. No, sir. It simply proposes to exempt the endowment fund. There is a provision at the end of the bill that certain real estate which the institution was compelled to buy in shall be exempt from taxation, provided it is disposed of within five years; otherwise, it is to be subject to taxation. The fact is that they had to buy in certain real estate upon which they had a claim, and certain taxes will soon fall due upon that real estate, if they have not already accrued, and this bill proposes to exempt that property from taxation, if disposed of within five years, with the provision that after that period it shall go back into the taxable property of the District.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. In what form of property is the endowment fund invested?

Mr. HEMPHILL. In personal property, so far as I know. I know that about $100,000 of it is invested in the bonds or stock of the District of Columbia, and the result of the present system is that the District is taxing its own obligations which are held by a charitable institution and devoted to charitable purposes.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. The mortgages of course draw interest.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I presume so.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Well, Mr. Chairman, this strikes me a good deal like some of the patent-extension bills that are brought in here. They are ostensibly for the benefit of some blind man or some poor woman, and while we suppose that we are legislating for some such person, we find instead that we are actually extending a patent. Here is a charitable institution, and a very noble one—an institution which none of us would in any possible way seek to hamper—but it is not the charitable institution that is legislated for in this bill. What the bill proposes is that certain capital owned in this District shall be exempt from taxation. That capital, to be sure, was generously given by Mr. Corcoran, but does the fact that he dedicated it to a charitable purpose put this capital in any different position from other capital invested in the District, say in banking? Dollars are dollars, real estate is real estate; and upon the broad principle I object, so far as I am concerned, and shall vote against this bill which proposes to exempt this capital from bearing its share of the public burdens.

I do not believe it is right. We have already exempted the real estate—the lots and the house—constituting the Louise Home. That is analogous to exempting a church edifice and lot. But this bill goes farther. It says that this endowment fund of $300,000 or perhaps half a million dollars, shall be exempt.

Mr. LONG. What is the difference between a fund and a building, as far as concerns the benefit to the objects of this charity?

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Well, what is the difference between $100,000 put in a fund and called a "charity," and $100,000 put in a bank.

Mr. LONG. One is for charity, and the other is not.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Both of them ought to be taxed. If the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LONG] sees fit to give a million dollars to the Louise Home, it is his right to do so; but when he has done that, I can not for my life see why the million dollars ought not to pay its share of taxes just as much as the little lot which some exceedingly poor man holds in this city for the purpose of having a home and sustaining his family. I do not want to be led, under this guise of charity, to do an injustice to men who are just as poor, just as needy as the inmates of this Louise Home; and I do not propose that we shall in this way exempt from taxation half a million or a million of dollars. Where a large sum of money like this is invested in this District anywhere, I think it ought to pay its share of taxation.

Mr. LONG. Then you think a church building ought to be taxed?

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Yes, I do, so far as I am concerned; but this House will not do that; it is ready to exempt any piece of property that is used for a church or a charity. I do not believe that is right. For my part I think these things ought all to pay their share of taxation.

In regard to this question of exempting an endowment fund, suppose this fund were $100,000,000; the principle of exempting it would be just the same as it is now; yet if that were the proposition—to exempt $100,000,000 in this District from taxation—I fancy it would cause some gentlemen to pause. I think the line ought to be drawn somewhere, and, so far as my vote is concerned, I shall draw it by voting against this bill.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I think this question is thoroughly understood. Every man here knows the facts of the case. I ask for a vote on the motion that the bill be laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

The question being taken, there were—ayes 55, noes 43.

Mr. GUENTHER. No quorum.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I think we had better have tellers.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of "no quorum" being made the Chair will appoint tellers.

Mr. ROWELL. Let me suggest that the point of "no quorum" be withdrawn, and that we have a vote in the House.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. That will suit me just as well, if it be agreed to. Will gentlemen give us the yeas and nays in the House?

Mr. ROWELL. We will give you a vote in the House.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Will you give us the yeas and nays?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands the gentleman from Kansas to withdraw the point.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I withdraw it.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of no quorum being withdrawn——

Mr. GUENTHER. I do not withdraw the point. If we may have a yea-and-nay vote in the House——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understood the point was not insisted upon.

Mr. GUENTHER. I insist upon it.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. BARBOUR and Mr. GUENTHER were appointed.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I make the point that the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. GUENTHER] did not raise the question in time.

The CHAIRMAN. He made the point at the same time as the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANDERSON]. The tellers will take their places.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 114, noes 51.

So the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with a recommendation that it do pass.

CHITTENDEN BROTHERS.

Mr. BARBOUR. I call up the bill (S. 938) for the relief of Chittenden Brothers.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to pay to Chittenden Brothers, contractors, out of any unexpended balance of money appropriated for the construction of a dam at Great Falls, Maryland, for increasing the water supply of the District of Columbia, $15,000 for money expended in the construction of coffer-dams, pumping, and other auxiliary work over and above that contemplated in the amendment to the contract with said Chittenden Brothers, dated March 4, 1884, and which additional work was rendered necessary by the peculiar formation of the bed of the river, which could not be anticipated by the Government engineers or the contractors at the time of entering into the contract.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. GUENTHER. I ask for the reading of the report.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that the clerks have not yet been able to find the original Senate bill.

Mr. HEMPHILL. The printed bill is exactly the same; there are no amendments.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I desire to inquire whether the sum proposed to be appropriated in this bill is in excess of the orginal contract, and, if so, I would like to know the reason for paying that excess.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Mr. Chairman, can we now go on with the consideration of the bill?

The CHAIRMAN. That can be done if there be no objection.

Mr. GUENTHER. Can we not have the report read?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman can, when recognized, have it read as a part of his remarks. At present the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. HEMPHILL] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I can state to the gentleman from Wisconsin, if he will listen, and to the House, the facts connected with this case. This is a bill for the relief of Chittenden Brothers. They entered into a contract to construct a bridge across the Potomac River at what is called the Great Falls.

Mr. ROWELL. A dam.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Yes, a dam; and $145,000 was appropriated by Congress for that purpose. At the time the appropriation was made and the engineers made their estimate it was thought there was not sufficient money to construct a dam of masonry across the whole river, and it was provided in the contract a portion of the dam should be constructed of wood and rip-rap work. Afterward it was ascertained the appropriation was sufficient, and after the Chittenden Brothers entered upon the construction of the work the contract was changed by the engineers, and they were allowed to go on with the construction of the whole of the dam of masonry. It was unfortunately in a portion of the river where the bottom was filled with seams. It was impossible to estimate what the exact cost would be. When they undertook to pump the water out in order to lay the foundation of the dam they found the expense exceeded what they expected it would be by about $40,000.

These gentlemen have lost in clear money about $25,000. If this bill is passed it will not call for an appropriation to be made by Congress. It will give them $15,000 in part compensation for the loss they have sustained. That loss was through no fault of their own and no fault of the engineers, but it was owing to the impossibility of ascertaining the character of the bottom of the river upon which the dam was to be built.

The total appropriation made by Congress was $145,000 and some cents. If this is allowed there will be still $10,000 of the original appropriation left in the Treasury of the United States.

The committee is of opinion, and so was the Senate committee and the Senate itself, that this was a moderate and modest demand on the part of these gentlemen.

As a matter of strict law they have not the right to come to Congress for anything, but as a matter of justice they have some claim on the House, and inasmuch as the appropriation made by Congress has not been expended and these gentlemen have done good work and have sustained a loss for which they are not responsible, and neither is the Engineer Corps of the Government responsible, we think they should be reimbursed for a portion of the loss they have sustained.

Mr. GUENTHER. Does the engineer recommend this?

Mr. HEMPHILL. The engineer who had charge of it makes no recommendation one way or the other. He says the work is good work, and that the Chittenden Brothers did what they could to sustain themselves against loss. That loss was due to a defect in the bottom of the river, composed of seamy rock, so that it was impossible to get the water out to give satisfactory investigation beforehand.

Mr. KING. Did they not investigate the matter beforehand to satisfy them?

Mr. HEMPHILL. Yes, sir; the engineers of the Government made the best investigations they could, and upon that investigation the contract was based, but it turned out that investigation was unsatisfactory, and what they supposed was level bottom turned out to be just the contrary.

Mr. KING. That was bad for the engineers.

Mr. DUNHAM. Is the committee satisfied this loss took place?

Mr. HEMPHILL. I do not think there is any doubt these men lost that money.

Mr. DUNHAM. How did they reach that exact amount?

Mr. HEMPHILL. The Senate committee reported that as the amount which they lost.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. BENNETT, as the Speaker pro tempore, having taken the chair, a message from the Senate was received, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, announcing that body further insisted on its amendment to the bill (S. 2172) restoring to the United States certain of the lands granted to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company to aid in the construction of a railroad from Lake Superior to Puget Sound, to restore the same to settlement, and for other purposes; and asked for a conference, and had appointed Mr. DOLPH, Mr. TELLER, and Mr. COCKRELL as conferees on their part.

CHITTENDEN BROTHERS.

The Committee of the Whole resumed its session.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I will state further——

Mr. MORROW. I would like to ask the gentleman a question. Is this work completed, and is it satisfactory to the Government engineers?

Mr. HEMPHILL. Yes, sir; it is reported to be good work.

In addition to what I have already stated, Mr. Chairman, if these gentlemen had been permitted to carry out the original contract with the Government, while we can not, of course, say they would have sustained no loss, yet they themselves think it would have been comparatively small if they had sustained any; in all probability they would not have sustained any. But the Government engineers changed the contract subsequent to its execution.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. That is a different question.

Mr. HEMPHILL. And that change caused considerable delay in the progress of the work; for by it they were thrown to work in a season of the year when the river was very high, when the floods were unusual, and they sustained much heavier losses.

Mr. KING. That is a much better reason than you gave before for the bill.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I understand the gentleman from South Carolina to say that the Government engineers changed the plan.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Yes, sir.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. After the work had been begun?

Mr. HEMPHILL. Changed the plan of work.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Had the Government engineers the right to change the plan after the contract had been signed?

Mr. HEMPHILL. Yes, sir.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Then it seems to me the whole question comes back simply to this: These contractors entered into a contract with the Government to do a certain work of a certain character at a certain price. They did not take the statement of the Government engineers, but they made the bid with their eyes open.

They examined the work to be done, no doubt, and if not it is their own fault. They find now when the work is done that the pay was too little. But that is often the case with contractors. It is no unusual thing, for we have heard the same claim often on this floor. But put it the other way: Suppose they had found it easier and less expensive than they had anticipated, and made $25,000; would they have come back and given to the Government a part of the profit? I apprehend not. When men take contracts to do jobs it is supposed, if they are of lawful age, that they know what they are doing; and if they lose by the operation it is their misfortune, while if they make more than they anticipated it is their good fortune. But these contractors have no claim upon the Government, although they may have performed the work well. They may not have managed the work well and wisely, or they may have done so. That we do not know.

They have been paid in accordance with the contract, and there is no recommendation here from the Government engineer. He would have had no right to make it anyway. They have been paid all the Government agreed to pay, and they have not made any money by their contract, and that is the end of it.

Mr. GUENTHER. Let me ask the gentleman from South Carolina a question?

Mr. HEMPHILL. Yes, sir.

Mr. GUENTHER. The gentleman says these contractors lost $25,000?

Mr. HEMPHILL. Yes, sir.

Mr. GUENTHER. And you appropriate $15,000 to pay them?

Mr. HEMPHILL. Yes, sir.

Mr. GUENTHER. What guarantee have you, then, that they will not come into the next Congress and make a claim for the payment of the $10,000 additional?

Mr. HEMPHILL. Of course I can not guarantee what they will do hereafter. It is a question that has nothing to do with the case any more than the "flowers that bloom in the spring." [Laughter.]

Mr. GUENTHER. You might incorporate such a provision in the bill that this should be a final payment.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Now, Mr. Chairman, we do not claim that this is a matter of legal right, but they have an equitable claim. We do not say that they have the right to come and ask reimbursement for their loss or payment in addition to what they agreed to take. But I do say that where these parties have taken due care to ascertain the probable expense of the work, and were deceived by the reports submitted to them as to the bottom of the river, just as the Government engineers were deceived by the bottom of the river, then I say it is simply a question of justice as to whether or not they shall stand the entire loss or the Government shall come in and help them to bear it.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. It is a risk which every contractor runs. I have myself made contracts where I have lost by them.

Mr. GUENTHER. It seems to be the rule in this District. I know of no cases where such parties have not come in and asked for additional payment.

Mr. ROWELL. Will my colleague yield to me for a moment?

Mr. HEMPHILL. Certainly.

Mr. ROWELL. Mr. Chairman, the trouble with the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WARNER] is that he has not got at the facts of the case. The Government engineers furnished a survey of the bottom of the river and upon the basis of that survey the contract was made. These parties had a right to assume that the survey was correct. After they came to do the work they found that the Government survey did not give them the correct bottom of the river at all, and this extra cost to them grows out of the failure on the part of the engineer to give them a correct delineation of the bottom of the river on which to base their calculation.

Now it may be said that it was impossible for the Government engineer to ascertain——

Mr. KING. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. ROWELL. Yes, sir.

Mr. KING. Was that admitted by the United States engineers?

Mr. ROWELL. It was admitted before the committee. It was admitted by the engineer, but claimed by him that it was not possible to ascertain the exact condition of the bottom of the river until they went to work and found that it differed from the bottom everywhere else; and there was no expectation of finding these fissures.

Now I undertake to say that in equity and ordinarily in law, where a contract is made without a full knowledge of the facts, a knowledge that ought to have been furnished by the party to be bound, and not furnished, then there is a legal right to recovery.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Was it the duty of the contractor to examine for himself, and did he not examine for himself?

Mr. ROWELL. When the Government makes a survey of a place where a dam is to be built, and that survey is handed to contractors and they make their bid with reference to it, and it turns out through no fault of theirs and possibly through no fault of the engineer that both parties were mistaken, it is the highest equity to provide relief against the losses growing out of that mistake.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Did not the contractor take all those chances when he made his bid? Of course he did. He has lost perhaps; that is his misfortune, but it does not create an equity in his favor.

Mr. ROWELL. The gentleman may insist on taking his pound of flesh, and justify his vote upon that ground. I can not take the pound of flesh because I have robbed somebody in a contract.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. It is the Government that is concerned here, not a private party.

Mr. ROWELL. I would not ask from a private party a penny that I would not ask from the Government under similar circumstances. What is just for me is just for the United States.

Mr. McMILLIN. On what principle, then, is it, while you say it would be robbery not to pay these claimants $15,000 you yet propose to rob them of the other $10,000?

Mr. ROWELL. I was willing to pay $20,000. The contractors are willing to take $15,000, because they can sustain a loss of $10,000 and yet not break up; because $15,000 will save them from absolute bankruptcy.

Mr. McMILLIN. I did not understand how refusing the $15,000 was robbery, while refusing the other $10,000, which you say is due them, is not.

Mr. ROWELL. We allow the Government and the contractors to share the loss that has been sustained.

Mr. McMILLIN. Then upon your theory you make the Government only partially robbers?

Mr. CONGER. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. ROWELL. Yes, sir.

Mr. CONGER. Is it not true these contractors had the right to rely on the testimony given them by Government engineers?

Mr. ROWELL. I think they had.

Mr. CONGER. Then the Government ought to stand by them.

Mr. KING. Did they not make any special examination themselves before taking the contract?

Mr. ROWELL. Yes, sir.

Mr. KING. How is it then they did not discover these fissures?

Mr. ROWELL. Because the bottom of the river was of such a character that neither the Government engineer nor the contractors discovered these fissures.

Mr. McMILLIN. Then the Government could not have furnished the information, but you say the Government is at fault.

Mr. ROWELL. If the Government had had this information and neglected to furnish it the recourse of these parties would not have been in Congress but in the Court of Claims.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add to the bill the following:

"Provided, That the amount herein appropriated shall be in full of all claims against the Government under the contract with the Chittenden Brothers to construct said dam."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

Mr. HALL. I propose to address myself to the merits of the question rather than to this amendment. I understand the Government desired to have constructed for itself a public improvement, and before it asked bids it sought to furnish a detailed description of the character of the work, which involved a statement as to the condition of the bed of the river, the essential and necessary foundation for this public improvement. In all classes of large public improvements the Government uniformly attempts to furnish the information upon which bids may be received, and does not require the private individuals to make expensive surveys and investigations which they could not afford to do. In this case it proved, after the contract had been made, after the work had been practically undertaken, that there was a condition of things which neither the Government, on the one hand, nor the contractors, on the other, had any earthly reason to suppose existed, and which, if known, would have been a material factor and element on both the side of the Government and on the side of the bidders in fixing the price of that work. That contingency turns out to consist of fissures in the rock, owing to the fact that the stratification of this region instead of being horizontal is vertical, so that having constructed the dams and necessary works it was found absolutely impossible to remove the water and enable the work to go on. Now, as I understand, there is strictly no legal remedy, although Chancellor Walworth, in the early equity history of New York, has in two decisions announced that where a contingency of this kind does occur it is a case for equitable interference; those decisions, however, have not been generally followed in later years.

But for legislative interference and for extending a just and equitable remedy upon the part of the Government to a contractor who, in good faith, has gone on and acted upon the information which the Government itself has furnished, this does seem to me to present a fair case, and I can not conceive how any gentleman who will give it proper consideration can find any reason for not extending this relief to these contractors.

The question was taken on the amendment offered by Mr. HEMPHILL, and it was agreed to.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I move that the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

The question was taken, and the Chairmain declared that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. KING and Mr. WARNER, of Ohio, asked for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 67, noes 37.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I demand tellers. No quorum has voted.

The Chairman appointed Mr. HEMPHILL and Mr. WARNER, of Ohio, to act as tellers.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 97, noes 33.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio (before the report of the tellers). I withdraw the point of no quorum, and will ask a vote by yeas and nays in the House.

The tellers reported—ayes 97, noes 33.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of no quorum being withdrawn, the ayes have it——

Mr. KING. No quorum, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Too late.

Mr. KING. No; I made the point before the ruling was made. I was standing in the middle aisle.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will accept the statement of the gentleman from Louisiana, and the tellers will resume their places.

The tellers resumed their places and, at the conclusion of the count, reported—ayes 119, noes 46.

So the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with a recommendation that it do pass.

ST. DOMINICK'S CHURCH, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. BARBOUR. I call up House bill (H. R. 10799) for the relief of St. Dominick's church in the District of Columbia.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the commissioners of the District of Columbia be, and they are hereby, authorized and directed to remit all taxes, penalties, and interest heretofore assessed and now due and unpaid on all that portion of square numbered 466, in the city of Washington, D. C., which is exclusively used for religious and educational purposes.

The report (by Mr. BARBOUR) was read, as follows:

It appears to the satisfaction of the committee that under existing laws, as now interpreted by the proper authorities, only one lot of the property mentioned in the bill is subject to taxation, and that is the parsonage lot. They have asked the opinion of the district commissioners, who say in reply:

"It appears to the satisfaction of the commissioners that the property in question has never been used for purposes of revenue, but solely and entirely for educational and religious use," and they "think the property should be exempted, and so recommend."

Your committee therefore report a substitute for the bill, carefully guarded in its terms, but securing the relief asked for in the original bill, and recommend that the same do pass.

Mr. BARBOUR. I move that the bill be laid aside, to be reported to the House, with the recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. McMILLIN. I would ask the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BARBOUR] to state the nature of the school-building upon the school premises which is to be exempted from taxation.

Mr. BRADY. It is a Sunday school.

Mr. BARBOUR. The exemption is recommended by the commissioners.

Mr. McMILLIN. Is there no revenue derived from it in any way?

Mr. BRADY. None whatever.

Mr. ROWELL. This simply takes in a play-ground which has not heretofore been exempt. That is the object of the bill.

The bill was laid aside, to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

TITLE TO LOT 13, SQUARE 691, WASHINGTON.

Mr. BARBOUR. I call up the bill (H. R. 10991) to quiet the title to certain lands in the city of Washington, in the District of Columbia.

The bill was read as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to quitclaim and release unto the heirs and assigns of James S. Magee, deceased, their heirs and assigns, all the right, title, and interest of the United States of America in and to lot numbered 13, in square numbered 691, in the city of Washington and District of Columbia, as the same is laid down upon the original plat or plan of said city: Provided, That this act shall not render the United States liable for any costs, expenses, or damages in relation to the lot hereby authorized and directed to be quitclaimed, released, and conveyed.

Mr. HEMPHILL. This bill simply proposes to give the parties named a quitclaim title, so far as the United States is concerned. About fifty years ago, or perhaps longer, the lands were forfeited to the United States. The present holders, or those from whom they claim, have paid taxes upon the property for the past thirty or thirty-five years, but still there is some cloud resting upon the title owing to the fact that away back there was a tax sale and a forfeiture of the land. Unless some further explanation is desired, I move to lay the bill aside, to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

WINDSOR HOTEL COMPANY, WASHINGTON.

Mr. BARBOUR. I call up the bill (S. 2761) to charter the Windsor Hotel Company.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That John W. Thompson, E. Kurtz Johnson, Owen G. Staples, James Elverson, and William W. Dudley, all of Washington, D. C., and their associates, successors, and assigns, be, and are hereby, created a body corporate under the name of the Windsor Hotel Company of the District of Columbia, with the power to acquire and hold real estate and build thereon a building or buildings for the purpose of a public hotel, of such style and character as shall comply with the building regulations of the District of Columbia.

SEC. 2. That the capital stock of said company shall be $2,000,000; and that the stock shall be divided into shares of $100 each, and shall be deemed personal property, transferable in such manner as the by-laws of said company may direct. Said company shall require the subscribers to the capital stock to pay in cash the amount by them respectively subscribed, at such times (after the first installment) and in such amounts as the board of directors may deem proper and necessary in the purchase of real estate and the construction of the buildings; and if any stockholder shall refuse or neglect to pay any installment as required by a resolution of the board of directors, after reasonable notice of the same, the said board of directors may sell at public auction, to the highest bidder, so many shares of his said stock as shall pay said installment, under such general regulations as may be adopted in the by-laws of said company; but no stock shall be sold for less than the total assessments due and payable: Provided, That until the full amount of the par value of the shares of stock in said corporation shall have been paid in money, the subscribers to said shares shall be personally liable to an amount equal to par value of the stock subscribed for; but such liability shall cease whenever he shall have paid in full the amount so subscribed for.

SEC. 3. That the said corporation shall have the right to issue bonds, secured by mortgage of its franchise and property, real and personal; and said bonds to be issued shall not exceed $1,500,000, nor shall they exceed three-fourths of the capital stock actually paid in money at any time.

SEC. 4. That within ninety days after the passage of this act the corporators named in the first section, or a majority of them, or if any refuse or neglect to act, then a majority of the remainder, shall cause books of subscription to the capital stock of said company to be opened and kept open in some convenient and accessible place in the District of Columbia, during ordinary business hours, not less than thirty days, unless the whole stock shall sooner be subscribed for. Public notice shall be given, by advertisement in one or more of the daily papers published in the city of Washington, of the time when and the place where said books shall be opened; and subscribers upon said books to the capital stock of the company shall be held to be stockholders: Provided, That every subscriber shall pay at the time of subscribing ten per centum of the amount by him subscribed to the treasurer appointed by the corporators, or his subscription shall be null and void: Provided further, That nothing shall be received in payment of the ten per centum at the time of subscribing except lawful money or certified checks from any national banking-house; and when the books of subscription to the capital stock of said company shall be closed, the corporators named in the first section, or a majority of them, and in case any of them refuse or neglect to act, then a majority of the remainder, shall, within thirty days thereafter, call the first meeting of the stockholders of said company to meet within ten days thereafter, for the choice of directors, of which public notice shall be given for three days in two daily papers published in the city of Washington, and by personal notice mailed to the address of each stockholder; and in all meetings of the stockholders each share shall entitle the holder to one vote given in person or by proxy.

SEC. 5. That the government and direction of the affairs of the company shall be vested in the board of directors, whose number shall not be less than five, and who shall be stockholders of record, and who shall hold their office for one year, and until others are duly elected and qualified to take their places; and the said directors, a majority of whom shall be a quorum, shall elect one of their number to be president of the board, who shall also be president of the company. They shall also choose a vice-president, a secretary, and a treasurer. The treasurer shall give a bond, with surety, to said company, for the faithful discharge of his trust, in such sum as the said directors may require. In case of a vacancy in the board of directors by the death, resignation, or otherwise of any director, the vacancy occasioned thereby shall be filled by the remaining directors.

SEC. 6. That the directors shall have power to make such by-laws as they shall deem needful regarding the management and disposition of the property and estate of the company, not contrary to the laws of the United States and the ordinances of the District of Columbia.

SEC. 7. That there shall be an annual meeting of the stockholders for choice of directors, to be held at such time and place and under such conditions and notice as the by-laws and the laws in force in the District of Columbia may prescribe; and said directors shall annually make a report in writing of their doings to the stockholders.

SEC. 8. If the construction of said hotel shall not be commenced two years from the passage of this bill, and be completed five years from the same date, the privileges herein granted shall cease and determine. And Congress reserves the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act at any time.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend, in section 1, line 7, by striking out the word "Windsor" and inserting in lieu thereof the word "Winthrop." I make this motion because there is already a hotel called "Windsor" in the city of Washington, and I see no more propriety or justice in inserting the name of Windsor in this act than there would be in inserting the name "Willard" or "Ebbitt" or "Arlington." After a person has expended a large amount of money in establishing a hotel and obtaining custom for it under a certain name, so that the name has a financial value, I do not think it is proper that that name should be stolen, either by act of Congress or by any other means.

This new company, Mr. Chairman, will succeed as well under the name "Winthrop" as under the name "Windsor." If it is desirable to have a popular name, I would suggest that it might be well to insert the word "Smith" instead of "Windsor," as this might induce all the Smiths who come here to Washington from different parts of the country to patronize this hotel.

Mr. CANNON. Where is the present Windsor Hotel?

Mr. HOPKINS. I am surprised at the ignorance displayed by my colleague [Mr. CANNON]. I do not see why the name "Winthrop" will not answer the purposes of these corporators just as will "Windsor."

Mr. BARBOUR. I presume there would be no objection to the change.

Mr. SPRINGER. I hope my colleague [Mr. HOPKINS] will withdraw this amendment. It is esteemed in this country as a sort of "inalienable" right that a person shall be called by the name which he selects for himself.

Mr. HOPKINS. I understand that the amendment is acceptable to the committee.

Mr. HEARD. I believe the amendment has not been read. Let the gentleman send it to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 7 of section 1 strike out the word "Windsor" and insert "Winthrop;" so as to read "Winthrop Hotel Company."

Mr. HEARD. I hope the amendment will not be accepted by the committee. It seems to me the objection raised by the gentleman from Illinois to the name proposed for this company is a trivial one. The committee which considered the bill has heard no complaint from the proprietors of the present Windsor Hotel in regard to the name selected. I apprehend that the amendment suggested will not be seriously insisted upon. I hope at any rate it will not be adopted.

Mr. HOPKINS. I see no reason why this amendment should not be agreed to. The name "Winthrop" sounds as well as "Windsor;" and I am sure this company will succeed as well under the name "Winthrop" as it ought to under the name "Windsor." I hope there is no intention to rob the proprietors of the present Windsor Hotel of the patronage they have secured for themselves.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I would like to know from gentlemen on the committee whether we are to imitate the "effete aristocracies and monarchies of Europe" by naming even our hotels after——

Mr. SPRINGER. Oh, give us a rest. [Laughter.]

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I wish to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill whether we have not on the statute-books a general law permitting the organization of such corporations as this; and, if so, why is a special act deemed necessary?

Mr. NELSON. I want to ask a question.

Mr. HEARD. Let us have one question disposed of at a time.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I have asked my question, and I await the gentleman's answer.

Mr. HEARD. The same question was put to the chairman of the District Committee in the Senate, and he answered very correctly that the reason for this special act of incorporation is that the general incorporation act of this District does not authorize the organization of hotel companies. Therefore this company could not be organized under the general law.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Does the general act exclude hotel companies?

Mr. HEARD. It does not embrace them.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Does it specify what companies may be organized under the general act?

Mr. HEARD. It does, and hotel companies are omitted. It has been settled definitely that a hotel company can not be incorporated under the general law. If that reason were not sufficient, there is another—that under the general incorporation act of the District a company can be incorporated for the term of twenty years only. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. NELSON. I desire to ask the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HEARD] a question.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Missouri yield?

Mr. HEARD. I do not. I ask for a vote.

Mr. HOPKINS. As I understand, the question is on my amendment. There is one other suggestion I desire to make. If there is nothing sinister in the assumption of the name Windsor, why should it be insisted upon? I see in the list of corporators the name of the proprietor of Willard's Hotel, a rival of the Windsor already in existence.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Where is the present Windsor Hotel?

Mr. HOPKINS. I insist that the proprietor of Willard's Hotel and his associates ought not, under the guise of an act of Congress, to rob this Windsor Hotel of the patronage which it has secured for itself. I ask the adoption of my amendment.

Mr. NELSON. I desire to know whether this charter contains any provision that the charges shall be reasonable. [Laughter.]

Mr. HEARD. I do not know of any such provision. I ask for a vote.

Mr. WEAVER, of Nebraska. I move to amend the amendment so as to make the name of this hotel the "Wind Hotel." [Laughter.]

The amendment to the amendment was not agreed to.

The question recurred on Mr. HOPKIN'S amendment.

Mr. HOPKINS demanded a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 51, noes 41.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOLMAN. There seems to be no provision in this bill in regard to the liability of stockholders for debts which may be contracted by this company.

Mr. HEARD. I can refer the gentleman, with pleasure, to the provision by which they are liable individually. In line 18, section 2, it is provided:

That until the full amount of the par value of the shares of stock in said corporation shall have been paid in money, the subscribers to said shares shall be personally liable to an amount equal to par value of the stock subscribed for; but such liability shall cease whenever he shall have paid in full the amount so subscribed for.

Mr. HOLMAN. I am greatly surprised that the gentleman from Missouri regards that as an individual liability clause. It is an exemption, an express exemption, from individual liability when the stockholders have paid for their stock.

Mr. HEARD. Does the gentleman want to make them liable beyond that?

Mr. HOLMAN. I want to make them liable as partners, and the gentleman departs from the teachings of his party when he proposes to incorporate a company for a purely private purpose in which individual liability of stockholders is not provided for.

Mr. SPRINGER. You could never form a corporation in the world under such circumstances.

Mr. HEARD. He says it is a tradition of the Democratic party.

Mr. HATCH. It does not exist anywhere. Let the gentleman state where there is such a provision.

Mr. SPRINGER. What is the amendment pending?

The CHAIRMAN. There is no amendment pending.

Mr. HOLMAN. I will move the following as an independent section:

The Clerk read as follows:

The stockholders shall jointly and severally be liable for all the debts of said company.

Mr. HOLMAN. I know of no reason why corporations of this class, partnerships in fact, and their stockholders should be exempt from the payment of the debts they may contract. If the object is to incorporate this company so as to relieve these parties interested, the stockholders, from personal liability for debts contracted by the company it is the use of legislative power for an improper purpose.

Mr. HEARD. Let me ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. HOLMAN. Certainly.

Mr. HEARD. Does the gentleman know of any act of incorporation in this district of any company for doing business in which there is included any such provision as that which he has offered?

Mr. SPRINGER. Or anywhere else.

Mr. HEARD. Or anywhere else, for that matter.

Mr. HOLMAN. Oh, yes; I doubt whether any State of the Union would permit a purely private enterprise to be incorporated, such as carrying on a hotel in such manner as to enable the stockholders to escape all personal liability by the mere form of the act of incorporation.

Gentlemen talk a great deal about monopolies, favoritism to capital, and the oppression of labor, and yet propose to pass a bill granting to aggregated capital, to be enjoyed in a purely private business, the shelter of an act of incorporation which may deprive even laboring men and all other creditors of any recourse for their just demands except the property invested.

What is the object of this measure? If it is not for the express purpose of enabling a body of gentlemen, undoubtedly of ample means, to organize into a company, invest their capital as far as they may think proper, and escape all liability whatever, excepting to the extent of the capital they put into the business, what else is it? Why should not the people have the benefit of individual liability against the members of this company as well as against a partnership? There is no provision here to require report to the public as to the solvency of this aggregation of capital. There is no provision requiring any publication as to the condition of their affairs. They are to have all the benefits of a corporation, and none of its burdens. There is no way in which the public can know whether the corporation is responsible and solvent or not. You completely and absolutely exempt the stockholders of this corporation from any liability whatever. The artificial person is alone responsible.

Mr. HAMMOND. Will the gentleman from Indiana yield to me?

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. HAMMOND. Do you mean to say if a man subscribes for one share of stock in this corporation he should be made liable for all the debts of the corporation?

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes; that is exactly what I mean, and no other rule is just as to a purely private corporation. It is a mere partnership, and should be so treated.

Mr. HAMMOND. Do you know of any such corporation on earth?

Mr. HOLMAN. I have answered the same question before. I ask whether this is not a mere partnership? Is it anything more than a partnership? The business proposed does not require on public grounds any act of incorporation. It is not for the purpose of encouraging trade or commerce or manufactures in which multitudes of men must engage. I admit some States of the Union, including my own State——

Mr. BARBOUR. Let me interrupt the gentleman.

Mr. HOLMAN. In a moment. Some States have gone to the extent of holding individual stockholders liable to creditors only to the extent of their stock and as much more. But for what purpose? For the encouragement of commerce, manufacturing industries, the carrying trade, and other public objects. But here is in fact a mere partnership to carry on a private business, and it is proposed to exempt the stockholders from all burdens and responsibilities falling upon other citizens by placing them under the shelter of corporate powers.

Mr. BARBOUR. Allow me to interrupt the gentleman from Indiana to make a suggestion.

Mr. HOLMAN. Certainly.

Mr. BARBOUR. As this is the only day set apart for the consideration of District business by the House, and as there are a great many bills of far more public importance to be considered before the adjournment of this Congress, I would ask, with the consent of the House, that this bill, which is a private bill, be laid aside and be reported to the House with the recommendation that it lie on the table.

Mr. OWENS. It will take but a moment to dispose of it.

Mr. HEARD. Mr. Chairman, I desire to most respectfully remonstrate against the course suggested by the chairman of the committee.

Mr. BARBOUR. Suppose it goes over until next Friday, private bill day.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let us take a vote on it now. [Cries of "Vote! Vote!"]

Mr. BARBOUR. I must insist upon my motion, the gentleman from Indiana having yielded me the floor.

Mr. HEARD. I hope the proposition will be voted down.

The CHAIRMAN. The first question will be on the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. HOLMAN. I yield to the gentleman from Virginia for a request.

Mr. BARBOUR. My motion is that the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it be laid upon the table. I interrupted the gentleman from Indiana with his consent to make this motion with a view of economizing the time left us for the consideration of District bills. I ask permission, therefore, to be allowed to submit that motion.

Mr. HEARD. Against which I repeat I most respectfully protest in the name of the friends of this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. In the judgment of the Chair a motion of that character would require unanimous consent pending the consideration of amendments, the bill having been under consideration and amendments submitted.

Mr. OWEN. If this is out of order let us vote on the bill.

Mr. BARBOUR. May not the motion be made to refer it to the House with the understanding that it be laid on the table?

The CHAIRMAN. The motion of the gentleman could not be made until the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana is disposed of except by unanimous consent.

Mr. SPRINGER. Well, we do not consent; let us take a vote therefore upon the amendment.

Mr. HOLMAN. The amendment being still before the committee, I desire to be heard further.

I am surprised, sir, at the sentiments I hear expressed around me in regard to the question of individual liability of the stockholders of corporations. Gentlemen certainly know that the crying evil of this period is the extraordinary advantage that is being given to the wealth of the country by special legislation. The ingenious method of modern times of centralizing wealth through corporate franchises is a leading source of the power of capital. The drift of our legislation is for the benefit of capital; and this measure, although of comparatively little moment, is of the same character of legislation that enables capital everywhere, in a large degree, to control the country. Our legislation ought not to be framed in the interest of capital; yet all of the tendencies of our legislation is to secure to wealth, concentrated wealth, privileges and advantages which are not accorded to any other interest.

You free it from liability; you exempt the owners of vast investments in corporate wealth from all individual liability without any public reason, and you do it at the peril of every creditor of every corporation. If the investment of the capitalist in a corporation is fortunate he reaps the benefit; if the corporation fails multitudes must suffer. You have no safeguard as far as the public interests are concerned in this bill. You have no safeguards for the laboring people who may be employed by this corporation.

You leave them at the mercy of the corporation, with no means of knowing the state of its affairs. I insist, at least, that if the House will not adopt the just proposition that in corporations of this kind, organized for private purposes only, the stockholders shall be personally liable for the debts contracted by it, that gentlemen will at least go to the extent of saying that the persons who shall labor for this corporation, the wealth of whose stockholders is to be protected under this shield of corporate franchise, shall at least have the privilege of holding the stockholders liable for the payment for their labor.

Mr. McADOO. Let me ask the gentleman from Indiana a question. Could not the gentlemen named as incorporators in this bill get together under the general laws of the District and start a hotel?

Mr. HOLMAN. I have not examined the general laws.

Mr. HEARD. They can not do it.

Mr. HOLMAN. It seems there is not a large body of men connected with the proposed corporation; and I would like to ask this question of the gentleman from Missouri: How it happens that he desires to exempt four or five respectable gentlemen, men of means undoubtedly, ample fortunes, why he wishes to exempt them from such personal liability?

Mr. HEARD. I will answer the gentleman, as he asks me a question.

Mr. HOLMAN. In a moment. And why can not these four or five gentlemen, like any other four or five citizens, put together their means, erect this hotel, and carry it on without any embarrassment whatever? This is not an act for the encouragement of a great industry or commerce or manufacturing industries, but for the prosecution of business such as belongs to private partnerships and nothing else. Why are corporate franchises necessary? He would not shield these gentlemen from proper liability?

Mr. HEARD. Let me answer your question.

Mr. HOLMAN. If my friend regards it as a question.

Mr. HEARD. You said you would like to have me answer it.

Mr. HOLMAN. Very well.

Mr. HEARD. The gentleman wants to know why I desire to shield these four or five individuals, their assignees and successors, &c., from liability in this extraordinary way. There is no member on this floor who knows better perhaps than the gentleman from Indiana knows, or ought to know, that instead of there being extraordinary exemptions in this bill there are extraordinary restrictions, and that the bill provides a liability here not ordinarily found in organizations of this character.

And the gentleman has put into his speech an amount of buncombe unusual even for the gentleman from Indiana. He talks about the bill exempting this property from what was due to the laborers who labored on the building. The gentleman knows the mechanic-lien laws of the District protect the laborers. But the fact is just this: Here is a proposition on the part of enterprising people to organize under a charter a joint-stock company to do business as a corporation, because a corporation will not die, individuals will die. They propose to form a partnership requiring the investment of large sums of money, because without this charter at the death of the partners the interest of the property might be sacrificed. The object is what always prompts the formation of joint-stock companies.

Now, the restriction in this charter is that these stockholders shall be liable to the full amount; that they shall be individually liable for every dollar of stock subscribed until every dollar shall be paid up.

Mr. HOLMAN. And then the liability ceases?

Mr. HEARD. Most assuredly it does in any corporation on earth, unless there is a double-liability clause.

Mr. MCADOO. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. HEARD. Yes, sir.

Mr. MCADOO. I understand there is a general law in the District under which corporations can be formed, but hotels are left out. Why did not the gentleman from Missouri or his committee frame an amendment to that general law providing for hotels, in which event a private bill like this would be unnecessary?

Mr. HEARD. I will say to the gentleman from New Jersey, who is always very courteous and never very prolix in putting his questions, that this is a Senate bill. It came to us with the sanction of that body after the Senate had incorporated into the body of the bill several restrictions which we thought good, and the bill we offered to the House as the work of the Senate has our unqualified approbation.

Mr. MCADOO. Was there not a House bill also?

Mr. HEARD. There was; but we thought it was not so good as this one, for the reason that important amendments had been made in the Senate to the bill of that body. The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. CHACE] offered an amendment, which was adopted, providing for the personal liability, the very clause to which the gentleman from Indiana has addressed his remarks, requiring that the stockholder should be personally liable for all obligations of the company to the full amount of the par value of his stock. Then the Senator from my own State offered an amendment, which was adopted, requiring the company to go to work within two years and finish in five or the privilege will cease.

Another provision was inserted about bonding and mortgaging. It is provided that at no time shall the mortgage on the buildings of the company exceed three-fourths of the cash paid in.

The bill is well guarded, and if gentlemen desire that this city shall have a good hotel, let them vote for it.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN].

Mr. BARBOUR. Have I the floor?

Mr. HOLMAN. I yield to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BARBOUR].

Mr. BARBOUR. I move that the committee rise, that we may dispose of some of the work which has been acted upon in Committee of the Whole.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. CRISP reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union having had under consideration sundry bills presented by the Committee on the District of Columbia, had directed him to report them back with various recommendations.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the title of the first bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 1129) to exempt from taxation all property held by the trustees of the Louise Home, and for other purposes.

Mr. BARBOUR. As so much of the time of the House has been taken up to-day with the opposition to the various bills called up, and as there are a great many far more important bills in charge of the District Committee which have not yet been considered—I hold in my hand a list of some eighteen or twenty, besides some important bills from the Senate—I desire to submit to the consideration of the House the propriety of giving to this committee another day. I therefore send to the desk a resolution providing for the assignment of another day to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent for the consideration of the resolution he has sent up, which the Clerk will read.

Mr. MORRISON. I object.

Mr. BARBOUR. I ask the Chair if the resolution I have just submitted is out of order?

The SPEAKER. The Chair holds this can only be done by unanimous consent. It is not a matter which has been referred to the committee by the House.

Mr. BARBOUR. Then I submit a motion that the House take a recess till half past 7 o'clock to-night, the evening session to be for the consideration of District business.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia moves that the House do now take a recess till half past 7 o'clock to-night, and gives notice that he desires the evening session shall be for business of the Committee on the District of Columbia exclusively.

Mr. DUNN. Will it be understood that nothing else shall be done?

The SPEAKER. The Chair supposes that would be the understanding. It would not be strictly in order to make the motion in that form. The Chair, therefore, stated the gentleman's motion in the way he did. The Chair understands that would be the only business to be transacted. The Chair will also state that the evening session would only be a continuation of the present legislative day, and this day is set apart under the rules for the consideration of the business of the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The question being taken on Mr. BARBOUR'S motion, there were—ayes 70, noes 21.

So (further count not being called for) the motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 48 minutes p. m.) the House took a recess until 7.30 p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

The House reassembled at half past 7 o'clock p. m., and was called to order by Mr. T. O. TOWLES, Chief Clerk.

The following was read:

SPEAKER'S ROOM, HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., February 14, 1887.

SIR: Hon. B. J. HALL is designated to preside as Speaker pro tempore at the session of the House this evening.

J. G. CARLISLE, Speaker.

Hon. JOHN B. CLARK, Jr.,
Clerk House of Representatives.

Mr. HALL took the chair as Speaker pro tempore.

LEAVE TO PRINT.

Mr. MCRAE, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to print in the RECORD remarks on the bill (H. R. 11096) to credit and pay to the States all moneys collected as a tax or duty on raw cotton, under the act approved July 1, 1862, and the acts amendatory thereto.

SECTION 685 REVISED DISTRICT STATUTES.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I call up from the House Calendar for present consideration the bill (H. R. 8586) to amend section 685 of the Revised Statutes relating to the District of Columbia.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That section numbered 685 of the Revised Statutes relating to the District of Columbia be, and the same is hereby, amended by adding at the end thereof the following clause:

"But in case such party has left the District of Columbia, or can not be found, said summons may be served by delivering the same to some person of proper age upon the premises described in said summons, or, in the absence of such person, by affixing a copy of said summons to a conspicuous part of the premises where it may be conveniently read."

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third, and passed.

Mr. HEMPHILL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PRESERVATION OF ORDER—NATIONAL GUARD DRILL.

Mr. BARBOUR. I call up from the House Calendar for present consideration the bill (H. R. 10513) to provide for the maintenance of order in the District of Columbia during the National Guard competition and parades.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the sum of $5,000 is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated and out of the revenues of the District of Columbia, in equal parts, for the compensation and equipment of special police officers to be employed by the commissioners of the said District, at not exceeding $2 per day each, during the National Guard competition and parades to take place in said District in the month of May, 1887.

Mr. BARBOUR. As this bill makes an appropriation, it ought under the rules to be first considered in the Committee of the Whole, but I will ask unanimous consent that it be considered in the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bill is upon the House Calendar, and the Chair understands that its consideration in the Committee of the Whole is not necessary unless the point of order be made.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BARBOUR moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ARREARS OF TAXES.

Mr. BARBOUR. The next bill that I call up for consideration is on the House Calendar, a bill (H. R. 9469) relating to arrears of taxes in the District of Columbia.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the rate of interest to be collected on all general taxes in arrears on the 1st day of July, 1886, and on all special assessments due the District of Columbia, shall be 6 per cent. per annum, in lieu of the rate and penalties now fixed by law: Provided, That all general taxes so in arrears shall be rated according to the value of real estate as assessed by the board of assessors in the year 1883: And provided further, That this act shall only apply to taxes and assessments paid within twelve months from the approval of this act.

The amendment reported by the Committee on the District of Columbia was read, as follows:

Strike out, at the end of the bill, the following:
Provided, That all general taxes so in arrears shall be rated according to the value of real estate as assessed by the board of assessors in the year 1883: And provided further, That this act shall only apply to taxes and assessments paid within twelve months from the approval of this act.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I would like to hear some explanation of this bill. What is the present rate of interest?

A MEMBER. Ten per cent.

Mr. BARBOUR. The object of the bill, as I understand, is to allow people who are in arrears for taxes to come forward and discharge those taxes by the payment of the amount of the tax with 6 per cent. interest, instead of 10 per cent., which has been heretofore required by law. The proposition is recommended by the District Commissioners in order to expedite the collection of arrears of taxes.

Mr. ROWELL. It applies only to arrears.

The amendment reported by the committee was agreed to.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I offer the following amendment, suggested by the commissioners of the District of Columbia:

Add to the bill these words:
Provided, That this act shall only apply to taxes and assessments paid on or before the 30th day of November, 1887.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BARBOUR moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

SALES OF PROPERTY FOR OVERDUE TAXES.

Mr. BARBOUR. I will next ask the House to take up the bill (H. R. 9064) now on the House Calendar, being the bill prescribing the times for sales and for notice of sales of property in the District of Columbia for overdue taxes.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the commissioners of the District of Columbia shall prepare a list of all taxes on real property in said District subject to taxation upon which said taxes are levied and in arrears on the 1st day of July, 1886, and each year thereafter, including all taxes due to the late corporations of Washington city, Georgetown, the levy court of the county of Washington, and the District of Columbia; and said commissioners shall publish the same, with a notice of sale, in a pamphlet, of which not less than 5,000 copies shall be printed for distribution to tax-payers applying therefor. Said commissioners shall, on the 1st Tuesday in September, 1886, and of each year thereafter, give notice, by advertising twice a week for three successive weeks in the regular issue of two daily newspapers published in said District, that said pamphlet has been printed, and that a copy thereof will be delivered to any tax-payer applying therefor at the office of said commissioners, and that if the taxes due, together with the penalties and costs that may have accrued thereon, shall not be paid prior to the day named for sale, the property will be sold, under the direction of said commissioners, at public auction, at the office of the collector of taxes of the District of Columbia, commencing three weeks after the first publication of said notice and continuing on each following day, Sundays and legal holidays excepted, until all such delinquent property is sold.

SEC. 2. That all acts and parts of acts inconsistent herewith are hereby repealed.

The amendments proposed by the committee were read, as follows:

In lines 6 and 7, section 1, strike out "86," and insert "87."
In lines 14 and 15, of the same section, strike out "86," and insert "87."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BARBOUR moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ELEVATORS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. BARBOUR. I next call up from the House Calendar the bill (H. R. 10900) to regulate the construction and operation of elevators within the District of Columbia, and for other purposes.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the commissioners of the District of Columbia be, and they are hereby, authorized and directed to make and publish such orders as may be necessary to regulate the construction, repair, and operation of all elevators within the District of Columbia, and prescribe such means of security as may be found necessary to protect life and limb.

SEC. 2. That any person or persons, or corporation, who shall neglect or refuse to comply with the orders made pursuant to this act, shall, upon conviction thereof in the police court of the District of Columbia, on information filed in the name of the District of Columbia, be fined not less than $10 nor more than $100 for each offense.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BARBOUR moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

STREET RAILWAYS.

Mr. BARBOUR. I next call up from the House Calendar the bill (H. R. 10899) to regulate the construction of street railroads and of the pavements between and adjacent thereto, and for other purposes.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby authorized and empowered to make and enforce orders prescribing the grade and the form and character of rails that shall be laid upon the public streets, highways, and public places within the District of Columbia, and to prescribe the materials and character of the pavement or roadway, and of any repairs to the same, that shall be laid or made, and the manner of laying and making the same between the tracks and rails and for a space of 2 feet exterior and adjacent to the outer rails of any street-railroad.

SEC. 2. That the cost of any work ordered under the provisions of section 1 of this act shall be borne by the company owning or controlling said railroad.

SEC. 3. That if any street-railway shall neglect or refuse to comply with the orders of the commissioners as provided for in this act, the work required shall be done by the District of Columbia, at the cost of such company, to be collected as prescribed in section 5 of an act of Congress entitled "An act providing a permanent form of government for the District of Columbia," approved June 11, 1878.

SEC. 4. That all laws inconsistent with the provisions of this act be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I wish to inquire of the chairman of the committee whether this bill applies to the rails which have already been laid in the streets of this city.

Mr. BARBOUR. As I understand, it does.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. There is no question about that?

Mr. HEARD. It applies to repairs and renewals.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. As I understand, the commissioners under this bill can, if they want to, order this company here to lay decent rails.

Mr. BARBOUR. Yes.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. That is all I wanted to know.

Mr. HEARD. I desire to state what was the understanding in the committee when this bill was under consideration, and the explanation as made to our committee by Major Ludlow, the engineer commissioner of the District. The understanding was, upon the explanation of Major Ludlow, that this bill did not authorize the commissioners to require a reconstruction of roads already existing, but that it applied only to the question of the construction of new road and the repairs of the old. That is the understanding, I am sure, with which the committee acted in reporting this bill; for we put to the commissioner questions which evoked from him the declaration that that was the extent to which the commissioners proposed to have it go—that they might be enabled in the direction of the repairs of roads already laid to compel the companies to conform in the repaired and renewed sections of their roads to such form of rail or such material as the commissioners might require. I am sure I shall be borne out by every member of the committee in saying that this bill, according to the theory of the commissioners, was not designed to authorize them to require the reconstruction of existing roads but to apply only to the matter of repairs as they may become necessary.

Mr. MORRILL. That is as far as we ought to go.

Mr. BARBOUR. I presume the language of this bill will speak for itself. Gentlemen may get up here and talk about what was said before the committee; but the language of the bill ought to be so plain as to speak for itself, without requiring a construction to be given to it by any gentleman who may happen to belong to the committee.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I was about to ask my friend whether the plain, literal construction of the language did not authorize the commissioners to require the reconstruction of existing roads.

Mr. BARBOUR. That is a matter which every member must construe for himself. As I understand, the rails now laid upon the present street railroads were adopted, according to the existing law, by and with the advice of the Secretary of the Interior, who has the power under the law as it stands to decide as to the quality and character of the rails. The present bill is one proceeding from the District commissioners, especially the engineer commissioner. It is thought proper that the control of this subject should be in the hands of the District officials. In regard to the taking up of the present rails, which have been laid down under the law as it has existed, I am not entirely clear. I should think we would have to leave that matter under the terms of the law as it now stands, unless some gentleman moves an amendment to provide otherwise.

It seems to me it would be rather hard if these people, who have invested their capital in these enterprises and put down rails which were satisfactory to the Secretary of the Interior, the umpire selected by law, should be compelled to take up their rails before they are worn out and supplant them by something which may be considered better. But, after all, the public convenience is superior to any private interests.

Mr. SPRINGER. Allow me to propose an amendment which I will read and which, I think, will be acceptable to gentlemen of the committee. If there is any objection to it, I will not press it:

SEC. —. Any city railway company operating lines of street cars in the District of Columbia may substitute for the horse cars now in use any improved methods of motive power which may be approved by the commissioners of the District of Columbia.

Mr. ROWELL. The gentleman had better not press that, because whenever any substitution of that kind is made, further limitations and regulations will be required.

Mr. BARBOUR. I object to the amendment. I am a horse-car railroad man myself.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Do I understand the gentleman from Illinois——

Mr. ROWELL. If you will let me state it I will tell you what it is. This bill changes the present law in one or two particulars. The present law authorizes the District commissioners to determine what kind of stone pavement shall be laid down between the railway tracks. This law fixes what kind of pavement there shall be between the tracks so they can provide any kind of pavement other than stone.

The present law directs the Secretary of the Interior to fix what sort of rails shall be used in relaying railway tracks. That takes that power from the Secretary of the Interior and puts it in the hands of the District commissioners.

I take it under the law, when they are required to take up the present rails, that in the removal of the track they may be required to put down such rails as the District commissioners shall determine. In other words, the purpose of the bill is to put this city along side the advancement of the time and get the best rail.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BARBOUR moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

SUBDIVISION OF LAND IN THE DISTRICT.

Mr. ROWELL. I move that the House Calendar be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 10897) to regulate the subdivision of land in the District of Columbia.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the commissioners of the District of Columbia be, and they are hereby, authorized and directed to make and publish such orders as may be necessary to regulate the platting and subdividing of all lands and grounds in the District of Columbia; and no such plat of subdivision made in pursuance of such orders shall be admitted to record in the office of the surveyor of said District without an order to that effect indorsed thereon by the engineer commissioner of said District.

SEC. 2. That all spaces on any duly recorded plat of land thereon designated as streets, avenues, or alleys shall thereupon become public ways, provided they are made in conformity with the provisions of section 1 of this act, and as such be under the protection of the laws and ordinances in force applicable to public roads out of said city.

SEC. 3. That if by the extension of any of the present streets or avenues, or the opening of any public way, it becomes necessary to traverse any grounds now used as a cemetery or place of burial, the commissioners are hereby empowered to secure a right of way through the same by stipulation with the proprietors thereof, or by condemnation, as in other cases now by law provided for.

SEC. 4. That the orders of the commissioners made pursuant to this act shall have the force and effect of law thirty days subsequent to the day of publication; and all laws and provisions of laws inconsistent herewith are hereby repealed.

The amendment of the Committee on the District of Columbia was read, as follows:

In line 5 strike out "orders" and insert "general rules."

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I desire to have the changes in that bill explained. I believe it should be considered in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. ROWELL. I will explain it in a moment. At present anybody owning land outside of the boundary line of the city of Washington may make any subdivision he pleases, and file it without anybody's consent for record, and it thereby becomes a subdivision for taxing purposes without anybody's control of that kind of subdivision.

This bill provides that hereafter anybody making any subdivision of land and desiring to file it for record, to become a part of the records of the District of Columbia, must do it in pursuance of general rules made with reference thereto, and a plat must be submitted for approval before it can be filed. It is in accordance with the laws in almost every city with reference to additions to a city.

That is all there is of that portion of the bill. There is another——

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Right there, if my friend will allow me, do I understand if John Smith owns fifty acres, or any other number of acres, of land outside the city limits he must divide that in accordance with the views of the engineer commissioner of this city, and make it conform to such rules as may be prescribed?

Mr. ROWELL. Yes, sir.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. In the whole matter of subdivision?

Mr. ROWELL. If he divides his land up into building lots, platting it for streets or platting it for an addition to the city, it must be platted in accordance with rules.

A MEMBER. General rules.

Mr. ROWELL. General rules prescribed. It amounts to this: My brother from Ohio [Mr. BUTTERWORTH] lives out here in Le Droit Park, and for lack of just such a law there is not a street or alley in Le Droit Park which corresponds with any street or alley in the city.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. Or to anything else. [Laughter.]

Mr. ROWELL. Any one who lives there, wishing to make an extension of the city beyond its present limits, comes in contact immediately with some of these additions or subdivisions laid out, not in line with the present streets or avenues, but entirely out of harmony with the city of Washington. The result is, any attempt to extend any street beyond the present boundary runs crossways and cuts off little corners and makes the cost of such extension double, treble, and quadruple what it otherwise would be.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I agree with the gentleman as to the desirability of there being some system, but I thought it possible this might go further than our friend intended. It authorizes the commissioners—and if I am not correct my friend will correct me—to say how land shall be divided, how the lines shall be run—the width of streets, I do not object to that—and so on. As I have already said, this goes further than the city council of any city has assumed to go or was ever authorized to go.

Mr. ROWELL. It does not prevent a man from subdividing his own property. He can do that at his pleasure; but it does prevent him from recording such subdivision as a part of the general plan of the city.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. But not only that, here is a point: If it pleases the engineer commissioner, or any other board charged with the duty, to insist upon a particular character of subdivision, even though it conform to the general character of the rules laid down, it might prevent altogether or seriously impair the subdivision of a man's property in such way as would be beneficial to himself if it did not prevent the subdivision altogether.

Mr. ROWELL. It does not prevent subdivision. It prevents the recording of such subdivision as a part of the city proper. It prevents getting it on record. That is all.

But to illustrate the point a little further, let me give you an example. There is a law making adjacent property taxable for laying down water-mains. A man has a lot which he can cut off by running a line around it, separating it from the rest of the property in the block, and by this arrangement, cutting off this piece of property from the adjacent lots, he is enabled to escape altogether the tax for laying down the mains.

Again, there are many subdivisions in little small angling lots, outside but following that subdivision of record, and by cutting up the property in such manner it makes each of the little lots so cut up taxable at a much less value than it would bring if properly divided and in conformity to the general plan of the streets of the city, and reduces, as such, the tax of the District and city.

I have a bill on the Calendar myself that goes further than this. It provides for the making of a map of all of this outside country, laying down streets and avenues such as they shall be when extended, and the submission of that map to the approval of Congress; and when approved it shall be the map to control all subsequent divisions or additions to the city. This bill is not designed to go so far as that, but te make general rules for the purpose of keeping such subdivisions off the record. A man may make as many subdivisions of his property as h-pleases in the absence of any authority of law outside of the city limo its to prevent it but he can not get it on the record. He can divide his property as he chooses and sell it.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. That is true, but if John Brown—and I abandon John Smith for the present [laughter]—if John Brown subdivides his property anywhere about the city those who purchase lots designated by numbers in such subdivision would naturally go to the records for the purpose of tracing the question of title. But if it pleases the engineer, or anybody who may have control of the matter, to say that a subdivision shall not be recorded, that subdivision may stay off the record for all time, unless some other engineer or some other commission having control of the matter shall permit it to go on. If for any reason such subdivision is not permitted to go on record, by which the owner may desire to sell lots, having reference to the recorded plat in the matter of conveying title, he would be prevented from disposing of his own property.

Mr. ROWELL. That is the effect of the bill.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. If that be the case it is a grave objection to the bill.

Mr. FELTON. Let me ask the gentleman from Illinois this question: Does not this assume to take charge of the property of private individuals outside of the city limits?

Mr. ROWELL. Yes, for this purpose; that is to say, they can not record such subdivisions. It does nothing more than that.

Mr. FELTON. It is a most extraordinary provision.

Mr. ROWELL. I do not know of a city that permits an addition to be laid out and the dedication of streets that do not conform to the plan of the city to be filed of record without first submitting it to the city council.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. If there is such a rule established by any city in this country I would like to know where it is.

Mr. ROWELL. I know numbers of them.

Mr. FELTON. Do you mean to say that they undertake to direct how property outside of the limits shall be laid out?

Mr. ROWELL. The general incorporation act of the State of Illinois provides exactly that.

Mr. MILLS. If you do not make this provision as to these subdivisions, and the people go on and lay off their lots and build on them, and you start to prolong the streets you will have to run across lots and buy them up at fabulous prices hereafter.

Mr. ROWELL. Certainly.

Mr. MILLS. And therefore you want to make the people conform the plats to the prolongation of the streets?

Mr. ROWELL. My friend from Texas has stated exactly what the object is.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. But that is a provision which should precede the adoption of such a bill as this. You have no right in anticipation of such a thing to say that people shall not divide their property as they please, but shall wait the convenient pleasure of any board to determine how that may be done, however wise the board may be.

Mr. GROUT. The gentleman from Ohio says the "convenient pleasure" of any board. He will remember that these are the commissioners of the District, who are the sovereign authority in the District of Columbia and can do no wrong. If they can do wrong and do it they are subject to impeachment, and that is sufficient answer to the gentleman's argument.

Mr. BUTTERWORH. But this is a question of conferring upon the commissioners a power which is designated here, and not whether they would exercise it wisely or not.

Mr. CANNON. I want to see if I understand this proposition. This bill provides as I understand it, before the owner of property adjacent to the city or in addition thereto can divide it and designate it as streets must first have the permission of the commissioners.

Mr. ROWELL. No, sir; the bill does not provide any such thing. It requires that the commissioners shall make general rules in regard to the way in which the property shall be subdivided and that no plat that does not conform to those general rules shall be filed for record; that a man making a plat must submit it to the District engineer for his judgment as to whether it conforms to the general rule.

Mr. CANNON. Suppose the District engineer, if such a thing is supposable, was gobbled by opposing interests, or suppose it does not suit him to approve of the plat for some personal reason on account of the color of the man's hair or otherwise, what then?

Mr. HEMPHILL. If there is any force in that supposition, why do you give the commissioners the right to say what sort of buildings shall be constructed? No man has a right in the city to put up a building unless it is approved by the District engineer.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. But that is in the city.

Mr. HEMPHILL. The principle is the same. This simply provides that the commissioners shall lay down a general plan, and when a person has a plan for subdividing his lots it shall be submitted to the commissioners that it may be seen whether it conforms to the general plan or not. The Le Droit Park has been spoken of. In regard to that it has been stated publicly, and the information was given to the committee by the commissioners, that the people who are laying out these lots were asked, "Why do you lay them out in this way? It does not conform to the plans of the city." And they said, "We lay them out that we may get money out of the public for them hereafter." The question, then, is whether general rules shall be followed or whether people shall be allowed to lay out their lots and then come back upon the city to get pay for changes that may hereafter be made.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I agree as to the propriety of having general rules and having the District of Columbia platted, if you please. But I question the propriety of giving this authority to the engineer commissioner to disapprove of a plat on the ground that probably it may not agree with what may be done hereafter.

Mr. HEMPHILL. This bill provides that the commissioners shall lay down general rules. When they have done that, then if a man divides his land the commissioners shall decide whether his plat conforms to those general rules or not. That is the whole object of the bill as far as that part of it is concerned.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Let me ask one other question. It is the furthest possible from my desire to interfere with the progress of this matter; but I wish to ask this question: Suppose in any direction from this Capitol a man has a piece of property that he desires to subdivide; suppose streets have not reached that locality and there is no plat indicating where they will run; is it to be said under those circumstances that he can not proceed to sell his lots or have his plat recorded?

Mr. HEMPHILL. The general rules provided in this bill do not cover that kind of case. But suppose the general rule says that the street shall be in a straight line; then the man must know perfectly well when he subdivides his land that he must do it so that his lots will face the street in straight lines. Or if the rule says the street shall run at a particular angle he can go to the commissioners' office and see what that angle is and conform his subdivision to the general rule.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. But if there are no streets in the locality the man comes with his plat and he has to get the approval of the commissioners. I can not see that great hardship might not be worked against the property holder, and that he might not be discriminated against.

Mr. HEMPHILL. If the law requires the commissioners to have a general rule regulating the general subdivision of property, and there is no such rule, it is clear they must make a general rule covering the District of Columbia; and when they have done that the question simply is as to subdivisions of land being made to conform to those rules.

Mr. BARBOUR. If I understand the objection of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BUTTERWORTH] it applies to cases where the parties have already laid out the subdivisions of their land.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Oh, no. I understand the bill does not touch them; it is not retroactive.

Mr. BARBOUR. Well, if it does not touch those cases, what objection can there be to the provisions of the bill where parties have full notice of this law? In that case what objection can be made to the enactment of the provisions of this bill?

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. If this bill does not permit of discrimination I do not want to interfere with its passage.

Mr. PERKINS. If I understand this bill correctly it amounts to this: If in consequence of the topography of the country, the location of the land, or any other cause, the owner when he desires to plat it can not conform to the general rules, in that case the engineer may approve his plat. There is nothing to prevent the engineer approving his plans under such circumstances.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Then it gives the engineer commissioner full discretion in the matter, and a very remarkable discretion, in my judgment.

Mr. HEMPHILL. There must be remarkable powers vested somewhere in a city if there is to be a general plan.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was adopted.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. ROWELL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

STREETS AND AVENUES IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. ROWELL. I call up for present consideration the bill (H. R. 11074) directing the commissioners of the District of Columbia to establish streets and avenues in the county of Washington, District of Columbia, and for other purposes. I ask unanimous consent that this bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. If the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole, do we proceed then to consider the bill by sections under the five-minute rule?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair understands we do not.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the commissioners of the District of Columbia be, and they are hereby, directed to have surveyed and platted that portion of the county of Washington, District of Columbia, bounded by Boundary street, Rock Creek, Piney Branch, Spring road and Rock Creek Church road, the Soldiers' Home Park, and Lincoln avenue, and to delineate and establish upon the ground, by suitable bench-marks, the streets and avenues in general conformity with the project and map submitted by said commissioners in Public Document No. —, United States Senate, second session of the Forty-ninth Congress, and to have accurate plats thereof duly recorded in the records of the surveyor's office for said District: Provided, That in the final platting and delineation as herein directed the commissioners shall exercise due and careful discretion in establishing the exact details of location and grades of the several streets and avenues, in order that the requisite modification of the public ways, as herein provided for, shall ultimately be effected at the least practicable cost to the District and disturbance of existing property lines and constructions needful to secure general conformity with said plan; and no existing or future subdivision of land within the area herein named, not in conformity with the said plan as finally platted and recorded, shall be legal: Provided, That before the plats and locations in this section shall be recorded upon the books of the surveyor of the District, the final platting and maps shall be submitted to Congress for approval, in December, 1887: And provided further, That the area designated in this section be extended to include the area bounded by Brentwood road, Queen's Chapel road, Bunker Hill road, and Boundary street.

SEC. 2. That the sum of $6,000 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated to defray the expenses of carrying out the foregoing provisions of this act.

SEC. 3. That all laws or parts of laws inconsistent with the provisions of this act be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ROWELL] asks unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union be discharged from the further consideration of this bill, and that it be now considered in the House. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. ROWELL. There are two amendments which I desire to offer. The first is to insert "forty-four" in the blank in line "11;" and the second is to strike out, in line 23, the words "existing or."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Unless there is a demand for a separate vote, these amendments will be considered in gross.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. ROWELL. Mr. Speaker, just one word. At the last session of this Congress a resolution was adopted by the Senate directing the District commissioners to offer some plan for the further extension of the city of Washington. In accordance with that plan a map, not made upon the ground, but a general map, has been prepared, covering this section of the country. The proposition of this bill is that the District commissioners shall proceed upon the ground to lay out the proposed extensions of streets and avenues as they may be demanded by the future growth of the city, to establish the width, the direction, and the grade thereof, to make a complete map, and to submit that map to the approval of Congress. It is not proposed to locate, establish, and make any street for present opening, but to make a map, which, when approved by Congress, shall control the future extensions of the streets. The bill makes an appropriation which is necessary to carry out its provisions, because the present force of engineers in the city are now fully employed, and additional force will be required. The necessity for the bill arises from the rapidly extending area of the city. The matter is to be kept entirely within the control of Congress. I can see no objection to the passage of the bill. I am ready to answer any question which may be put.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I have no objection to the bill, but I wish to offer an amendment to which I think there can be no opposition, as it will secure some information which I believe will be valuable to Congress. With the consent of the gentleman from Illinois, I will read the amendment. It is to add to the bill the following:

And the commissioners shall prepare, and, in December, A. D. 1887, submit to Congress a detailed statement showing—

First, what streets, avenues, and roads, including Boundary street, shown on the plat of the city of Washington, and within the limits of the same, and dedicated to public use remain unopened and unimproved, and what necessity exists, if any, for opening and improving the same.

Second. What streets, avenues, and roads within the city limits and now open to public use are not paved, and the estimated cost of improving the same with asphalt or other suitable paving material; and Third. What unpaved streets, avenues, and roads or parts of same should be first paved, and the character and estimated cost of such improvement.

Mr. ROWELL. I have no objection to that amendment. Let it come in at the end of the bill.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Yes, sir; as a fourth section.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If there be no objection, the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BUTTERWORTH], and assented to by the Committee on the District of Columbia, will be adopted.

There being no objection, it was ordered accordingly.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. ROWELL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

TEMPORARY RAILWAY.

Mr. BARBOUR. I call up from the House Calendar for present consideration the bill (S. 2982) to authorize the commissioners of the District of Columbia to permit the temporary occupation of streets by a railway for the purpose of transporting material to fill about the base of the Washington Monument.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby authorized to issue permit for the laying of a temporary railway track, in such streets or avenues as in their judgment shall best subserve the purpose and interfere least with the public use of the same, to such persons as shall be awarded the contract to fill about the base of the Washington Monument, in pursuance of the advertisement of the officer in charge of the construction and under the provisions of the act of August 4, 1886, making appropriation for that work.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I would like to know whether this bill requires that after the work contemplated shall have been completed these tramways shall be taken away?

Mr. BARBOUR. I understand that the object of the bill is to give the commissioners of the District of Columbia full discretion as to this matter. In view of the fact that it is supposed the lake is having some injurious effect upon the monument, they want to fill it up, and they propose to get the earth for this purpose upon the most advantageous terms by going on some cheap land where they can lay a tramway for the purpose of removing the earth from that point to this lake. All that the bill asks is that the District commissioners shall be invested with authority for this purpose. Of course, after the work is done, the tramway will be taken up.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. That is all I wanted to know. The bill itself seems to be all right.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BARBOUR moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

NATIONAL SAFE-DEPOSIT COMPANY.

Mr. BARBOUR. There are some bills on the Private Calendar which I would ask unanimous consent to have considered in the House. They have reference to the enlargement of the powers of some safe-deposit companies in order to enable them to discharge certain fiduciary duties.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. When the gentleman indicates the numbers and titles of the bills the Chair will put the question on discharging the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BARBOUR. I will call up the bill (H. R. 2589) to amend an act entitled "An act to incorporate the National Safe-Deposit Company, of Washington, in the District of Columbia," approved January 22, 1867.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the name of the National Safe-Deposit Company be, and is hereby, changed to the National Safe-Deposit and Trust Company of Washington, in the District of Columbia.

SEC. 2. That the said National Safe-Deposit and Trust Company be, and they are hereby, authorized to accept and execute trusts of any and every description which may be committed or transferred, with their consent, to them, by any person or persons whomsoever, bodies corporate or politic, or by any court in the District of Columbia or in any one of the United States, and to accept the office and appointment of executors or administrators of any kind or nature whenever such appointment is conferred or made by any person or persons, or by any orphans' court or other court, either of the District of Columbia or of the United States; and that in all cases where application shall be made to any court of the District of Columbia for the appointment of any receiver, trustee, administrator, executor, assignee, guardian of any minor, or committee of a lunatic, it shall be and may be lawful for such court, if it shall think fit, to appoint the National Safe-Deposit and Trust Company of Washington, in the District of Columbia, with their assent, such receiver, trustee, administrator, assignee, guardian, or committee; and the accounts of the said company as such receiver, trustee, administrator, assignee, guardian, or committee shall be regularly settled and adjusted before the proper tribunal; and upon such settlement and adjustment all proper, legal, and customary charges, costs, and expenses shall be allowed to said company for their care and management of the trusts and estate aforesaid; and the said company, as such receiver, trustee, administrator, assignee, guardian, or committee shall be subject to all orders or decrees made by the proper tribunal under the laws of the United States.

SEC. 3. That when any court shall appoint the said company a receiver, trustee, administrator, executor, assignee, guardian, or committee, or shall order the deposit of money or other valuables of any kind with said company, the capital stock as paid in, and all property owned by said company, shall be taken and considered as the security required by law for the faithful performance of their duties, and shall be absolutely liable in case of any default whatever; Provided, That the said court may and shall, if deemed necessary, require further additional security, and may from time to time appoint suitable persons to investigate the affairs and management of said company, who shall report to said court the manner in which such investments are made and the security afforded to those by or for whom its engagements are held; and the expenses of such investigation shall be defrayed by the said company; and the court may also, if deemed necessary, examine the officers of said company, under oath or affirmation, as to the security aforesaid.

SEC. 4. That the company may also pay interest upon deposits at such rate as may be agreed upon with the depositors, not exceeding, however, the rate of 3 per cent. per annum.

SEC. 5. That the stockholders of said company shall be held individually responsible, equally and ratably, and not one for another, for all contracts, debts, and engagements of said company, to the extent of the amount of their stock therein, at the par value thereof, in addition to the amount invested in such stock.

SEC. 6. That the said company be, and is hereby, authorized to increase its capital stock to an amount not exceeding $500,000; and before said company shall proceed to do any business under this act, one-half of said capital stock, namely, $250,000, shall be fully paid up.

SEC. 7. That each director and officer, when appointed or elected, shall take an oath that he will, so far as the duty devolves upon him, diligently and honestly administer the affairs of said company, and will not knowingly violate or willingly permit to be violated any of the provisions of this act.

SEC. 8. That in case of the violation of any order of court or the breach of any trust on the part of the company, the officers of the company guilty of such violation of order of court or breach of trust shall be liable to process of attachment for contempt or such breach of trust in the same manner and to the same extent as would apply to individual executors, administrators, guardians, and other trustees in like cases.

The amendments reported by the committee were read, as follows:

After the word "guardian," in line 14, of section 2, insert "of the estate."

After the word "committee," in line 15, of section 2, insert "of the estate."

After the word "court," in line 16, of section 2, insert "without prejudice to preferences established by existing law."

In line 5, section 3, strike out the words "is paid in" and insert "subscribed for or taken."

In line 11, section 3, after the word "time," insert "and at least once during every year shall."

In line 17, after the word "company," strike out "or" and insert "and;" and after the word "may," insert "also."

Strike out section 4.

At the end of section 6, strike out "and no certificate of stock shall be issued until the same be fully paid for."

Insert as section 7 the following:

"That the stock of said company shall be transferable only on the books of the company."

Change the numbers of the sections to conform to the foregoing amendments.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to discharging the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union from the further consideration of this bill, and considering it in the House?

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I would like to hear the report read.

Mr. BARBOUR. It might save time if the gentleman would listen to a statement, instead of insisting on the reading of the report.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Very well. I have no desire that time shall be consumed unnecessarily.

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. Speaker, there is now a chartered institution in the city of Washington known as the National Safe Deposit Company, which takes charge of valuable articles of personal property. It owns a large amount of real estate, is rather a wealthy corporation I understand, and is composed of very responsible gentlemen. They ask that Congress invest their corporation with authority to do what I believe is done in most of the large cities of the country by companies of this kind, to execute trusts, to act as administrators, and perform such fiduciary duties as may be assigned to them by the courts. I understand that powers of this character are exercised by similar corporations in Philadelphia, Baltimore, New York, and other leading cities of the country.

It is supposed that the substitution of a reliable, responsible concern like this company to administer estates would be better than the old system of leaving such matters entirely in the hands of private individuals. The lawyers in Philadelphia and Baltimore approve of this system, I believe. I have not definite information in regard to New York, but I have heard the system has been in successful operation there. The courts, before allowing companies to assume duties of this kind, institute an examination and see that the affairs of the company are faithfully conducted and are in proper shape. The whole matter is within the power of the court. I can not see any objection to this proposition. I understand that here in the District of Columbia, which is a sort of national "stamping ground," there are people who are very anxious that some such authority as this should be given.

In the absence of corporations here with these powers a number of prominent gentlemen talk of going to Philadelphia, Baltimore, or elsewhere to have their trusts administered and their estates passed upon. I think that is all. I am ready to answer any questions that gentleman wish to ask.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there any objection to discharging the committee from the further consideration of the bill, and considering it in the House?

Mr. LYMAN. I see this bill provides for this company being appointed as guardians and trustees of estates of minors.

Mr. BARBOUR. Yes; at the discretion of the court.

Mr. LYMAN. I find no provision for security.

Mr. BARBOUR. The bill provides for ample security.

Mr. ROWELL. It requires them in addition to their stock to give ample security to the court.

Mr. LYMAN. Does the gentleman say the bill requires that?

Mr. ROWELL. It does.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. If I heard the reading of the bill correctly, I understand the liability of these stockholders is simply to the amount of their stock, and not beyond that.

Mr. BARBOUR. And such other security in the discretion of the court as shall be required.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. The bill provides for important trusts, and then limits the liability, if I understand the reading correctly, to the face value of the stock of the several stockholders pro rata, and not even for the full value of the stock. If there be a loss and half of the stockholders are bankrupt, the other half are only responsible pro rata, not to the full extent of their stock. I do not think that is the way trust companies are generally constituted. There certainly should be a liability beyond that where power is given to accept the trust provided in this bill. If I am mistaken, I trust the chairman of the committee will correct me.

Mr. BARBOUR. In reply to the gentleman, I will read the language of the bill.

That when any court shall appoint the said company a receiver, trustee, administrator, executor, assignee, guardian, or committee, or shall order the deposit of money or other valuables of any kind with said company, the capital stock as paid in, and all property owned by said company, shall be taken and considered as the security required by law for the faithful performance of their duties, and shall be absolutely liable in case of any default whatever:

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. The capital is liable.

Mr. BARBOUR. And the real estate. The bill goes on as follows:

Provided, That the said court may and shall, if deemed necessary, require further additional security, and may from time to time appoint suitable persons to investigate the affairs and management of said company, who shall report to said court the manner in which such investments are made and the security afforded to those by or for whom its engagements are held; and the expenses of such investigation shall be defrayed by the said company; and the court may also, if deemed necessary, examine the officers of said company, under oath or affirmation, as to the security aforesaid.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Does the bill reserve to Congress the right to alter or amend this charter?

Mr. BARBOUR. It does not; but there is no difficulty as to that.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I think it would be better to include it in the bill.

Mr. BARBOUR. I am willing to accept such an amendment.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I move then the following provision to the last section.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. It is not understood by that we have gone over the entire bill?

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. It is proposed as an additional section.

The Clerk read as follows:

That Congress shall have the right to alter, amend, and repeal this act.

Mr. SPRINGER. That is right.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I observe by the terms of this bill this trust company is authorized to deal in real estate or anything else.

Mr. BARBOUR. No.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Let us see whether the language is broad enough to authorize the construction I have put upon it.

Section 2 provides—

That the said National Safe-Deposit and Trust Company be, and they are hereby, authorized to accept and execute trusts of any and every description which may be committed or transferred, with their consent, to them by any person or persons whomsoever, bodies corporate or politic, or by any court in the District of Columbia or in any one of the United States, and to accept the office and appointment of executors or administrators of any kind or nature whenever such appointment is conferred or made by any person or persons, or by any orphans' court or other court, either of the District of Columbia or of the United States; and that in all cases where application shall be made to any court of the District of Columbia for the appointment of any receiver, trustee, administrator, executor, assignee, guardian of any minor, or committee of a lunatic, it shall and may be lawful for such court, if it shall think fit, to appoint the National and Safe-Deposit and Trust Company of Washington, in the District of Columbia, with their assent, such receiver, trustee, administrator, assignee, guardian, or committee; and the accounts of the said company as such receiver, trustee, administrator, assignee, guardian, or committee shall be regularly settled and adjusted before the proper tribunal; and upon such settlement and adjustment all proper, legal, and customary charges, costs, and expenses shall be allowed to said company for their care and management of the trusts and estate aforesaid; and the said company, as such receiver, trustee, administrator, assignee, guardian, or committee, shall be subject to all orders or decrees made by the proper tribunal under the laws of the United States.

Mr. BARBOUR. I do not see there is any power conferred there authorizing them to deal in real estate.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Let me ask the gentleman a question. Does the gentleman mean to say that in executing these trusts this corporation is not authorized to deal in real estate or anything under that language? What is to prevent a deposit of a million of dollars in trusts with this company to deal in real estate?

Mr. BARBOUR. It is not intended they shall have the power to buy and sell for the purpose of speculating in real estate.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. No; that ought not to be done.

Mr. BARBOUR. But simply for the purpose of executing their trusts and settling up estates.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. The language used in the bill seems to me to be broad enough to permit the company to handle and deal in real estate.

Mr. BARBOUR. I do not so understand it, but am willing to accept any amendment which will prohibit this company from speculating in real estate.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I have read simply the language which, in my judgment, permits the company to do that very thing.

Mr. BARBOUR. Where is it?

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. It will be found on page 2, section 2, of the bill.

Now, it seems to me that authorizes, with all due deference to my brother, the organization of a company or any association of persons in New York or elsewhere to utilize this corporation in the city of Washington for the purpose of engaging in real-estate speculations in the District of Columbia. If I am wrong I beg the lawyers present to correct me.

Mr. BARBOUR. If the gentleman from Ohio thinks it necessary to incorporate an amendment, suppose he offers one inserting, after the words "business of banking," the words "or of buying or selling real estate."

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. That would hardly meet the question, for they would have to sell real estate, for instance, in winding up an estate.

Mr. BARBOUR. But buying and selling for speculative purposes. You might insert "or dealing in real estate."

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I will prepare an amendment.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I know nothing in the world about this Safe-Deposit Company. I do not know anybody in it; indeed, I only knew that there was such an institution in the city, because I happened to see its sign somewhere.

Mr. BARBOUR. There are several of them.

Mr. FELTON. Three, I believe.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Hence, this question comes to me as an entirely unprejudiced man. I have heard nothing for it; I have heard nothing against it, except what has been said on this floor. The abstract proposition presented to-night is to take a corporation, of how many incorporators I do not know; there may be three or there may be fifty——

Mr. FELTON. That does not matter.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. It does matter with me. This is a proposition to take a corporation, of how many we do not know, a perfectly soulless, bowelless body, a figment of law—— [Laughter.]

Mr. CASWELL. That is the condition of all corporations.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Now, if my friends will allow me to proceed. Yes, it is true; that is the condition of all corporations, especially railroad corporations.

Mr. CASWELL. Do not go for the railroads now.

Mr. FELTON. I thought you said you were an unprejudiced man. [Laughter.]

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I am entirely so.

Here comes a corporation which to-day is engaged in the business of receiving and preserving such property as is ordinarily placed with a safe-deposit company, plate, jewels, bonds, &c., I suppose, and it is proposed to set this corporation up in the general business of acting as executor and guardian for any one who wishes to employ it in that capacity. That is one proposition here presented.

It is proposed too that they may accept any kind of trust which is confided to them, no matter what, from any sort of person, no matter whom, whether real person or one of those "cussednesses" of law called corporations [laughter], and coming to me as a perfectly unprejudiced man [renewed laughter] is this proposition: By a solemn act of Congress to create, or at least to take what has been already created, a mere corporation, which has no liability except for the face of its stock, provided it has ever been paid up—and there have been corporations in the United States where the stock never was paid up I suppose gentlemen will admit—and take that body and give to it powers which seem to me extraordinary, to say the least. If any one wishes to make a will and appoint this corporation its executor, I suppose it can accept that trust already under its present organization without any additional law.

Mr. HEARD. This does not interfere with that.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I supposed not, nor does it confer that power. And so, too. if anybody wishes to make a deposit of bonds or plate or coin they can do it without additional law.

Mr. HEARD. Yes, they could do that under their present organization.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. And if anybody wishes to put a hundred thousand or a million of dollars into their hands to invest in real estate they could accept that, and make the purchase or investments just as they are and without additional law to permit it. If these men wanted to go into the banking business I have no doubt they could do so under their charters, though that, of course, would depend on the act of incorporation. But whether they could or not, virtually they have at present the ordinary common-law powers, and in the exercise of the ordinary rights of individuals the power to act as guardians or executors or to accept trusts.

Now, it is proposed here to give what seems to me powers beyond all reason, and my opposition to it comes from this proposition: I think we are running wild in the matter of corporations. I am opposed to them where the work can be done without corporations. When you enter upon some great enterprise, when you go to build a line of railway you need the combination of individuals known as a corporation.

There are other great works where this figment is this proper party, and I am ready to accept them where there is necessity for it; but I can not for the life of me see the necessity for this corporation or of this bill. I see no necessity for setting them up, advertising them, backing them up with an act of Congress to act as general executors and custodians of trust funds and enable them to go into any sort of speculative business, accept trusts from all parts of the country which may be confided to them; and I am frank to say that there will be needed a quorum to pass this bill.

A MEMBER. That ends it.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I only want to say that I think the addition of the words the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BARBOUR] suggests at line 8 would obviate my objection:

That nothing herein contained shall authorize the said company to engage in the business of banking or real estate.

And I want to say to my friend from Kansas [Mr. ANDERSON] that in this matter I dissent from him, although we usually agree.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Except as to corporations.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. My friend generally gets right on those also. But if there is any crying need in the country it is that estates of every character shall be administered safely so far as those interested in the estate are concerned. And I think it is the experience of all the lawyers here that an estate suffers sometimes very much from bad management and very large fees; and it not unfrequently happens—in fact, it very frequently happens—that the widows and the orphan children are left comparatively penniless because of the great attrition in winding up an estate.

Now, this company or corporation—and I do not know what there is so offensive in the name of corporation—this corporation is authorized, upon giving ample security, to wind up such an estate if appointed by the court to do it; and there are cases when it is of the first importance to have some such provision. For instance, my friend before me [Mr. WARNER, of Ohio] may die in Ohio leaving an estate here——

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Not much probability of that.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Still he may, and in that case it might be desirable not to have his estate run the gantlet of charges on all sides by administrators and lawyers. And sometimes lawyers are not sufficiently careful to charge reasonable fees. They usually do, but in some cases they do not.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Yes, sir.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. Does this bill authorize this corporation to settle estates without employing lawyers or charging lawyers' fees?

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Not at all. But when this corporation has charge of the business, being appointed by the court, the winding up of an estate will cost less; in my judgment it will not exceed a third of what it would if the estate were administered in the old way.

And, besides, it it sometimes necessary to leave this city to find an administrator to wind up an estate. Certainly if my friend had an estate to be settled here he would much prefer that his children should have the business done certainly and promptly by getting the bulk of his estate rather than have it frittered away by putting it in the hands of others in whom he could have no confidence.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. I have no objection to organizing this corporation. I am not like my friend from Kansas [Mr. ANDERSON] in his opposition to corporations generally; but I do have an objection to putting the estates of this country into the hands of a corporation.

The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BUTTERWORTH] says an estate will be settled up more speedily in this way. Let us see whether it will or not. Is there anything in this act to compel the corporation to settle the estate sooner than an ordinary administrator would settle it? Upon the other hand, in this bill this corporation is authorized to pay interest upon deposits, and if you put $10,000 in the hands of that corporation, as long as they can prolong the settlement they have the use of the money without interest.

Mr. HEMPHILL. If the gentleman will allow me, I will state to him that that has been stricken out of the bill by an amendment.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. That duck is already dead.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. I am talking about the bill as I have it before me. Now, then, if this is a corporation that is to use money, what will they do with the money when they get it into their possession?

Mr. HEMPHILL. They have to invest it under the orders of the court. They have to do just as any administrator or executor would do.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. Let me refer to another point. Where you have an individual administrator, he is acting under the authority of the court, and he may be imprisoned for contempt of court. But here the very act that you seek to complain of may not be done by an officer of the corporation. The bill says the officers of the corporation shall be held responsible, and the act violating the order of the court may be done by a clerk who is not an officer of the corporation.

Mr. BARBOUR. Yes, he is.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. I think an ordinary clerk is not.

Mr. BARBOUR. The word "agent" may be put in, and that will obviate the gentleman's objection.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. He is not an officer of the corporation in the legal acceptation of the term. He is not a director; he is simply a clerk hired, and receives his per diem.

I can see no necessity for this. Suppose there comes an occasion when there is required to be a guardian of the person as well as a guardian of the estate of the individual; are you going to have two guardians, a guardian of the person and a guardian of the estate?

Mr. ROWELL. We do that frequently.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. Well, why the necessity of giving this authority to the court so that it may put all of the business into the hands of a few favored friends who are this corporation? That is all there is of it. You give the court the power to take all the business here and turn it over into the hands of a corporation that you create, and if the judge is disposed to be corrupt, he may become a party in interest with the corporation and turn over all the business to it. It is a dangerous policy, and while I am not particularly opposed to corporations, I am opposed to giving them such powers as these.

Mr. BARBOUR. I think the gentleman is mistaken as to the scope of the bill. It is intended to apply where a testator chooses to select this trust company as his executor, or where it is appointed to execute the trust of a will, or where an individual may appoint the company to act in a fiduciary capacity, because some people may prefer to take a corporation rather than an individual. And of course the court may appoint the company trustee.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. Let us see about that. This bill provides:

That the said National Safe-Deposit and Trust Company be, and they are hereby, authorized to accept and execute trusts of any and every description which may be committed or transferred, with their consent, to them, by any person or persons whomsoever, bodies corporate or politic, or by any court in the District of Columbia or in any one of the United States, and to accept the office and appointment of executors or administrators of any kind or nature whenever such appointment is conferred or made by any person or persons, or by any orphans' court or other court, either of the District of Columbia or of the United States.

This corporation may be appointed as trustee by an individual, but the individual would have a right to make such appointment without this act. If an individual wants to designate this corporation to take charge of his estate he can do so; but this bill gives the court the absolute power to appoint the corporation as guardian or trusteee.

Mr. BRADY. A corporation of this character is more safe, I think, than any individual.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. Well, I have no doubt you think so. A great many men think corporations are better than individuals, but I do not think so. I think this is granting too much power. I think it is going too far to say that we will create a corporation which by the appointment of the court may have control of all the estates the court chooses to hand over to it.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I would like to say a word in reply to my friend from Ohio [Mr. BUTTERWORTH] in regard to the difference between corporations and individuals as trustees of estates. If I believed that estates would be better cared for by a corporation than by individuals, so far as that particular feature in this bill is concerned, my objection to it would be removed; but look at the difference between the two.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. If my friend will indulge me for a moment, of course this bill does not devolve upon the court the duty of appointing this trust company the trustee of any estate. Estates are not to be administered by this corporation unless the court, where it has authority to choose a trustee or administrator, deems this the best choice to make.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Of course not.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. And I apprehend that the company would be called upon in such cases only when it was clear that the best interests of the estate required it.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. That is, when the court thought they required it.

Of course I do not assume that any bill would be brought in here to create a corporation that any court must appoint as trustee or executor. But take the case suggested by my friend [Mr. BUTTERWORTH] where the court chooses to appoint this corporation trustee of an estate. The stockholders are liable to the amount of their stock, and no more.

Mr. HEMPHILL and Mr. BUTTERWORTH. A hundred per cent. more.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. What is the capital stock of the company?

Mr. HEMPHILL. I think the amount is $200,000.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Then they are liable for $400,000 worth of property.

Mr. HEMPHILL. And the court may require them to give additional security.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I understand that from the bill. Now, say that this corporation is acting as guardian for several different estates, it is acting as trustee for a very broad and varied range of trusts—in other words, it is doing an enormous business, that it has the indorsement of this act of Congress, that the gentlemen acting as directors are well known, wealthy gentlemen of character, and that for years the corporation runs on prosperously; then say that the present directors and stockholders die, and that after awhile it gets into the hands of men who are not responsible——

Mr. HEMPHILL. Just say that the whole thing goes to the devil!

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Well, say that the same thing happens to it that has happened to several other corporations in this country, namely, that it becomes a "snide."

Mr. HEARD. Does not the same risk apply to individuals?

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. No; I will show you the difference; but first let me finish what I have to say on this point. These stockholders are to be liable to double the amount of their stock, and the corporation as a whole is liable to double the amount of its capital stock. The liability for any particular stockholder may be ten thousand, or twenty thousand, or perhaps fifty thousand dollars.

Now, take the same individual, who is probably worth half a million, an old citizen, a man of the highest sense of honor, who would no more betray a trust than he would cut off his right hand; a man who would sedulously use every effort to care in the best manner for any estate of which he might be trustee; a man who rather than have his honor tarnished would make good in full any loss which it might suffer in his hands—what have you as security in such a case as that? First, you have the bond that he gives. Then you have what is far better, his word, his character, his reputation. Does any one doubt that you have there a larger and better security than you would have in any corporation? What have you in the corporation? You have now simply the security of double the amount of the capital stock, and what have you twenty years hence, when it may have become a fraud? You have at best simply the security of double the amount of the stock and whatever real estate the corporation may happen to own. At present they do own certain property, certain real estate, but after a time they may have disposed of it.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Will my friend permit me——

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. One moment please. Now the difference between the two is that there you have a perfectly bowelless thing, with no more sense of honor and no more soul in it than a last year's bird's nest. [Laughter.]

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Well, but my friend——

Mr. ANDERSON. Wait a moment. I have the floor. Now there is precisely the difference between the two cases. I do not know any of the gentlemen who are stockholders in this corporation, but I have no doubt that among them there are men whose very names, whose very character, whose very standing in the community, whose individual wealth would constitute ample security for any trust which they might undertake in their individual capacity. But when you come to deal with this corporation you have not that security; you have nothing of the kind. That is the reason why I make a very broad distinction between an individual as a trustee or executor and a corporation, a thing which you can not punish, which you can not put in prison, with which you can do nothing except denounce it after it has swindled you.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. My friend, in putting his case, has overlooked the fact that this bill requires a visitation from the court each year to inquire into the condition of the corporation and its ability to respond to all its obligations; and just how these six individuals, each of them with "a soul," and with bowels of compassion, and all the fine qualities described by the gentleman from Kansas—just how they are to lose all these qualities when they come together in the company I can not understand.

The court authorizes and requires a visitation and inquiry. Not only that. The history of Philadelphia and other cities where trusts are administered in this manner proves that my friend is under a misapprehension—that where millions have been lost by administrations otherwise conducted not a nickel has been lost by administrations intrusted to the hands of these companies.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over, not to lose its place on the Calendar.

Mr. BARBOUR. Passed over till when?

Mr. HEARD. This is the last day of this Congress when it can be considered.

Several MEMBERS. Regular order!

Mr. HEMPHILL. I call for the previous question on agreeing to the amendments.

Mr. HEARD (to Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas). Are you going to call a quorum on us?

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Certainly.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I suggest that by unanimous consent the vote be taken on this bill in a full House to-morrow. Why not?

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. What is the question before the House?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. On ordering the previous question upon agreeing to the amendments.

The question being taken, there were—ayes 19, noes 8.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I make the point that no quorum has voted. Now, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over informally, not to lose its place on the Calendar. I do not wish to interfere with other measures which the committee may desire to get through this evening; but I have strong convictions about this bill.

Mr. PERKINS. Perhaps my colleague [Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas] will agree that the previous question be ordered on this bill——

Mr. MORRISON. Oh, no.

Mr. PERKINS. And that it be passed over, to be voted on in a full House.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. My friend knows quite well that when the previous question has been ordered the vote must be taken by the House.

Mr. PERKINS. But not this evening. I mean that the bill be laid aside to go over until we have a full House.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I prefer not to agree to that arrangement.

Mr. BARBOUR. Why can not the gentleman agree to accept the judgment of the House this evening? If he has anything worthy of consideration, why not submit the question to the arbitrament of the members present?

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Very few members are now present.

Mr. FELTON. What is the question before the House?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is waiting to hear whether gentlemen can arrange this matter; if not, the Chair will appoint tellers.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over for the present.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I suggest that it be passed over by unanimous consent.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Passed over informally, not to lose its present status.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request that the bill be passed over, not to lose its present status on the Calendar? The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered.

COMPILATION OF DISTRICT LAWS.

Mr. BARBOUR. I now call up the bill (H. R. 10758) to provide for the compilation of the laws relating to and in force in the District of Columbia, and for the appointment of a reporter for the supreme court of the said District. This bill is in the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union. I ask that the Committee of the Whole be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be now considered in the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If there be no objection, that order will be made.

Mr. GUENTHER. Can not the bill be read before that question is decided?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read the bill.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the supreme court of the District of Columbia be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to appoint three persons learned in the law, as commissioners to compile, arrange, and classify all statutes and parts of statutes in force in and relating to the said District at the time the said commissioners shall make their report; and the said court shall have power to fill any vacancies occurring in said commission.

SEC. 2. That each of the said commissioners shall receive for his services the sum of —— dollars, to be paid upon the completion of the work, which sums, together with the reasonable costs incurred by the commission for clerical assistance and incidental expenses, not exceeding the sum of $1,000, shall be paid by the Secretary of the Treasury out of any money not otherwise appropriated.

SEC. 3. That the said commissioners shall report such compilation to the next session of Congress.

SEC. 4. That the supreme court of the District of Columbia shall have authority, and is hereby directed, to appoint, during its pleasure, a reporter for the use of said court.

SEC. 5. That said reporter shall cause the opinions and decisions of said court to be printed and published once in each year, and oftener when required by the court, and deliver ten copies of the volumes of said reports to the clerk of said court, for the use of said court.

SEC. 6. That said reporter shall be entitled to receive from the Secretary of the Treasury a salary at the rate of $1,500 a year, to be paid by the Secretary of the Treasury from any moneys not otherwise appropriated, in monthly instalments; and an additional sum of —— dollars for each volume printed, published, and delivered by the said reporter for the use of the court, and the said reporter shall have the privilege of sale of the said published reports at a price to be fixed by the said court.

The amendments proposed by the Committee on the District of Columbia were read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to discharging the Committee of the Whole from the further consideration of this bill? The Chair hears none.

Mr. HEMPHILL. On behalf of the Committee on the District of Columbia I offer a substitute for the pending bill, which I ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill to secure to the District of Columbia a compilation of the laws in force therein on the 4th day of March, 1887, to provide for the appointment of a reporter for the supreme court of said District, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted, &c., That the supreme court of the District of Columbia be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to appoint three persons learned in the law as commissioners to compile, arrange and classify all statutes and parts of statutes in force in the said District on the 4th day of March, 1887, and relating to all such matters as would properly come within the scope of a civil code; and the said court shall have power to fill any vacancies occurring in said commission.

SEC. 2. That each of the said commissioners shall receive for his services the sum of $1,500, to be paid upon the completion of the work, which sums, together with the reasonable costs incurred by the commission for clerical assistance and incidental expenses, not exceeding the sum of $1,000, shall be paid by the Secretary of the Treasury out of any moneys not otherwise appropriated.

SEC. 3. That the said commissioners shall report such compilation to the next session of Congress.

SEC. 4. That the justices of the supreme court of the District of Columbia be, and are hereby, authorized and directed to examine certain manuscript volumes prepared by Josiah Quincy Kern, upon submission of the same to them at as early a date as practicable after the passage of this act; and if, after such examination, the justices of said court or a majority of them shall be of the opinion that the volumes so submitted and examined comprise a complete and satisfactory revision and consolidation of all statutes and parts of statutes relating to municipal affairs in the District of Columbia in force on the 4th day of March, 1887, and of all orders, rules, regulations, and ordinances relating to said affairs made in pursuance of law and having the force and effect of law at the said date, they shall so report to the commissioners of said District, who shall thereupon purchase the said volumes from the said Josiah Quincy Kern, at a compensation not to exceed $5,000.

SEC. 5. That the justices of the supreme court of the District of Columbia be, and are hereby, authorized and directed to examine or cause to be examined, a certain manuscript volume prepared by Josiah Quincy Kern, upon submission of the same to the chief-justice of said court at as early a date as practicable after the passage of this act; and if after such examination the justices of said court, or a majority of them, shall be of the opinion that the volume so submitted and examined comprises a complete and satisfactory revision and consolidation of the criminal laws in force in the District of Columbia on the 4th day of March, 1887, they shall so report to the commissioners of said District who shall thereupon purchase the said volume from the said Josiah Quincy Kern at a compensation not to exceed $1,000.

SEC. 6. That the commissioners of the District of Columbia shall report to Congress on the first day of its next regular session the action taken by them under the provisions of the fourth and fifth sections of this act, and may make such recommendations as to them shall seem advisable in relation to any further action respecting the manuscript volumes hereinbefore mentioned.

SEC. 7. That for the purposes of the fourth and fifth sections of this act there is hereby appropriated $6,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to enable the commissioners of the District of Columbia to make either or both of the payments provided for in said sections, one-half of any such payment to be made out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, and the other half out of the revenues of the District of Columbia.

SEC. 8. That the supreme court of the District of Columbia shall have authority, and is hereby directed, to appoint during its pleasure a reporter for said court.

SEC. 9. That said reporter shall cause the opinions and decisions of said court to be printed and published once in each year, and oftener when required by the court, and deliver ten copies of each volume of said reports to the clerk of said court for the use of said court.

SEC. 10. That the said reporter shall be entitled to receive from the Secretary of the Treasury a salary at the rate of $1,500 a year, to be paid by the Secretary of the Treasury from any moneys not otherwise appropriated, in monthly instalments; and the said reporter shall have the privilege of sale of the said published reports, at a price to be fixed by the said court.

Mr. DOCKERY. I desire to ask the gentleman in charge of this bill when the compilation of the laws of the District of Columbia was last made? This seems to provide a salary of $1,500 a year to make the compilation.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I do not remember when the last one was made. None of those made have ever given satisfaction.

I move to amend the third section by inserting the words "or cause to be examined," after the word "examine," so that the supreme court shall examine or cause to be examined this book.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Has this book been submitted to the authorities of the District?

Mr. HEMPHILL. They report they have examined with care the compilation of municipal laws made by Mr. Kern, and they think it has been accurately and carefully done, and that it is a creditable work.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. It is a complete revision.

Mr. HEMPHILL. It is a complete revision of the municipal laws of the District. Nothing is to be paid unless it is found to be a perfect compilation.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I understand heretofore there has not been any full and complete revision of the laws.

Mr. HEMPHILL. There has not been.

The amendment was agreed to; and the substitute as amended was agreed to. The bill as amended was then ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HEMPHILL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

GIRLS' REFORM SCHOOL.

Mr. GAY. I move that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 10824) to incorporate the reform school for girls of the District of Columbia.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That Samuel S. Shellabarger, Augustus S. Worthington, Adoniram J. Huntington, William C. Dodge, Mills Dean, Owen G. Staples, James E. Fitch, Thomas P. Morgan, and Alexander Graham Bell, and their successors, be, and they are hereby, created a body corporate to be known as the Board of Trustees of the Girls' Reform School of the District of Columbia.

SEC. 2. That said corporation is hereby authorized and empowered to establish and maintain a reform school for girls at any place within the District of Columbia, and for that purpose may take and receive, by gift, grant, or devise, such real estate and personal property as may be necessary for the purposes of said corporation: Provided, That at the dissolution of said corporation, or if it should cease for the space of six months to maintain a reform school for girls, all the property, real and personal, of said corporation shall vest in the District of Columbia.

SEC. 3. That the said board of trustees shall have the same power and authority in relation to girls as the board of trustees of the reform school of the District of Columbia now possess in relation to boys.

SEC. 4. That said board of trustees shall have authority to appoint such officers, agents, teachers, and other employés as may be necessary, and fix the rate of compensation of the same, subject to the approval of the commissioners of the District of Columbia.

SEC. 5. That the said board of trustees shall have authority to make such by-laws and rules and regulations as shall be necessary for the government of the officers, teachers ,employés, and inmates of the school, and from time to time alter, amend, and change the same.

SEC. 6. That all the sections of the act of May 3, 1876, entitled "An act revising and amending the various acts establishing and relating to the reform school of the District of Columbia," not inconsistent with the provisions of this act, are hereby made applicable to the reform school for girls of the District of Columbia, except the word "girls" shall be understood wherever the word "boys" occurs in said act, and the words "eighteen years" wherever the words "sixteen years" occur.

SEC. 7. That within thirty days after this act is passed said trustees shall meet and organize by electing a president; and they shall draw lots and decide the length of service of said trustees. Three of said trustees shall serve for one year, three for two years, and three for three years, and their successors in office shall be appointed in like manner as the trustees of the reform school of the District of Columbia are now appointed.

SEC. 8. That Congress shall have the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act at any time.

The amendment of the Committee of the District of Columbia was read, as follows:

After section 6, at the end of line 9, page 3, add as follows: "The attendants to be employed and the work and occupation to be enforced shall be suitable to girls."

Mr. GAY. Mr. Speaker, this bill is for the purpose of incorporating in the District of Columbia a reform school for girls upon exactly the same principles and under the same general management as applicable to females as the reform school which, for fifteen years, has been carried on for boys in the District. I would be glad to have a letter read if further information is required. [Cries of "No!" "Vote!"] I ask, then, the question be put.

The amendment was agreed to; and the bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. GAY moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

COMPENSATION OF PHYSICIANS TO THE POOR.

Mr. COMPTON. I move the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 10514) regulating the compensation of physicians to the poor in the District of Columbia.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill was read, as follows:

Whereas the present compensation of the physicians to the poor in the District of Columbia is entirely inadequate and insufficient for the services required and rendered: Therefore,

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the compensation of the physicians to the poor in the District of Columbia be, and the same is hereby, fixed at $600 per annum each, to date from January 1, 1887.

Mr. COMPTON. I move to strike out "$600 per annum" and insert "$50 per month so long as employed."

Mr. DOCKERY. I would like to have a brief explanation of this bill, as to the number of these physicians, and what they now receive.

Mr. COMPTON. I can not answer as to the number, but as to the present compensation, it is $40 per month, and they are required to go whenever called upon. They are the hardest worked gentlemen in the District, professionally, and receive only $40 a month.

This bill proposes to give them $50 a month, which is little enough, it strikes me.

Mr. DOCKERY. They are employed under authority of law now?

Mr. COMPTON. Yes, sir.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. How many of them?

Mr. COMPTON. There are eleven, as I understand.

The amendment of Mr. COMPTON was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. COMPTON moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

FIREMEN'S INSURANCE COMPANY, WASHINGTON.

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take up the bill (H. R. 11063) extending the charter of "The President and Directors of the Firemen's Insurance Company of Washington and Georgetown," in the District of Columbia; and yield to my colleague from Missouri, it being a bill in which he takes an interest.

Mr. HEARD. I ask unanimous consent to discharge the Committee of the Whole from the further consideration of the bill, and put it upon its passage in the House.

There was no objection.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the charter of "The President and Directors of the Firemen's Insurance Company of Washington and Georgetown," in the District of Columbia, granted by act of Congress approved March 3, 1837, and which by act of Congress approved February 7, 1857, was extended until the 1st day of June, 1888, be, and the same is hereby, extended and continued until the 1st day of June, 1908, with the same rights and powers and with like duties, obligations, and responsibilities as are now by law held and exercised by and imposed upon said corporation.

Mr. HEARD. This is simply a bill providing for the renewal of a charter of a fire-insurance company which has been engaged in business in this city for about fifty years. The charter was originally granted in 1837, and was extended by an act approved in 1857. It will expire by limitation in 1888 unless it be renewed.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HEARD moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PROTECTION OF MINORS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 11116) for the protection of minors in the District of Columbia.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the traffic with minors in alcoholic liquor, billiard-playing, pool-playing, pool-selling, and gambling, in the District of Columbia, shall be and is prohibited, as follows: It shall be unlawful for any person or persons, whether as principals, agents, servants, or employés, to sell to any minor any wine or beer or any other alcoholic liquor, whether for the minor's own use or not, and whether the minor be the messenger or agent of another person or not. It shall be unlawful for any person or persons, whether as principals, agents, servants, or employés, to sell any wine or beer or any other alcoholic liquor to any other person for the use then and there of any minor. It shall be unlawful for any person or persons, whether as principals, agents, servants, employés, or visitors, to give any wine or beer or any alcoholic liquor to any minor, in any public drinking-place. The penalty for a violation of this section in any of its provisions shall be, for the first offense, a fine of not less than $25 nor more than $50, or imprisonment for not less than ten nor more than sixty days, or both, and for every subsequent offense a fine of not less than $50 nor more than $100, or imprisonment for not less than thirty nor more than ninety days in the work-house, or both, and the revocation by the court of the liquor license pertaining to the premises where the offense was committed, which liquor license every court having jurisdiction of the offense is hereby authorized to revoke and annul in such cases.

SEC. 2. That it shall be unlawful for any person or persons, whether as principals, agents, servants, or employés, to sell, give, or pay to any minor any pool or pool-ticket, whether directly or indirectly, and whether for the minor's use or benefit or not, and whether the minor be the messenger or agent of another person or not. It shall be unlawful for the proprietor or manager of, or any one who is permanently or temporarily in charge of, or has any authority whatever over or attends any public billiard-table or public pool-table, or its appurtenances, to permit any minor to use or handle any of them. It shall be unlawful for the proprietor or manager of, or any one who is permanently or temporarily in charge of, or has any authority over, or is an employé or servant in any room or hall where pools are sold or paid, or where the game of pool is played, or where there is betting or gambling, either usually or for the time being, to knowingly permit any minor to be in such room or hall. The penalty for a violation of this section in any of its provisions shall be, for the first offense, a fine of not less than $25 nor more than $50, or imprisonment for not less than ten nor more than sixty days, or both, and for every subsequent offense a fine of not less than $50 nor more than $100, or imprisonment for not less than thirty nor more than ninety days in the workhouse, or both, and the revocation by the court of the license of every pool-table on the premises where the offense may be committed, which license every court having jurisdiction of the offense is hereby authorized to revoke and annul in such cases.

It shall be unlawful for any minor, whether as principal, agent, servant, or employé, to buy or to collect any pool or pool-ticket anywhere, or to play the game of pool in any public room or hall, or to make any bet, lay any wager, or gamble in any room or hall where betting or gambling is usual or common, or to be in any pool-room where pools are sold or paid or where the game of pool is played, or any gambling-place. The penalty for a violation of any provision of this section shall be a fine of not less than $1 nor more than $25, or imprisonment for not less than one nor more than sixty days, or both.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I ask unanimous consent that the committee be discharged from the further consideration of this bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state that this bill is on the House Calendar, and will be considered in the House.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Unless some gentleman desires information upon this subject, I shall ask immediate action upon the bill.

Mr. MILLS. It strikes me as being a very severe measure and should be considered with a great deal of care.

Mr. GUENTHER. It ought to be considered by sections in committee.

Mr. BARBOUR. If there is opposition to the bill I will move that it be passed over informally.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. Oh! there will be no trouble about passing this bill.

Mr. BRADY. Yes; there will be.

Mr. MILLS. The age should be fixed at least, say at eighteen years.

Mr. GUENTHER. I do not object to any measure for the protection of the morals of minors; but this I think is an illy-matured bill.

Mr. COMPTON. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. HEMPHILL. If the gentleman from Maryland wants the floor I will yield to him.

Mr. COMPTON. I want to move to strike out the enacting clause.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I can not agree to yield for that purpose.

Now, if the penalties provided in this bill are thought to be too severe, they can be amended, and if desired we can limit the age to eighteen, or whatever the House may see proper. But there are some statistics which have been furnished and published, and which may have reached the eye of some of the members present, and if they be correct they present a very extraordinary condition of affairs. I can not vouch for their accuracy, though I understand they are prepared by responsible persons. For instance, it is seen from these statistics that the number of drinking saloons has increased 40 per cent. within five years. The number of pool tables has increased 40 per cent. within the same length of time, while the population has increased 15 per cent., and whereas in the majority of the States the number of minors arrested for criminal offenses ranges from five to twelve out of the thousand population, in this District it reaches twenty-six out of the thousand. If, therefore, these statistics are correct, there can be no reasonable doubt that there should be some law adequate for the protection of the moral of minors in the District. There is no law now.

Mr. GUENTHER. Oh, yes; there is a law. There is a law prohibiting the sale of liquors to minors, and the judge sentences people under it frequently. It is a law passed under the old corporation of Washington, which is still in force.

Mr. HEMPHILL. There may be some restriction upon the sale of liquors to minors, but the protection of the morals of minors is without law, and it is only a question of giving the people of the District something like a just and proper law upon this subject. I do not want anything extreme, or to enact any very harsh measure, but I think there should be some restriction.

Mr. DOCKERY. What age do you fix in the bill?

Mr. HEMPHILL. This relates to minors; all persons under legal age.

Mr. DOCKERY. What is the penalty fixed for a violation of the law as far as selling liquor to minors is prohibited?

Mr. ROWELL. It provides a fine and imprisonment.

Mr. HEMPHILL. The penalty for a violation is, for the first offense, a fine of no less than $25 nor more than $50, or imprisonment for not less than ten nor more than sixty days, or both; and this is increased for subsequent offenses.

Mr. MILLS. I would suggest to the gentleman from South Carolina that as to the offense of selling alcohol liquors to minors there should be some amendment fixing the age. I do not care to make any change as far as gambling with or in the presence of minors is concerned.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. This is not gambling; it is playing pool.

Mr. MILLS. Well, as far as the sale of alcoholic liquors is concerned, I would put the age at eighteen.

This has reference to any selling to them whether by retail or wholesale. Suppose a young man goes to a grocery and buys a bottle of claret for his dinner; the man who sells it is subject to a fine or imprisonment or both.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. Is it in order to offer an amendment to the bill?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. HEMPHILL] yield the floor for the purpose of an amendment being offered?

Mr. HEMPHILL. Yes, sir.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. Then I move to amend the bill by striking out in the third line of section 3 the words "except from a parent or guardian."

The section as it now stands reads as follows:

That it shall be unlawful for any minor, whether as principal, agent, servant, or employé, to buy, or receive as a gift, except from a parent or guardian, any wine or beer or any alcoholic liquor in any public drinking-place, or at any public pleasure resort or public entertainment, at which wine or beer or any other alcoholic liquor is usually served or sold, is being served or sold.

Now, sir, I move to strike out the words "except from a parent or guardian," because I do not believe that a parent or guardian has any more right to make a drunkard of his child or his ward than anybody else has.

Mr. GUENTHER. It is not necessarily making a drunkard of a boy for his father to give him a glass of beer.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. But he must not take him to a saloon to give it to him.

Mr. BRADY. This is very important legislation, and I give notice that I shall require a quorum before this bill can pass.

Mr. BARBOUR. Since a quorum is to be insisted upon I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without losing its place on the Calendar.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BARBOUR. I now ask that the House proceed to the consideration of the bills that were reported from the Committee of the Whole at the prior session of this House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Virginia asks that the unfinished business be now proceeded with. The Clerk will report the first bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 1129) to exempt from taxation all property held by the trustees of the Louise Home, and for other purposes.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. I give notice that you can not pass that bill without a quorum.

Mr. BARBOUR. Let the title of the next bill be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 938) for the relief of Chittenden Brothers.

Mr. EDEN. I think that can not be passed to-night without a quorum.

RELIEF OF ST. DOMINIC'S CHURCH.

Mr. BARBOUR. Let the title of the next bill be reported.

The title of the next bill reported from the Committee of the Whole was read, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 10799) far the relief of St. Dominic's church, in the District of Columbia.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BARBOUR moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

QUIETING TITLE TO LAND.

The title of the next bill reported from the Committee of the Whole was read, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 10991) to quiet title to certain land in the city of Washington, District of Columbia.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

Mr. BARBOUR moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BARBOUR. As gentlemen have interposed objections to the passage of the two bills relating to the Louise Home and to Chittenden Brothers, I ask that the previous question be ordered upon them, and that they go over for consideration in a full House.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Of what bills does the gentleman speak?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will again report the title of the first bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 1129) to exempt from taxation all property held by trustees of the Louise Home, and for other purposes.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. What is the motion?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the third reading of the bill.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I ask unanimous consent that this bill be laid aside; otherwise I shall raise the question of a quorum.

The question being taken on the third reading of the bill,

The SPEAKER pro tempore stated that the "ayes" seemed to have it.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I call for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 26, noes 7.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas, and Mr. LEHLBACH. No quorum.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. A quorum not having voted, the Chair will appoint tellers.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. There is scarcely any use in appointing tellers, as there is manifestly no quorum here.

Mr. BARBOUR. I ask unanimous consent that those two bills lie over.

Mr. DOCKERY. Till when?

Mr. BARBOUR. For future consideration.

There was no objection.

INCREASE OF DISTRICT POLICE FORCE.

Mr. ROWELL. I call up for consideration the bill (H. R. 10562) to amend an act entitled "An act to increase the police force of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes," approved January 31, 1883; and I ask unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union be discharged from the further consideration of this bill, and that it be considered in the House.

There was no objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the act entitled "An act to increase the police force of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes," approved January 31, 1883, is hereby amended so as to authorize the commissioners of said District to increase said force to thirty sergeants and three hnndred privates, as they may deem necessary, provided that twenty-five of the increase in the number of privates hereby authorized shall be appointed to first class and twenty-five to second class; and a sum sufficient for the compensation, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, of the increase of the force herein authorized, at the rates now paid to like grades on said force, and their equipment, is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and out of the revenues of the District of Columbia, in equal parts.

Mr. DOCKERY. I should like to hear some explanation of this increase.

Mr. ROWELL. The explanation is that there has been no increase for several years of the police force of the District. The city has largely increased in population and there is not police force enough to cover the city.

Mr. DOCKERY. What increase is made?

Mr. ROWELL. The bill itself states what the increase is. There is an increase of fifty privates and a corresponding increase in the number of sergeants.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. ROWELL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

STEAM ENGINEERING IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. HEMPHILL, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, reported back the bill (H. R. 4308) to regulate steam engineering in the District of Columbia, and moved that the amendments of the Senate be concurred in.

The amendments were read, as follows:

Page 1, line 6, strike out "machinists" and insert "engineers."
Page 1, lines 9 and 10, strike out "steam-boiler" and insert "steam-boilers."
Page 1, line 17, strike out "five" and insert "three."
Page 2, at the end of line 8, insert:
"Provided, That boilers used for steam-heating, where the water returns to the boiler without the use of a pump, injector, or inspirator, and which are worked automatically, shall be exempt from the provisions of this section."
Page 2, strike out section 7.
Page 2, after section 7, insert:
"SEC. 7. That the foregoing section shall not apply to engineers who have been licensed by the United States Government, or the laws of any State."

The amendments were concurred in.

Mr. HEMPHILL moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendments were concurred in; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BARBOUR. I believe that the committee will not trouble the House with any more business to-night.

Mr. LITTLE. I ask unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 1926) for the payment of the funeral expenses of Lieut. John G. Kyle, and that the same be put upon its passage.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Speaker, I do not think that the House has ever disregarded the order made for these evening sessions confining them exclusively to the business designated and I trust it will not be done now.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LITTLE] asks unanimous consent.

Mr. MILLS. I must insist that the faith of the House shall be kept unbroken. It was understood that this evening session was to be solely for District business.

Mr. RANDALL. And the Speaker so stated.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is advised that this is a general session without any limitation.

Several MEMBERS. No, No.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will cause the Journal to be examined.

Mr. RANDALL. I will insist upon a quorum. That will settle it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LITTLE]?

Mr. DOCKERY. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection is made.

Mr. MILLS. I move that the House adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and the House accordingly (at 10 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m.) adjourned.

The report in this case was made in the House of Representatives on the 15th of April, 1886, and a general act for the removal of charges of desertion was enacted on the 17th of May, 1886. This case comes clearly under the provisions of the general law, and the committee ask to be discharged from the further consideration of the bill, and that the claimant be remitted to the Secretary of War for the correction of his record.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri moves that the bill be postponed indefinitely, which is the usual order in such cases. That order will be made if there be no objection.
